Dear Colleen,
We are pleased to know that Mennonite Church USA has received a grant to digitize the print files of Gospel Herald and The Mennonite.

You have our full permission to digitize all issues of The Mennonite and make them available for free, with full-text access.

Best wishes in this important endeavor.

Christian Education in the Home

By J. Marc Jantzen

A study of the life of Jesus as recorded in the New Testament indicates that Joseph and Mary, in their rearing practices, tried to follow the Mosaic precepts as given in Dueteronomy 6:6-7, "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children and thou shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." Through such educational agencies as the home and the Jewish synagogue, Jesus increased in wisdom (intellectually), in stature (physically), and in favor with God (spiritually) and with men (socially).

The three social institutions that have for centuries been in primary regulating agencies in the complicated process of growth and development from infancy into adulthood in all of its aspects have been the home, the church, and the school. During the last twenty-five years many responsibilities formerly assumed by the home have been shifted to the teachers in our schools. Whereas, the father formerly taught the boy such trades as blacksmithing, shoe making, and cabinet making; while mother instructed the girl in sewing, baking, and child care, we now expect the schools to give such training. Church and home gave the boy and girl a thorough foundation in the Christian religion, resulting in high moral standards. During the 1920's the educational leaders were doing everything possible to teach "character" to our boys and girls, while during the 1930's they tried to develop the "personalities" of our young people, yet the number of cases of juvenile delinquency has shown an increase instead of a decrease.

From the foregoing discussion it might be concluded that the schools have failed in their task. With respect to educating individuals to a sense of greater responsibility toward themselves, their fellowmen, and to God they have failed, but it was not the school's sole task in the first place. Rather it is the home that has failed by shifting the major responsibility of developing proper moral controls onto the schools. The latter is a valuable adjunct in this task, but the parents must assume their full share of the rearing task through a program of sympathetic guidance and an understanding of child behavior.

In the discussion that follows, the writer presents several suggestions that may serve parents as guiding principles in dealing with their children. These suggestions may be criticized as being too general and not meeting specific problems. It should be kept in mind that Jesus gave us underlying principles that have been operative for nearly 2000 years; he did not present a list of commands of what a Christian might do or not do. He has left it to each generation to make the interpretations and applications within the framework of those principles.

1. As the child learns to be a responsible participant in family affairs, the parental controls should become progressively less and less necessary. The son or daughter should be given due consideration in deciding family matters. The nature of the situation in which an individual finds himself at birth demands complete domination from parents, or very nearly so, in supplying the necessary care in the form of food, shelter, clothing, and affection. As the child grows and develops into an individual in his own right, this domination must become progressively less. During the period of adolescence, roughly from twelve to eighteen years, the boy or girls changes from a pattern of dependency upon parents to interdependency upon those of his own group. Out of this emerges the adult pattern of group responsibility, a feeling that "I am my brother's keeper," that what I do does concern the welfare of my fellowman, and his activities help shape my form of behavior. That type of parental domination or control is desirable which makes itself progressively less and less necessary as the child matures toward adulthood.

2. The learning process is always an active process in which the learner must do something on his part in

An Interesting Community

I had the privilege of visiting in the Freeman South Dakota, community from December 10 to 15. Riding with some Freemanites in the small motor stage that runs from Sioux Falls to Freeman, it soon became apparent that I was coming to a friendly rural community where people were unreserved and enjoyed sharing community news.

Soon after my arrival in Freeman I was swinging along in the "College Plymouth" to a meeting of the Silver Lake Mennonite Brethren Church. There and in the following days it soon became evident that there was a healthy cooperation among different branches of Mennonites—Mennonite Brethren, Krimmer Mennonite Brethren, Hutterite, and General Conference churches all having a share in Freeman Junior College. After the sermon President J. D. Unruh led a business meeting relative to the establishing of an old people's home. A survey that had been taken in the various churches showed a goodly number of people in favor of such an institution. Further investigations are to be made by the committee in charge. The fact that there were a number of Freeman Junior College teachers on this committee is suggestive of the point that our schoolmen can and ought to be instrumental in the planning and building of our Mennonite communities.

On Saturday a cold south wind swept across the fields and against the college buildings which stand on the south edge of Freeman. Looking out of the windows of Memorial Hall one could see miles of farm land.

Freeman Junior College is a school that serves a rural community and that is dependent upon it. When crops fail—as they largely did for eight years or so in the thirties—then farmer and faculty incomes both fall. Possession of otherwise productive land encourages a farmer to "stick out" such years. However, a faculty member does not have any such tangible possessions to encourage him to endure dry, hard years.

Truly those men and women who stayed with Freeman Junior College during very lean years in order that the school might remain open deserve Christian honor. Would they have done it if they had not had their minds and hearts set upon the heavenly treasurers that come from teaching in a Christian school? Like Paul they have sacrificed to serve. Like Paul they are worthy of material remuneration for the spiritual service rendered. If this point is remembered by the community in these years of greater ability to give, then it will safeguard for itself continued spiritual blessings for the future.

Freeman Junior College, which offers a full academy course, is suggestive of what Mennonite-run high schools or academies could accomplish in some of our other communities. In our church schools we have the right to emphasize an uplook to God throughout the whole day. In our public schools this cannot be done. The consecrated Christian parent will send his son or daughter to a church school when confronted with the choice of spending a half a hundred dollars either for some new home furnishing or for the tuition charges involved. We have a number of Mennonite academies. More of our young people should attend them.

Sunday morning I found myself in the large meetinghouse of the (South) Salem Church of which Brother Willard Claassen is pastor. In the hallway was a "thermometer" which indicated that this church had already contributed several hundred dollars above its 1943 C.P.S. quota by December 12. During the Sunday school period I had the pleasure of observing a class that used the Mennonite Junior Quarterly. From the pointed summaries of the stories and from the interest shown in the activity exercises, one could sense that the quarterly was well-liked. After Sunday school the church decided to consider the 100 Percent Subscription Plan to our church papers on the following Sunday. Shaking hands after church helped to fix the name "Preheim"rather indelibly in my mind.

For dinner I went to a farmstead that had some unusual points about it. Noticing the beautiful stonework on the place and the beautiful mural paintings on hayloft door and machineshed door, one easily came to the conclusion that the person who developed this farmstead was highly gifted and strongly convinced that a farmstead should be a place of beauty as well as a place of utility. A visit with the pastor of the South Church and his family that late afternoon revealed the substantial two-story parsonage that this church has provided. The pastor also admitted the editor into the room where he has a neat printing press on which he turns out some good jobs.

That evening it was my privilege to become acquainted with the Huttertal Church near Freeman. The smell that assailed us when we first approached the porch of the meeting house suggested that the boys of the community should be even more extensive in their trapping. However, inside it was cozy, and there we learned to know Rev. Hofer, the active pastor of the church, who does a good job of teaching school besides his church work.

Monday evening and an enjoyable visit in the Alfred Waltner home before services at the Bethesda Church. In this church there is more of a low-German touch than in the "South" and "North" churches which are made of Swiss people.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

GIFTS UNTO THE LORD

t was the fall of the year. In the rice fields only bble was left. It had been a happy harvest time, there had been much rice. In the gardens there e radishes, large squash, beans, and lentils and , ripe pumpkins had been stored away in safe ners of the house. Now the farmers were harvest- peanuts and sweet potatoes.

t the church services a few Sundays before, the ngelist had reminded all the Christians to get dy for the harvest festival. They all had much to thankful for and no one should come to the gather- empty-handed. Revindra sat very straight. In house there was much rice and enough of every- ng. It would be easy for him to bring a gift. buel thought happily of the little chicken that was be his offering. The evangelist had also said t there would be special guests. How nice that ld be!

Harvest festival day drew near. This year it s to be an evening service because then the Sahib l the Memsahiba could be there. The moon was ost full. It would be pleasant to be out. Prepar- ons were being made and offerings laid aside. Only he home of Sita and little Philip there was so little choose from. Father had been sick during the year that he could not stay with his weaving steadily. d there were so many mouths to feed that nothing r went far enough. What would there be for each bring?

ust the day before the meeting, one of the big age farmers was harvesting his peanut crop. And is an unwritten rule in India that as soon as a mer finishes harvesting a field then the children l the poor may come in to glean. Ten-year-old a was there with her wee basket. She had a plan. would glean peanuts and bring them as her of- ng. Carefully she searched the ground and vied h others in the scramble for what had been left.

nd what would Philip have to bring? He also nd a place to glean—a sweet potato field—wee atoes scarcely bigger than walnuts and probably le as large as good American eggs. Indian chil- n love the sweet potato eaten just as it comes n the ground or boiled in water. But Sita's pea- s and Philip's sweet potatoes were carefully set le for that evening.

leeting time arrived. One by one the families ne forward with their offerings—fathers, mothers, brothers, and sisters and sometimes even the wee ies had pice pressed into their wee hands. From evangelist's family came a big basket of rice. God had blessed their fields. A weaver brought some cloth. There were eggs, chickens, vegetables, and various sized baskets of rice. On the table the money gifts were placed. Sita and Philip also came with their offering.

After the prayer of dedication there was a short sermon. Then the things brought were auctioned off to the highest bidder. There were some who bought back the gift they had given at more than the market price. When some of the young boys picked up enough courage to bid on things there were smiles from the grownups. Everyone seemed to be enjoying themselves.

When the dish with the peanuts was held up the Memsahiba thought, "I must buy those for the Sahib because he likes peanuts so well." They finally sold for five pice, about three cents. Then the little dish with the sweet potatoes was put up and the Sahib bought them for the Memsahiba to cook. He paid three pice.

Meeting over and good nights said and the Sahib and the evangelist were checking up the account of the sale. The Memsahib looked over her purchases. "Strange that anyone would have brought such wee, runty peanuts or such poor sweet potatoes. Generally people bring the best for an offering," thought the Memsahiba to herself.

Turning to the evangelists she said, "Who brought these peanuts and sweet potatoes?" The evangelist answered softly, "Those are the gifts of Sita and Philip." When the Memsahiba heard how Sita and Philip had gotten those things, her eyes filled with tears. Truly these were love gifts. How their mouths must have watered to eat up their gleanings. But they had denied themselves that they might have something to give. Perhaps their gift was more in the Lord's sight than the larger gifts that others had given out of their abundance. Would they not rank with that of the widow who gave her all? She looked at those wee peanuts and small sweet potatoes in a new way. And her prayer was, "God bless those dear children."

Letter from Albert Jantzens

On December 29, 1943, Rev. and Mrs. John Lichti, Deer Creek, Oklahoma, wrote to the editor: "We rejoice in receiving our first letter from our children, the Jantzens in the Philippines, on December 27. We enclose a copy of her letter; will you please bring it in The Mennonite. Dear readers, continue to pray for all our interned missionaries. May God continue to protect them in the future as in the past."

Dear ones all,

We are glad for this opportunity to write to you. We were certainly glad to hear from you, Grandma and Edward. Your letters both arrived on Albert's birthday. When you wrote them, you had just broken your arm, Grandpa. We hope that all of you are well now.

We are all four well and happy. The children have grown a lot. Lyman is no longer a baby, but a big, three-year-old boy and weighs 37 pounds, Grace Joan 51 pounds, Albert 154, and I 140. The children have just finished another year of school. Grace Joan has been promoted to the fourth grade, and Lyman is ready for Kindergarten. We have school for the youngsters from Kindergarten through high school. There are many capable teachers here.

Our community consists of about 500 inmates, practically all of the professional class; missionaries, teachers, doctors and nurses, miners and business men. We are a congenial group and are faring quite well in spite of occasional sickness. God is most graciously near us from day to day and month to month, and is blessing us. Grace and Lyman have had light cases of dysentery several times, but are well now. Any physical disorder that arises receives immediate attention in our own little hospital.

In general we run things here on a communal basis, "having all things in common;" common kitchen, common dining room, etc. The work is allotted equally among all able-bodied individuals so that all necessary work is taken care of if every man spends about three and one-half hours a day for the camp and every woman about two and one-half hours. The work is all done gratis. At present Albert is chopping wood and cutting hair. He used to wash dishes and he also worked in the garden. We are permitted to change work from time to time to avoid monotony. I supervise the small children on the playground and also clean floors. I used to help with the rice cleaning, but I find my present work more satisfactory because I can watch Lyman better. We do our family washing together. These jobs with the mending and a little supplementary cooking and baking keep one busy. Albert spends as much time as possible in reading and studying. We have regular Sunday school, church services, and Bible classes.

The Dirks and Wuthrichs are here too and all well. Please, notify their parents. When possible, please, send clothing and powdered milk. We think it would be best if you send a few clothes for me and the children and have Albert's folks send clothes for him. Lyman is large and takes about a four year size (not larger), and Grace only about a seven-year size. I think that the dresses you sent before would fit her now. Do not rush things, though.

With much love to all of you, and greetings to all friends, ever committing you into God's care,

Albert, Wilma, Grace Joan and Lym

Mr. Fred Wuthrich
Whitewater, Kansas, U.S.A.

My dear folks:

Through the courtesy of the Imperial Japan Army Administration we have been granted t privilege of writing to you. We are very thank for the opportunity. I hardly know what to wr since it has been so long since we have last writt We are both very well for which we praise G The Lord has been very good to us and helped us many ways.

We have been interned here since December 1941. There are a few over 500 in this camp.

We are so glad that it is cool most of the ti but yet not cold. The rainy season will be over about another month. We have electric lights, runn water, and plenty of food. It consists mainly rice, vegetables, fruit and meat. We do our cooking and other work, including cutting wo taking away garbage, etc. The ladies work on ve- tables, pick rice, do laundry and other things .

The Dirks and Janzens are here also with us are well. Please notify their parents. The Di and Janzens have both received letters from relat in the States some time ago, but we are still wai for our first letter from you. Time goes fast here, it does seem like a long time since we have he from you. We think of you often and wonder you are and are praying for you daily. Think pecially of Roland and John and others.

There are over 100 missionaries in this ca Almost every denomination is represented. We tainly hope you had good crops last harvest. It m be very warm there now.

We are longing and praying for the day when can continue our missionary work Hoping to from you soon. Until then, God bless you is prayer.

Love,

Mennonites in Latin America

By S. C. YODER

ARGENTINA

Mennonitism in Latin America is of very recent igin. The first beginning of it came as a result missionary effort organized and carried on by the d Mennonites. The work started in 1917 when ev. and Mrs. T. K. Hershey and Rev. and Mrs. W. Shank arrived in Buenos Aires. The next year station was opened at Pehuajo, 216 miles south-est of the capital city, and the first converts were ought into the church. Since then the number of embers has increased to more than six hundred, id several strong and active congregations have been tablished. This attempt to implant the Mennonite ith into a Latin culture was an experiment, but it s yielded gratifying results and has confirmed the aims of the gospel as a religion for all men. Those ho have accepted the faith have caught the spirit at marks the Mennonites the world around.

MEXICO

Previous to the large migrations that began after ter the World War, there were several abortive tempts on the part of real estate companies to lonize Mennonites in Mexico and the Central Amer-in states, but none of them proved successful. It is not until 1922 when the migrations from Canada Mexico began, that permanent and successful col-ies were planted on Latin American soil. These vements continued until more in 9,000 souls had found homes fifty-three villages, in the state Chihuahua near Cuauhtemoc, ere in an oval-shaped valley rounded by low mountains a urishing colony was established. second setlement was opened a-it the same time at Patos, in state of Durango, where some oo are now located. Later re was an attempt to bring ne of the Russian Mennonite fugees into Mexico, but this ture proved unsuccessful, and larger number of those who ne finally made their way to ir friends in the United States l Canada, or were absorbed in-the life of the colonies in Mex-

PARAGUAY

The Menno Colony

The same wave of discontent that landed some of the Canadian Mennonites in Mexico brought the first ones to Paraguay. Being dissatisfied with conditions in Canada as a result of developments that grew out of the war in 1914-1918, these people like their co-religionists who had gone to Mexico, sought a home in other lands and finally located in the Gran Chaco of Paraguay. They reached their lands early in 1927. At this date (1943) this settlement, known as the Menno Colony, consists of more than twenty villages located in a primitive wilderness completely cut off from the outside world, and contains over two thousand souls.

The Fernheim Colony

Late in the 1920's Canada declined to admit any more alein refugees who had no money or means of establishing themselves. This cut off the large stream of Mennonites that had been flowing into the country from the Ukraine, Siberia, and parts of Russia. Consequently, when in 1929 some three thousand succeeded in getting across the border into Germany, it became necessary to find some other place for them to locate. The attempt to colonize these refugee groups in Mexico had not proved successful. Germany could not absorb any more into her life at that time. The way to other countries seemed closed, so the eyes of those wanderers turned to South America which seemed to offer the only hope for them at that time.

ON THE WAY FROM HARBIN, CHINA, TO PARAGUAY

Shown here aboard a French liner are some adults and a large group of children from Russian Mennonite families. Several hundred Mennonites fled from Siberia to Harbin, China. Through the influence of the Mennonite Central Committee they were led to lcoate in Paraguay. The picture above shows some of them on their trip from Harbin to Paraguay.

The Mennonite Central Committee offered to assist in every possible way, those who would go to Paraguay and to help them find homes on a tract adjoining the Menno Colony. Between 1,600 and 1,700 availed themselves of this opportunity and by the end of 1930 they were located on their new lands, some 350 miles north of Asuncion and about 150 miles in the Chaco.

With characteristic zeal they set themselves to the task of home building, the digging of wells, clearing of land and planting of crops. It was a new world to them. The climate, the products, and the environment was different from anything they were accustomed to. Life was hard. Disease broke out among them, and in the absence of medical care, death took a heavy toll of their numbers. Internal difficulties rose over colony management which together with dissatisfaction with the location and climate finally led to divisions and the establishment of several new settlements, one of which is located some distance east of Conception and is known as the Horquette Colony. The other and larger defection took place in 1937 when about 150 families left Fernheim and founded Friesland about thirty miles inland from Rosario on the Paraguay River.

In 1932 the Fernheim Colony was joined by several hundred Mennonites, who had made their way from Siberia to Harbin, China, and who through the influence of the Mennonite Central Committee had been led to locate in the Paraguayan settlement. Between 1930 and 1933 about fifty Mennonites from Poland, who had become dissatisfied with conditions in their native land, joined the group in Fernheim where they established a new village call Rosenfeld. They, however, did not prosper and in the course of time were absorbed into the other villages.

THE BRAZILIAN COLONIES

But Paraguay and Mexico were not the only countries of Latin American to receive Mennonite settlers. Largely through the influence of the Holland groups and through the efforts of The Hanseatic Colonization Company of Hamburg, about 1,300 of those who came across the frontier into Germany in 1930 went to Brazil. The land which they occupy lies along the Krauel River in the State of Santa Catharina about 1,500 miles inland from the sea coast. The district is known as "Hammonia." The colonies that lie in the river valley were named Witmarsam, Waldeim, and Gnadental.

Because of the topography of the country it was soon discovered that the available lands in the Krauel Valley were insufficient to furnish homes for all of the settlers. This led to the opening of a new settlement located on what is known as the Stoltz Plateau about a thousand feet above the river valley. This colony was named "Auhagen."

In 1934 the settlements of Hammonia, including all those along the Krauel River, and the one on Stoltz Plateau were augmented by arrivals in cons erable numbers of refugees who had escaped across Amur River into China and had congregated at H bin.

But life was hard and the patience and endura of the settlers was taxed to the utmost. As in Pa guay dissatisfaction rose over local management a with the location of the settlements. This resulted a withdrawal of about sixty-five families from mother colonies and the establishment of a new one Curtyba in the state of Parana, where they took dairying. They were more successful in this vent and in the course of time they virtually took over milk business of the city.

Until well into the first quarter of the present c tury Mennonitism has had little contact with Spanish American culture. What the future h for these new implantations only time can tell. ing the past years there has been much unrest dissatisfaction among the colonists, but no do they are more attached to their surroundings t they realize. Much progress has already been m and in addition to the building of homes and cultivation of the soil a number of progressive dustries have been developed in some of the colo

One of their great concerns is how to main their faith and cultural heritage in the midst of t alien surroundings. From the beginning they been busy with their schools, their churches, hospitals. When one reviews the past history of group of which these colonists are a part and gether with that he sees the response of the L American to the gospel as it is taught through Mennonite missions, he is satisfied to leave the sults with the Lord and with the future, with confidence that out of this missionary effort as as out of the influence of these colonization e prises will come a church that will bear the es tial stamp of Mennonitism in faith, in life, an character, and that the true spirit of our foreb will not only be conserved in the home, in busi in the church, and in the school, but that it govern every contact that is made with the s groups among which these people live.

ALL-OUT FOR CHRIST

The task of living in the spirit of Christ is not unless we are completely willing to give ourselv Christ. We may have to make some so-called rifices which are usually only the giving up of material, worldly pleasures. Let us commit ours completely to the spirit of Jesus and part with ries. We must trust God and our fellow men. must return to the simple life of calmness, indiv conviction, and a concern for the welfare of ou low men all over the world.

Are We Preparing for World War III?

By Barbara C. Smucker

On school playgrounds all over the United States today children are playing war. The boys lie on the ground with tiny sticks for guns. They point them toward the sky and when a bird flys over they yell "Jap" and then "ack-ack-ack-ack, I've shot him down."

Toy counters at Christmas were minus bicycles, trains, sleds, and other childhood essentials—but they were glutted with guns, small soldiers, machine guns, army tanks, service uniforms, and other miniatures of war. In a very real sense the children of our nation are at war!

Of course, it is rather natural for war-minded parents to have war-minded children. It is false to expect children to rise above the morals of their elders. But many of our heartsick folks hoping and praying for peace should probe deeper into the meaning of this supposedly innocent fun of war games. Perhaps, this play looks harmless enough on the surface, but what is it fundamentally doing? Isn't the child beginning to think of war as a fascinating regular event in society—an event which he is someday to participate in—an event thoroughly approved by the adults about him? The aggressive, violent, destructive little tendencies of his personality are nurtured under this system and allowed to grow and materialize.

Not too many years ago a Kansas editor, Nelson Antrim Crawford, wrote a small book called Your Child Faces War. In it he said:

"A safe and peaceful world must be a world in which violence among people is disapproved . . . Inasmuch as actions speak louder than words, the example of the parents is of the utmost importance. They should avoid violence themselves, in word and tone of voice as well as overt acts. They should be careful to avoid expressing approval of violence. This tabu, if it is to be of any value, must be absolute. The child under five has no capacity for drawing hairline distinctions. One can't teach him that it is wrong to shoot the man who lives next door but right to kill the soldier of Patagonia with which the nation is at war. It may be a significant fact that a very large proportion of the dangerous criminals of today are in their early twenties. They were very young children during our participation in the World War. At that time Americans who stayed at home were in a veritable orgy of violent talk. There was rejoicing in our homes over the killing of the enemy. The hope was freely expressed that German babies might be murdered in the same way that it was falsely reported Belgian infants had been massacred. Parents were at a high pitch of emotion. It is not surprising that children accepted violence as a normal way of life and that the more unfortunate ones, unreached by tabus at adolescence, entered upon careers of robbery and murder."

This is a sobering thought; especially for Mennonites. We have a religious heritage which has grown out of anguish and martrydom opposing the world's violence in order to live the love which Christ preached to those who sought the Kingdom of God.

It is difficult to oppose the neighborhood gang in their daily warfare with the Japs and Germans. It is time-consuming to plan alternative recreation that plums the constructive geniuses of all our children. Our society seems too hurried to find time for the daily family worship of Bible reading and prayer. It is baffling to compete with school, radio, picture shows, books, magazines, and the Sunday funnies with their lurid and hair-raising approval of war. But parents must do it, prayerfully, constantly, and patiently.

Our children should know that the bombs and "ack-ack guns" kill and destroy the homes of little children. And that war has caused the pitiful starved bodies of small boys and girls all over the world. How much more humane and Christian it is to save pennies for the starved and unclothed children of war and participate generally in the Good Samaritan activities of the Mennonite Central Committee. Here the innocent love of the little child is harnessed to the Cross rather than the sword; here the symbol of work is a lamb and not a bomb!

It would be well for all of us to heed the words of Menno Simons when he wrote long ago on the *Education of Children:

"The world desire for their children that which is earthly and perishable, such as money, honor, fame and wealth. From infancy they train them up to vice, pride, haughtiness and idolatry. But with you, who are born of God, this is not the case: for it behooves you to seek something else for your children; namely, that which is heavenly and eternal, and hence it is your duty to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the lord."

* Complete Works of Menno Simons, Vol. k, p. 274

TRUE GREATNESS

We in America, somehow have the idea that we have to go fast, that anything large is of great value—big houses, huge churches, colleges, cities, and nations. What is important, rather than this, is the great teacher in the small college, a great Christian in his own community, and the presence of Christ in a small church. William James, a well-known teacher in a large university says, "I am done with big things, great organizations and big successes. And I am for those tiny invisible forces, which, if you give them time, will rend the hardest monuments of man's pride."

By Rev. Howard Raid, Fortuna, Missouri

JANUARY 9—". . . because the Lord hath anointed me to preach tidings unto the meek." Isaiah 61:1

We can say that Jesus came to speak to all who would open their hearts to Him. All who will submit to Him will hear His message. Jesus did not come with a sword forcing people to submit to Him, rather He came to stir up the Kingdom of God within us and to tune it with Himself. But only the people who are meek or will become meek and will consent to hear, will hear.

JANUARY 10—"As Jesus sat at meat in his house, many publicans and sinners sat also together with Jesus and His disciples." Mark 2:15

This feast was at Levi's house for his friends, in honor of Levi's joining with and following Christ. He would be pleased today, if we could celebrate more disciples following Him. You say Jesus was eating at the table with publicans and sinners. Yes, He was never afraid to mingle with sinners in order to show them His way of life.

JANUARY 11—"Can the children of the bridechamber fast, while the bridegroom is with them?" Mark 2:19

Jesus would not take the old form and put it into His religion until the form fitted or until the time was ready. Fasting was the traditional way to show religious feeling, especially of sorrow. But Jesus said that there was no need for it yet among His followers, they should be happy for He was still with them. In other words, Jesus was not going to accept the old form of religious thinking and belief unless it really had some place in His teachings. As yet, fasting did not.

JANUARY 12—"Therefore the Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath." Mark 2:28

We have sometimes taken the verse before this one to be our only guide for Sabbath use, and then we have interpreted it to mean that whatever man wanted to do was all right to do on the Sabbath. The Lord is ruler of the Sabbath as well as of the other days of the week. The things that we do on the Sabbath are to aid us in bringing the Kingdom of God into our lives the other six days of the week.

JANUARY 13—"Is it lawful to do good on the Sabbath day, or to do evil? to save life? or to kill?" Mark 3:4

Wherever there was any question which involved really helping some human beings, Jesus always cut straight across all tradition, beliefs, and laws that would hold Him back, in order to help. Jesus would not put off until Sunday, some task that He could have done during the week, nor would He plan to do certain tasks on the Sabbath just because they were good tasks. But if it happened that He could relieve suffering on the Sabbath He would quickly take advantage of the situation.

JANUARY 14—"For He healed many . . ." Mark 3:10

Jesus healed the sick physically, mentally, and spiritually. He knew that many were following Him in order that He might heal their physical ailments, then they would be satisfied and go their way. Jesus did not withhold His healing from any who asked it. Remember, He healed the ten lepers physically for they had asked for His mercy, but only one came back and thanked Him. This one He healed spiritually also.

JANUARY 15—"And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand." Mark 3:25

The Bible tells us that we are made in the image of God. Jesus told the unsaved Pharisee "Behold the Kingdom of God is within you," Luke 17:21. This then, means that we have the Kingdom of God within ourselves; each one of us carries the image of God within. If we sin, then we sin not only against God beyond us but also against God within us. We are literally a "House divided against itself." That is why sin causes us to fall.

JANUARY 16—"For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." Mark 3:35

The big standard by which we are judged is not the color of our skin, the size of our bank roll, the number of farms we have, the number of degrees we hold, nor even what church we go to, but what we do with what we do have . Do we waste it, do we let it set idle, do we let our farms wash away, do we let our children fill their minds with trash, do we let ourselves compromise with evil because we are afraid to stand for what we believe, or do we use all that we have for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God?

Will Ye Heed the Call

By Edna Ramseyer

Have you ever wished that you could prove your convictions on peace and war as your boy friend, husband, brother, or son has? Have you ever wondered if there are places for Mennonite girls or women to serve as our boys are serving at present?

Or haven't you wondered at all? Have you just considered yourself lucky that you haven't had to? Have you just crossed your fingers, hoping that women would not be drafted; and if so, then you would decide what stand you would take?

Girls and women of the Mennonite church groups! Our Christian responsibility to our God, the world, the church, our boys in Civilian Public Service is tremendous. The challenge is before us; the projects await us; the question is, do we as girls and women want to serve? Are we willing to take time out to do the little things that count so much?

This summer sixteen girls from various branches of the Mennonite church accepted this challenge for service and attended the Relief Training School at Goshen College, sponsored by the Mennonite Central Committee. These girls not only deepened their own conviction to help this sick and sinful world, but keenly felt:

(1) That we as Mennonite girls and women should be made more aware of the part that we can and must play as Christian conscientious objector women;

(2) That we as women of all branches of the Mennonite church should develop study groups around the topics of Mennonite history, the teachings of Christ, the work of the C. P. S. camps, including detached service, and past, present, and future relief work of the Mennonite Central Committee;

(3) That we should help our brethren bear the reproach of Christ before the world by giving expression to, and developing convictions on, peace and war;

(4) That we enter actively into some of the following fields of service which are ready for us as workers:

(a) Join the "Relief Girls" who have been working at some of our state mental hospitals as nurses, dieticians, ward attendants, office helpers, etc.

(b) Take nurses' training or college work in economics, sociology, history, home economics, language, and Bible, and plan to work with other C. O. groups in C. P. S. camps, mental hospitals, our own Mennonite hospitals, Puerto Rico, or some foreign unit.

(c) Collect, clean and mend used clothing. Send it to Akron, Pennsylvania.

(d) Order from our Mennonite cutting rooms new clothing which can be sewed by our own missionary societies, and then send it to Mrs. Lydia Lehman, Akron, Pa.

(e) Encourage "Brotherhood gardens," canning and drying of foods for our colleges, C. P. S. camps, hospitals, orphanages, and old peoples homes.

(f) Make new toys, collect and redecorate old toys for Japanese evacuees, migrant groups, children's

YOUTH JOTTINGS

—Wayland Mennonite Church: The young people gave a program at the State Hospital at Mt. Pleasant on December 12.

—Beatrice, Nebraska: About sixty young people attended a recent bi-weekly fellowship meeting. A fine collection of colored pictures describing the training and work of the "Smoke Jumpers" was shown by Louis Goosen. Louis is one of the "Jumpers". This fellowship group, which draws members from two Mennonite churches and a Dunkard church as well as from some others, meets on Wednesday night. This group is now studying one of the "Mennonites and Their Heritage" booklets.

homes, children's hospitals, and poor families.

(g) Organize children's groups to collect soap, pencils, tablets, tooth brushes, handkerchiefs, thread, etc., for relief purposes.

(h) Save, collect, and remake old pocketbooks and felt hats into small shoes and slippers for relief.

(i) Make Christmas gifts, collect stationery and stamps for our boys in C. P. S. camps, mental hospitals, and regular service.

(j) Encourage children and parents to buy peace bonds and raise money for C. P. S. camp work, Mennonite colleges, missions, etc.

(k) Encourage Mennonite women living near C. P. S. camps to mend for the C. P. S. boys.

(l) Encourage people to subscribe to and read various church publications.

(m) Live a conscientious, peaceful, sincere, Christian life.

Shall we as Mennonite women accept these opportunities for service, whether it be in a foreign country, mental hospital, Civilian Public Service camp, or at home. Shall we say, as Moses had been tempted to say, "Lord, we are not prepared, we do not have the ability, we do not have the time"? Or will we say, "Lord, we will do that which thou hast for us to do. We will accept this challenge to spread 'good will to all men,' 'to be our brother's keeper,' 'to help the widowed and the fatherless,' and 'to be peacemakers.' " We will say, "Father, not our will, but thine be done." Girls! Let us prayerfully consider this opportunity. God will lead us into the path which we should take if we but dedicate our lives to Him. Let us use our time, our energy, our bodies, our money, and our minds for His service.

SIGNING ON THE DOTTED LINE

A Methodist layman visited a great church in Ohio during a business trip. After the service he congratulated the minister on his service and sermon. "But," said the manufacturer, "if you were my salesman, I'd discharge you. You got my attention by your appearance, voice, and manner; your prayer, reading, and logical discourse aroused my interest; you warmed my heart with a desire for what you preached; and then—and then you stopped, without asking me to do something about it! In business, the important thing is to get men to sign on the dotted line."

—Alliance Weekly

AN INTERESTING VISITOR in the pastor's study this week was a post-graduate student from the University of Minnesota who had previously been impressed by the prosperity and orderliness of our community and who was desirous of learning more about it. Among the questions asked were these: What kind of people live here? Who are the Mennonites? What about them is responsible for such a splendid community? etc. Well, what would you have said? In substance our opinion was that the people had made the church the center of the community and that God had blessed them for it. "Seek ye first the kingdom...and all these things shall be added unto you."

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

RURAL STANDARDS OF LIVING

There is a popular acceptance of the opinion that the rural standard of living is far below the urban standard. This raises the immediate question of what is meant by a standard of living.

Definition

There are two conceptions of what a standard of living is. One definition or conception holds that a standard of living consists of the accumulation of things—the emphasis is strongly on things. We say the people in the United States have a high standard of living because the number of refrigerators, radios, automobiles, electric stoves, sweepers, razors, etc., per person is greater than anywhere else in the world, that the physical comforts of the American people are greater than those of any other people. Therefore, say some, we have the highest standard of living in the world. The emphasis here is clearly on things—things, things, and more things, and if this is what a standard of living consists of it is certainly higher in the cities than in the country.

Another Definition

Another notion of what constitutes a high standard of living is not in the accumulation of many material objects but in the use to which one puts the material objects which he possesses and the satisfactions which he derives from those uses—also a high standard is determined by the character and attitudes of the people; their honesty, kindliness, helpfulness, cleanliness, and godliness. These are items which the world overlooks or discounts as unimportant in defining a standard of living. If this definition is accepted, rural standards may be as high as the urban.

The tragedy of modern Christianity is that all too many of us who profess to be good Christians (to ourselves if not to anyone else) is that we have accepted the former definition. We constantly buy one more thing hoping that this will surely give us happiness. It won't. Material things do not give lasting satisfaction in themselves. This accumulation results only in a high standard on a low plane. The kind of things that give happiness and a really high standard of living can't be bought. It must be done—Paul said "This one thing I do . . ."" Philippians 3:13.

CORRESPONDENCE

BEFORE THE SHUTTERS CLOSE

Greetings from the First Mennonite Church, Newton. We have knelt at Bethlehem's manger. The holy Christmas day has passed. Already Old Year stands at the window of life with his hands upon the shutters. Before they close forever, let us step to the window to view once more the road that we have traveled, that we have traveled as a church. Will you, who have not journeyed with us side by side, come to view the scene with us? Perhaps our joys and sorrows—is not life made up of these two interchanging experiences?—can be of some blessing to some other struggling heart, or groups of hearts, laboring together as we have tried to labor through this year.

There are times in the individual's life when the fibers of faith are strained and tested by trials. When, by grace, the soul emerges out of its trials victoriously, faith's fibers have added strength and elasticity. So also to a church, come years of testing. They have come to us. Would that, by the grace of God, we would emerge out of the present crisis as victors to toil by the side of the Master with more zeal and stronger faith.

We are facing the same problem that many churches have faced, to find a shepherd for us, needy sheep. Rev. J. E. Entz, who has served us as pastor for the past forty years, has tendered his resignation which is to be voted on in the near future. Dr. A. Warkentin, though he is slowly gaining strength, will be unable to serve us for some time to come. When this greatest of all problems comes to a church, then it is comfort, indeed, to know that no other than the Christ, Himself, is the head of the Church. Surely He doth supply shepherds for His sheep. Surely He has planed definitely to meet also our needs. Our prayer is that we might humbly seek His will and lay our own aside that we might work together with Him in the building of His Church in our midst.

Other events have taken place in our church: there have been baptisms, there have been births, and there have been deaths; there have been festivities, there have been marriages; there has been worship and adoration and praise; there has been the teaching of the Word. I feel a bit more reluctant to say there has been repentance, forgiveness, confession—when these three become more common in our churches, we shall have more power to work the works of Him that sent us.—There has been so much!

But in our heart there remains only one prayer as we look through the window over which the shutters are slowly closing now,

"Spirit of God, descend upon thine own!"

HOFFNUNGSFELD MENNONITE CHURCH

Moundridge, Kansas

We can truly say that the Lord was gracious to us in the past year. Couples have been married. Mothers rocked the cradles of several newborn babies. A catechism class was conducted and baptized by Missionary Ferdinand Isaac. Communion was observed. Yes, we experienced joy and sorrow. One babtismal candidate was struck by a passing motor and instead of being baptized with the class she was in the hospital suffering severe pain. However, after a few months she also was baptized. One casket stood before us. One of our deacons passed away after a short illness. There was an empty chair in the home and the church.

Officers for the next year have been elected. We thank God that men and women are willing to work in the church and help build the Kingdom of God. After dinner was served in the church basement on December 5, we remained seated, and the chairman announced that the afternoon meeting was for getting better acquainted with our pastor, Rev. Gustav Frey, and his family. Gifts were presented to him. Professors Menno Kaufman and Mose Stucky gave encouraging short talks. Rev. Frey also gave a short talk and thanked, stating that the surprize had been successful. Occassions like this strengthen us and draw us closer together.

Sunday services start at 10 a. m. We kindly invite friends and neighbors. Come and worship with us. Especially those who live at a distance from this church.

—Mrs. Ernest Juhnke, Moundridge, Kan.

An Interesting Community

shivering somewhere around fifteen below—inaugerating the first intensely cold period of this winter. A goodly number of people came for the services of the day—which were held in commemoration of the purpose and labor of the founders of the school. There again one became aware of the fine cooperation of the various Mennonite branches.

The day afforded a visit with Rev. Peter J. Stahl, pastor of the Hutterdorf Church. There was a time when Brother Stahl farmed, taught school, and preached. That takes a strong constitution and strong consecration. Some of the Hutterisch churches have joined the Northern District Conference, and they are contributing to the work of our General Conference.

A few more enjoyable visits in homes and it was time to take the bus back to Sioux Falls. Unfortunately the time was too short to visit all the General Conference churches and pastors in the community.

order to learn; it is not merely a "pouring in" situation in which the learner passively absorbs so many doses of knowledge. Whether in church, in school, or at home, the child is an active learner, not a passive one. For many centuries we assumed that "children should be seen not heard." We neglected answering the endless questions which the child from ages three to seven or more asked. True, part of the purpose of questioning is to use this new speech-tool for itself, but it is also the child's way of learning to live in a complex world which we as adults often take for granted. As far as knowledge, information, is concerned, a new-born infant must start from "scratch." By the time that individual is an adult, merely twenty years (more or less), he has to learn much of what it took our civilization several thousand years to achieve.

3. Since the most important years of a child's life are the pre-school years, and since the child during this time is under direct supervision of the home, parents must realize that the future life course of their son or daughter is largely their responsibility. The most important learning years of a child's life are the years before the child goes to school, from birth to age five or six. It is at this time that the basic patterns of life are laid down with the later development largely a differentiation and expansion process of the experiences of these early years. The basic patterns of religion should be established at this time, as well as a love for stories, a delight for songs, common courtesy, orderliness, the idea of sharing and many other worthwhile traits of a Christian personality. The home remains the primary educative agency for the pre-school child. This means that parents, the father as well as the mother, must assume more of the responsibility for this early period of training than they frequently have in the past.

4. The home should permit the child to be a creative participant within an environment which balances the opportunity for freedom and the necessity for restraint. The home environment must be a democratic one permitting every member of the family to participate creatively with that group. The traditional parental pattern commonly included a stern father who meted out severe corporal punishment to his children at frequent intervals. The older social customs tended to demand this practice; consequently, parents frequently assumed the role of dictators instead of leaders who need to guide and direct their sons and daughters. A reaction against such tyrannical family methods set in at the turn of the last century resulting in a swing to the opposite extreme of permitting the child to do as he pleases with very little restraint offered. Dr. P. M. Symounds, psychologist, found that the child with dominating parents accepts authority and is orderly and courteous but lacks in self-confidence and initiative. The child with submissive parents defies authority, is irresponsible, lazy, selfish, aggressive, and independent. Neither type of parental practice illustrated above is desirable. Dr. Raymond H. Wheeler, psychologist at the University of Kansas, maintains that the individual exercises his freedom under laws of restraint. Any parent who has attempted to maintain such an optimum position will attest to the fact that to put the afore-mentioned principle into practice is a difficult task that will require a great deal of patience and understanding. The resulting child behavior is often discouraging when one sees the boy behave like a "bull in a china shop," but the rewards come when that same boy is able to greet guests courteously and to carry on an intelligent conversation with them, when he has learned the principles of sharing play equipment with playmates, when he is helpful around the house on his own initiative, such as helping clear the dishes from the table and assisting with their washing, and when he shows a growing orderliness in keeping items in his room in their proper place. Parents should recognize that there will be many regressions at which time it appears that all past training practices have been in vain, but the very next day may again show the rewards of a rearing program with a proper balancing of freedom and restraint. Parents should not merely insist on "adjustment" to the pre-established pattern of living, but they should permit, rather encourage, creative participation in family affairs.

5. A child should be given opportunities to make choices, but after a choice has been made parents should insist that the tasks involved be performed whether they be pleasant or unpleasant. It is easier to let the child do the things he likes and to ignore the ones he does not like. The home, together with the church and the school, needs to reaffirm its faith in the ability of the individual to pass judgments of value. This includes making choices predicated upon an assumption that human behavior is purposive, behavior directed toward a goal, an objective. The child should be given a purpose for the task he is assigned to do. When he asks "Why?" he should be given a truthful answer, not merely a "Do it because mother says so!" School, home, and church training methods have unfortunately been influenced by the pleasure—pain theory which maintains that the child remembers and wishes to repeat those experiences which are pleasant and forgets and avoids those experiences which are unpleasant. This type of thinking would sugar-coat the many unpleasant tasks that any individual must perform. Our civilization would be in a sad state if we merely tried to do the tasks that are pleasant. Instead, what we must do is have our goal, our purposes, our objectives clearly in mind and then work for those purposes. In doing so there will be somewhat of a balance between the pleasant and unpleasant tasks that need to be accomplished. When we have the feeling that we are on our way toward that goal, satisfaction will result as a by-product; while when we seem to be blocked, frustrated, in our endeavor we have the feeling of dissatisfaction. Our objective in life cannot be happiness, since this is merely a by-product of a worthwhile and fruitful Christian life spent in serving God and one's fellowmen. The attempt to achieve happiness for itself would be a selfish effort, and, therefore, doomed to failure from the beginning. The foregoing discussion has significance for Christian education by urging parents to give their boys and girls training in making wise choices, and in developing techniques of making value judgments. Our American civilization has strayed too far into a materialistic thinking in which the thing that costs the most is the best. We must achieve a new sense of values in which the human personality is of prime importance, not the monetary value. To do this we must help our youth to make qualitative choices. The finest traditions of the Christian religion can help achieve a set of judgments. May the Christian home lead the way toward a view of life in which we look to God as the Father, realizing that all of us are sons of God, and therefore brothers. We will then say: "Yes, I am my brother's keeper."

How One Pastor Makes His Visits

Articles about pastoral calling seldom appear in this paper. Yet this is very important in present-day church work. To give an idea of how one pastor goes about this, we present the following article which is taken from the Eden Chronicles of the Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge. Brother Walter Gering is pastor of this church.

For some time it has been a matter of concern as to how we might more effectively reach the families of the congregation through visitation and personal contact. One of the great dangers of large congregations is that not only do individual members and families lose that personal intimate touch which is evident in a small congregation but the pastor as well. The growing number of families represented in the congregation is making it increasingly difficult for the pastor to keep in touch with all. Yet a certain amount of personal touch is necessary if he is to be informed of the needs and heart throbs of the congregation. The problem of pastoral calling is one which has not yet been solved satisfactorily; more needs to be done along this line. Limited physical endurance, the need for personal study and devotions, family obligations, restricted transportation facilities, church activities—all of these increase the problem. Yet we believe that with the cooperation of the congregation greater contacts can be made. With that thought in mind we wish to suggest a method of procedure which requires the cooperation of all. This is an experiment and as such may go the way of many other experiments, but we suggest a fair trial. Below, you will find a proposed schedule of visitation for the month of December. Monday of each week we shall endeavour to spend the day at home in study and meditation. Tuesday and Thursday are to be devoted to family visitation. In order to go about this visitation in a more systematic manner a schedule has been worked out and is presented for your consideration. A study of it will reveal that the church is the starting point ,and that each week finds us going out in a different direction. The plan is to go from house to house as much as possible and to cover the entire congregation.

May we ask for your cooperation in several ways. First of all, please do not ask us to make these calls as a family. Much as we would like to do so, that is impossible. The pastor will come alone. Then may we ask that you do not expect us to extend the time of the visit over thirty minutes. To do so will be to ask us to take away time from some one else. There are 300 other families to be visited; let us be fair and considerate of others. Then again may we ask for your patience. In our visitation we are bound to pass up someone unknowingly and unintentionally. We wish we could say that no such mistakes will be made. But knowing ourselves as we do, we predict that such mistakes will be made. Please accept them as a sign that we are merely human; tell us about the oversight and we shall gladly seek to make it right. Then in the fourth place may we suggest that if you have any problems or suggestions to offer during these visits that you feel free to do so. May we make these thirty minute periods of mutual benefit to each other.

So much for the visitation on Tuesday and Thursday. On Wednesdays and Fridays we shall endeavour to follow a similar procedure in the afternoons visiting the aged and shutins. We have a number of members who should be visited once a month. These with the sick provide a list long enough to occupy two afternoons a week regularily. Here again we shall find it necessary to limit the time of the visit as much as possible. Saturdays, we shall reserve for study and preparation for the activities of Sunday.

Now may we say a word about the proposed schedule in general. May we all recognize that this is merely a proposed schedule. There are always unforeseen happenings and situations which arise, requiring immediate attention. We would ask that everyone feel free to interrupt the schedule at any time for such occasions. The sick and the needy must always come first. We do not wish to discourage any one from coming at any time. If we do not appear for a family visit at the time scheduled, the family involved will understand that other things interfered, which required our attention.

HOME MISSIONS

A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary

HOME MISSION WORK IN TORONTO ONT.

"O give thanks unto the Lord for He is good: for His mercy endureth for ever"—Psalm 107:1

On September 12 the members of this mission gave their pastor-to-be a cordial welcome. This was done in form of a program, and later a lunch was served by the ladies. The program consisted of official welcomes by the ministers of Vineland, Virgil, Waterloo, and Niagara-on-the-Lake. They gave short messages, choosing for their themes appropriate Scripture verses for the encouragement and help of the new worker. Favorable music was rendered by the choir, as well as solos from the individuals of the choir. In all it was a very interesting program and certainly one that would make their pastor-to-be feel quite at home.

A few weeks have passed since it was my pleasure to begin work at this mission in Toronto. Thus far it has been a matter of getting acquainted with the people. Many of the young people are still left who need to be called upon and invited to the Sunday services. However, at present there are from twenty-five to thirty-five people in regular atendance. We are looking forward to larger attendance as time goes on.

We can say this, that it has been as real a blessing as we have met from time to time. We have experienced that what that Psalmist speaks of, namely, "The Lord, He is good, for His mercy endureth for ever."

Yours in His Service,
Arnold A. Fast

C.P.S. Camps

Selective Service Notified

The agencies administering C.P.S. have finally notified Selective Service that they are willing to continue the program for another year. Mennonite Central Committee and Brethren Service Committee had made the decision in October, but The American Friends Service Committee was doubtful as to whether they should continue or not, and the final commitment was delayed for two months.

Canning and Drying Project

A preliminary report of the canning and drying project for C.P.S. camps places the total quarts canned well over 168,000. This total does not include quantities taken directly to the camps, but only the food handled in the collection centers. By this time almost all of the food is stored in the camp pantries.

Hagerstown Farm and Community School

The Hagerstown Farm and Community School will not open on January 1 as originally planned. Due to the cancellation of transfers over the holiday season this project will probably get under way around February 1.

RELIEF NOTES

Relief to India

A detailed letter from Sam Goering and J. D. Graber closes with a paragraph outlining tentative plans for a relief project in Bengal:

"As plans now seem to be shaping up there will likely be a famine camp at Sonarpur, a village twelve miles out from Calcutta, a rice selling project where rice is sold at cost, and less than cost to needy people at Kalyanpur, a village about twenty miles out, besides some subsidy to well managed mission relief kitchens, especially those of the American Baptist Mission in Midnapur and Balasore districts. This will be but a drop in the bucket as far as the colossal Bengal famine is concerned, but it looks as if this were as effective a way as is feasible for us to use our resources."

Cable from China

A telegram was received recently at M.C.C. Headquarters Office from China relief commissioners, J. D. Graber and S. J. Goering. An excerpt is given here:

TENTATIVELY RECOMMEND ESTABLISHING FIRST UNIT AROUND CLOSED MISSION HOSPITAL HONAN FAMINE AREA. REQUIRE DIRECTOR ONE DOCTOR SEVERAL OTHERS FOR RELIEF ADMINISTRATION, HANDICRAFTS, ORPHANAGE, ETC. ONE MUST SPEAK CHINESE. INITIAL UNIT COMPRISING MEN SUITABLE FOR LEADERSHIP LATER DEVELOPMENT. LEAVING FOR INVESTIGATING FAMINE AREA NEXT WEEK.

Conference at Ottawa

Orie Miller and Ernest Bennet met with six Canadian Mennonite brethren in Ottawa, Ontario, December 8-9. Representatives were present from three Canadian relief committees and from the Ontario Conference of Historic Peace Churches, whose constituencies support M.C.C. relief activities. Plans were discussed as to how the relief efforts and interests of the Canadian Mennonites might be better coordinated with the relief activities of the M.C.C. It was suggested that the M.C.C. might set up a branch office in Canada. At the recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the M.C.C. this suggestion was passed upon favorably and it was decided to have Ernest Bennet assist in the opening of this office probably in Toronto.

Needed Rains Come to the Chaco

Vernon Schmidt writing from the Fernheim Colonia, November 20, tells about welcome showers of rain:

"We have had wonderful rains here in the last two or three weeks; Mr. Klassen says that he had heard so much about the dry, hot Chaco, then when he gets here, it is cool and forever raining! Anyway, the most of the plowing and planting is now done, and soon the weeds will be big and a lot of cultivating necessary. Several have told me that never before here, have they had rains that covered the whole of both colonies so uniformly and at the same time in sufficient quantities that they could plow and plant everything at one time, with no interruption for dry weather in the meantime. So the people are much more satisfied now."

Workers to Puerto Rico

Grace Kauffman is at the M.C.C. Headquarters at present becoming acquainted with the work of M.C.C. The date for her to leave from Miami has been changed to January 3. Latest word from Roman and Elmer Gingerich is that they left Miami on the morning of December 8. N. Paul Stuckey and Erwin Warkentin have arrived in Puerto Rico. N. Paul writing from Castaner, says, "It took longer to travel between the two units (Castaner and La Plata) than it did between Miami and San Juan."

The German Mennonite war prisoner, Hans Schneble, was contacted by J. M. Regier, Cornelius Krahn and John A. Ewert. This prisoner had seen the name of M.C.C. on a devotional booklet and had written to Akron asking for a visit. He is interned at Camp Phillips, Salina, Kansas. In a report of his visit Brother Regier says:

"On our return to Capt. Wickliff's office we found Hans Schneble waiting for us. As soon as he saw Dr. Krahn he said, 'Ich kenne Sie' (I know you). They had been at the same conference at Danzig one time. We visited with him for about 20 minutes in the presence of two officers, the corporal being the interpreter, but of course we did not need his services. Schneble seems to be a man of about 30 years, is married, but has no children. The prisoners can write letters and receive them, but everything is first censored. His address would be as follows: Hans Schneble, Prisoner of War Camp, Co. No. 6, Camp Phillips, Kans. In care of the District Postal Censor, 252 Seventh Ave., New York City."

—"New Year's Eve! (This coming Friday) The members and friends of this church are invited to drop in at the parsonage any time after 9:30 p.m. for an informal fellowship together. Let us start the New Year with the blessed tie that binds!" So read a note in the December 26th bulletin of the First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio. Donovan Smucker as pastor. On December 27 a member of that church wrote to the editor. "The icy condition of the roads yesterday prevented our minister . . . from making his trip to Akron for his broadcast over WAKR and kept many of us from attending church at Wadsworth too, although the forty or fifty who did make the trip were well paid by a splendid sermon by Rev. Smucker and some nice words for braving the roads."

—Brother C. H. A. van der Smissen wrote on December 28: "My dear sister and I had a very happy and blessed Christmas. I wish you could have seen the array of cards and of nice presents we had. Cookies were scarce this year, but there were plenty of chocolates and fine candy. This year I attended three beautiful, blessed celebrations." Brother van der Smissen was ninety-two on December 4. He is the oldest minister in our General Conference. His sister Hillegonda van der Smissen celebrated her ninety-fifth birthday on last June 30.

—Woodland Mennonite Church, Warroad, Minnesota: The choir furnished music one evening during a week of revival meetings at the Mission Covenant Church. A Thanksgiving program was given on November 25. It is important that we give thanks every day of the year.—Jake Quiring, Corr.

—Bethel College: Chapel speakers in the week ending December 17 included Dr. C. E. Krehbiel and Rev. H. J. Brown, who recently returned from the China mission field. Rev. Brown's son, Roland, is a student in Bethel College and the editor of the 1944 Graymaroon. Rev. Brown also spoke to students and others, Sunday evening, Dec. 17, telling of his experiences in occupied China as a prisoner of the Japanese.

—Rev. Walter Gering will bring a series of Bible messages to the First Mennonite Church, Berne, Indiana, from January 9 to 16. Services will be held each evening except Saturday, and some Bible study periods will very likely be held on some of the mornings. The Schweitzer C. O. Case

With the exception of Lew Ayres, probably no individual conscientious objector has found himself the focal point of as much heat and publicity as Edward O. Schweitzer, Miami, Fla., school teacher who was ousted for his views.

Schweitzer's case did not achieve the nationwide audience of Lew Ayres, but in Dade County, Fla., it has made up for this in intensity. One newspaper compared the case to the famous Scopes trial. Editorials, letters to the editor, columnist's opinions and news stories are still coming in, despite the fact that he was discharged in August.

The Facts in the Case

Schweitzer, 34 years old and a Methodist, had been teaching in Miami public schools for ten and a half years, the last five of which he has been Dean of Boys at the Ada Merritt Junior High School. In addition, he was a YMCA clubleader, Scoutmaster, choir-singer and Sunday-school teacher. This past summer he has been working up to twelve hours a day in a local dairy.

Last May his local board changed his III-A classification to I-A, amending it to I-A-O after his protest. He appealed for IV-E.

In June or July, an anonymous telephone call informed the School Board that Schweitzer was a was a C.O., apparently suggesting that something be done about it.

The School Board held a preliminary hearing to ask Schweitzer about his beliefs. It later preferred charges of incompetence, alleging that he was incapable of teaching patriotism and defense of country as required in the school system. A formal hearing was set for August 11.

Just before the hearing, Schweitzer learned from his local board that he had been re-classified IV-E. There was no explanation as to why his case had been reopened.

The hearing was held and Schweitzer was later discharged. Soon afterwards he began legal proceedings for reinstatement.

On September 15, he reported to Camp Blanding for his final physical examination and was rejected by army physicians. He is now back in Miami.

The Hearings

The preliminary hearing was only a preview of what was to come. Quoting from Time Magazine's account:

"Schweitzer's mother, whom he supports testified that he does a long daily stint in a dairy, held that this constitutes more war work than the School Boarders achieve. Also supporting Schweitzer were his principal, students, parents, friends. Some arguments:

"Principal Albert L. Isaac: 'He is loved and respected by his boys.'

"Several parents: their sons were studying under Schweitzer when they enlisted; he did not teach pacifism, but believes in it himself.

"A parent who works for the Air Transport Command: his soldier son was prevented by military duties from appearing to say that Schweitzer was the best teacher he ever had.

"Chinese-American student Helen Gong: Schweitzer improved wayward students' characters.

"Miami News Editorialist Francis P. Locke argued that to fire Schweitzer verged on tyranny. Next day he wrote, 'A sad blow to the ideals for which we are fighting . . . flesh and blood and bones of democracy . . . torn, spilled and crushed. . . .'

"The Miami Herald, on the other hand, advised Schweitzer's dismissal, though expressing respect for his convictions. Terry's (R. P. Terry, School Board member) co-Legionnaires at the hearing expressed no respect. Florida's ex-Vice Commander Al Lambert wanted 'red-blooded' teachers. Miami Beach Post Chaplain Elmer Warren darkly declared: 'Dade County is on trial here.' "

The formal hearing was even more dramatic. About 200 persons attended. For three hours, the crowd continually interrupted the testimony to shout their own "violently partisan" opinions. A bloc of Schweitzer's students and Boy Scouts cheered lustily when someone spoke in favor of him. A Boy Scout in the rear wept throughout the debate on hearing his leader denounced.

Schweitzer had the backing of 17 Methodist ministers of the city, the Dade County Scout Leaders' Ass'n, and the National Education Ass'n in a statement read at the hearing. Newspapers were also generally favorable to his stand with editorial and columnist opinion running about five to one in his favor, according to a NSBRO count.

Schweitzer himself was called first to the stand to be quizzed in a manner strongly protested by his

Not so Much Knowledge, As Fruitage

Jesus did not say that true Christians can be ascertained by the amount of Bible knowledge possessed. He said, " . . . by their fruits ye shall know them. Jesus again and again emphasized fruitful living: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven—whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man—Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me —Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples—If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love—Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you—If a man love me he will keep my words—By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another—That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven—He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." The doing of God's will as revealed in Christ should be an uppermost concern for the Christian.

Naturally we must know a truth before we can put it into action. We must know what Christ is like before we can be Christlike. Far too many Christians are stunted in their scriptural knowledge. As God's children we should dearly cherish what He has to say to us.

However, we can best do this by learning with the intention of applying. Just to let God's word go into one ear and out another or to let it lie idle in the mind is not pleasing to our Father. We can easily drift into a false feeling of security by attaining a vast knowledge of the Bible. By just knowing and thinking about holy things we can rather easily convince ourselves that we are quite holy. We can make of scriptural knowledge a sedative that helps to quiet a conscience that should prick us because of our sinfulness. The Pharisees seemingly succeeded in this.

The Pharisees were very "scriptural." They professed to stand absolutely true to the scriptures. They considered themselves the guardians of them. They thought that they knew them so well that they could use them to entangle Jesus. There can be no question that the Pharisees did know the scriptures, but it is plain that they did not live them very well. Yes, the Pharisees did some good; they were looked upon as holy men by the multitudes; they were the leaders representing God as far as most people were concerned; they expounded the Scriptures and taught reverence for them; they prayed and fasted; they gave alms; they kept the Sabbath; they got aroused about a case of adultery. To outward appearances they were pretty good men. In fact, very good men; only there was something disgusting about their goodness. The rottenness inside them! Jesus revealed their hard, little, selfish hearts from which started the cancer of hypocrisy that crept through all their manipulations. The Pharisees knew the scriptures, but Jesus said, "except your righteousness exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees ye cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven."

Jesus did not say to the Pharisees, "Blessed are ye that know the scriptures." But he did say, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness . . ." It was that hunger and thirst that the Pharisees lacked. Without that hunger and thirst their knowledge of the scriptures was frequently put to a devilish use. That is always the danger when scriptural knowledge and a hunger and thirst for righteousness are not found together.

We need to approach the study of our Sunday School lesson with a hunger and thirst for righteousness. It is easy to come to class and to know a lot "about the lesson." It is harder to come to class with a conviction as to what God's will is for one's own life, as revealed by the lesson. It is easier to speculate and theorize about Biblical matters than it is to apply them in right living. Yet, it is fruit-bearing that Jesus, our Saviour, is concerned about.

It might be profitable for the members of a Sunday School class to gather with each one ready to share with the others a definite conviction gained from the lesson for his own personal life. Each could state his insight, and then the others could ask questions for clarification. We share our best experiences in cattle raising, cooking, etc. However, generally we do not have a counterpart in the realm of Christian experience. Such a class session should be very inspiring.

Today we have Sunday School, C.E., preaching services every Sunday morning and perhaps also evening, and frequently prayer meetings during the week. But it is very questionable whether our spirituality can compare with that of the early Brethren in Switzerland and Holland. They did not have all these meetings; many undoubtedly were not able to read the Bible. But they seem to have had a hunger and thirst for Bible knowledge that was to be concretely applied in their living—and dying. The result, a thorough knowledge of the scriptures and living and dying that puts us to shame.

We by all means need more Bible knowledge, but we must certainly not make it an end in itself. It is but a means unto an end—fruitbearing. Let us not be like the Pharisees who knew the scriptures but failed to do God's will as revealed by Jesus Christ.—rw.

LETTER FROM THE DUERKSENS

Jagdishpur, Via Raipur, C. P., India
April 3, 1943

ear Mission Friends,

You who live in the temperate zone would feel that mething was not quite right with our surroundings. [ost of the trees are shedding their leaves, and as ɔu look at the bare branches against the pale blue the sky, you would expect the air to be a bit cool anticipation of coming winter. But, instead, the iermometer is crawling up to 100 or more and the oon sun is so hot that one is glad to remain under ielter. One of the strange things about this part of idia is that the leaves of the trees fall in the spring ionths. Almost immediately dainty, soft, new leaves me out inspite of increasing heat and no rainfall. [any of the trees are full of blossoms—some deep d, some in velvety salmon and cerise, other fragrant prays of white flowerets. One of the evangelists in peaking to a group of new Christians whose home as far from the Mission Station said, "You may not ave calendars and may forget when the great Chrisan holidays come. But when you see the trees deckd out in flowers and new leaves you can know that it time to celebrate the great resurrection day."

In some ways the war has come closer to us. Quite few of our Indians have enlisted in various branches f the Indian army. They are either motor drivers, ospital workers or cooks. Once in a while a soliry airplane flies over and everyone runs out to see . Outside of the increased prices of commodities and ie irregular mail service from abroad, we have expernced nothing of war time troubles. We go anywhere our district without fear. If the nights are hot we o not hesitate to take our beds out into the open.

The time for the touring season is almost over and esults in the number of baptisms can be tabulated. ut such results probably tell only a part of the story. bout three miles distant from Jagdishpur, a bit off ie main road, lies a small village with its "outcast ection somewhat separated from the village proper. 'his year twenty-three people have taken baptism iere and they seem to be very eager to learn more. /as this the first time they had really had a chance to ear? Was it because of superior work done by this ear's evangelists that so many were ready to come ut? We investigated a little.

Twenty-three years ago the first evangelistic camp as set up there by Rev. P. J. Wiens. That was about ur years after that first exploration trip by Rev. teiner when he came into Phuljhar State. In the ears that followed and up to the present date, there have been at least twelve more camps there when workers stopped for a longer or shorter time to present the claims of Christ. They told us that the second camp had been set up by P. A. Penner Sahib. Then Wenger Sahib and the Moyer Sahibs had both been there. Mr. Thiessen remembers visiting that village in the early days when he toured in this area. In a list of believers and their villages we find two Christian families listed in Jiradabhri as early as 1923. But the older man, Shatrughan, had received his baptism at Jhagrindhi the year Dr. Kliewer and Mr. Habeggar visited India. The son, Bansi, had been baptized later in another village. Still later we find the younger man and also the children of the first man listed as church members in Jagdishpur and no further names recorded in Jirradabhri.

In 1939 efficient workers spent a whole month there. No one was ready for baptism. The next year the camp was in a village about a mile distant and workers came regularly to give instruction here too. Still no one was ready. Although the people of this village had made no request for teaching this year, yet the evangelist in this area thought they should have one more chance. And this year they were ready.

Part of the evangelistic work is the selling and distribution of literature. We use two languages in this area—Hindi and Oriya. The record for last year is 21 Bibles, 26 Testaments, 663 Gospel portions and 1313 tracts and booklets. Song pamphlets sold number over 200. Many of the tracts are in couplet or verse form to which the reader makes up a melody as he goes along. We haven't learned that trick yet.

The activities and work of the coming months will keep us from wondering what to do to pass away the time. Mrs. Dester and I, together with eight women, expect to attend a Women's Institute this coming week where there are to be representatives from all the neighboring missions.

School close comes on the 20th of April. There are sixteen eighth class pupils this year. Outside of the children living in this village there are many district children here to attend school. Besides that the Middle School (Grades 5 to 8) pupils from the other stations also come here. Besides looking after the school and the farm attached to it, it has also been Mr. Thiessen's responsibility to see to that 113 of these children had something to eat every day. With rice and other food stuffs at double their former price it has been impossible to make the budget come out even. With the increased costs it will mean that some children will have to miss school next year.

Immediately after school close there is to be a mela (sort of a district convention) and Teacher's Institute combined. Our district Christians are always very eager for this time of "get-to-gether." Three outside speakers are to give the special messages. We trust that these gatherings will be a time of real spiritual empowering. After this the district workers are to spend a month in Bible study here at the station. That is always a time of blessing.

The Lord willing, we hope to spend a few weeks with the children in September. The winter vacation time is also a very busy time in the work. It passes so quickly and it is with regret that we see the appointed day in March arrive when children and trunks must be sent away again. We are glad our children can go to a good school here instead of being sent away to America when they are little.

With Christian greetings,
J. R. and Christena Duerksen

FIRST DIRECT LETTER FROM OUR MISSIONARIES ON THE PHILIPPINES

Camp Holmes Internment Camp
Baguio, Philippines
August 22, 1943

The Mennonite Board of Foreign Missions
To Rev. P. H. Richert,
Newton, Kansas

Dear Friends,

With a note of deep gratitude to God for His gracious protection and care over us, we gladly make use of this opportunity to notify you that we are all comparatively well, and are being accorded fair treatment.

Our needs as to food and necessities in general are also met. We all hope to keep our health in view of continuing in the service of the Christ in future.

Each of us has his particular daily duties to perform in the upkeep of the camp. At present, Wuthrich, Dirks, and Jantzen are members of the wood gang, which supplies wood for the camp kitchens. The women care for the children, clean rice, vegetables, etc. Marvin Jr. and Grace Joan attend school. We are trying to add our bit to keep our small community of about five hundred people going and happy.

The Dirks' youngest daughter, Annt Rae, one year old, is receiving thyroid. If at all possible, it would be well, if the Board, through a doctor, would make arrangements to send several hundred grains, in view of the almost certain future shortage of thyroid here.

Otherwise, we have excellent medical care here.

The Wuthrichs, Dirkses, and Jantzens all send greetings to friends and relatives.

Committing all into God's loving care,

We remain, Yours in Christ,
(Signed) Lester and Agnes Wuthrich
Marvin & Frieda Dirks and family
Albert & Wilma Jantzen and family

(the letter was written by Albert Jantzen)

Note: Brother and Sister Brown brought us the first definite word from our missionaries in the Philippines, but the above letter is the first direct word from them, and it is also good news. Thank the Lord.

CITY VISITATION WORK VERY NECESSAR

"I will bless the Lord at all times, His praise sh continually be in my mouth." How we yearn in th days that all people everywhere should learn to pra God, instead of slaughtering each other as they doing now.

It surely behooves us as children of God to be igent in calling upon God. If only all who profess believe in God would have faith in prayer, but all many have not faith that prayer avails anything. T fail to realize that it is not they who are the po in prayer, but that they would be praying to an mighty God who has all power.

It seems that these terrible times would stir peo and that they would flock to God's house to seek sp itual help, but instead one finds many just as lax indifferent to God as they were before the war. Oh, they would like to see an end to this terrible war, b no, they have no time for God, no not even in a t like this. Many have the "I can't be bothered" a tude. A mother told me just the other day that her wants to sleep on Sunday morning, and she is not ing to try to get her up to come to church. Afte talked with her for a while she promised she wo try, but only in a half-hearted way.

However, we do praise God that there are some are interested and are willing to get their children to come to God's house; we hope and pray that th parents soon will come with their children and bec consecrated Christians.

I made 1,269 calls; distributed some used cloth given for that purpose, also some food, and new cl ing for poor children, paid for by the Sunday Sch from their fund for such needs. And distributed eral hundred pieces of Christian literature.

I had charge of the devotions in our Ladies' and helped make the programs for our women's sionary meetings. Also helped in the sewing we for the Red Cross, City Relief, and Mennonite C tral Committee.

I served as Junior Christian Endeavor superin dent of our church, also was Junior C. E. superin dent of the Eastern District Conference and presi at the Junior C. E. Convention at Lansdale in June

On May twenty-third I took a group of our S day school and Jr. C. E. children to the Philadelp Jr. C. E. Union "Play Day" on Lemon Hill.

Byways of Mennonite History

By C. Henry Smith

THE BLOOD OF THE MARTYRS

No other religious group since the days of Nero has fered such persecution, and in proportion to its nerical strength offered up so many martyrs for sake of religious conscience, as have the Menno- es. During the hundred years following the be- ning of the Reformation period they were tortured, eaded, drowned, and sent to the stake for their gious beliefs; for another hundred they were fined, ed, and hounded from one country to another; and n, finally, it was another full century, the period of French Revolution, that leveller of all religious and ial inequalities, before Mennonites were granted al privileges and rights with other citizens through- Europe. Women as well as men suffered for their h. In fact, the proportion of women martyrs as pared with men is far larger among Mennonites n among any other religious group of the period. e big martyr book contains the story of over one usand Mennonite men and women who suffered un- l torture rather than do violence to their con- nces. And the list is by no means a complete one.

The following story of the torture and exe- ion of Michael Sattler is typical of hundreds others. Michael Sattler, a former monk, join- he Swiss Brethren in Zurich in the early years that movement and became one of the early lers of the religious movement that later be- e the Mennonite church. He was also one he first martyrs of the church. After a brief very active period of service in behalf of his h, a period of only two short years, during ch, however, he had written the first confes- n of faith known among the Mennonites, he arrested in 1527 and soon after put to death he most brutal manner.

His persecuters could find no other charge a- nst him than this, that he had deserted the holic church. The specific complaints were he had denied the Catholic doctrine of the presence, infant baptism, the worship of y and the saints, extreme unction, commun- in one kind; and also that he opposed the ng of the oath and participation in war, and lly, that he "had left the order and taken a ."

inding him guilty on these points, the court ch tried him decreed this sentence, namely, he "shall be delivered to the executioner, shall lead him to the place of execution and out his tongue, and then throw him upon a on, tear his body twice with red hot tongs, after he has been brought within the gate he shall be pinched five times in the same manner."

"After this was done," the Martyrs Mirror continues, "in the manner prescribed, he was burned to ashes as a heretic. His fellow brethren were executed with the sword, and the sisters drowned. His wife also, after being subjected to many entreaties, admonitions and threats, under which she remained very steadfast, was drowned a few days afterwards."

Michael Sattler was a pious and amiable soul whose only fault was that his conscience would not allow him to be a Catholic. Even his bitterest enemy had to confess that he was "a dear friend of God though an Anabaptist."

But why all this bloody persecution and torture, we naturally ask ourselves in these days of supposed religious toleration. These men and women were no criminals. They never stole any property nor harmed any one. They were among the most peaceful, industrious, and pious people of the community, asking for nothing more than the right to worship God as their consciences demanded. Otherwise, they were among the most loyal and law-abiding subjects of the whole realm.

There were a number of reasons. But among others it might be well to remember that persecution seldom came from their neighbors, the common people, but rather from the rulers, especially the clergy, priests, parish clergy, bishops, doctors of philosophy, and other tax-supported and autocratically appointed rulers of religious affairs, with fat salaries and positions of honor and influence, whose economic and social status would be seriously threatened by either a rival state system, or especially by the simple voluntary church organization advocated and practiced by the Mennonites, with their unpaid ministry and popularly controlled church organization.

We need not necessarily charge these rulers with blood lust or special delight at the sight of human suffering. They were fighting for their jobs, as were the Pharisees and Sadducees when they crucified Jesus. Even torture was resorted to, not for the purpose of inflicting pain or as a punishment for the sins of heresy, but rather for the purpose of securing a recantation and restoration to the established church. All through history persecution, both religious and political, has had a strong economic or political basis.

Up to about twenty-five years ago, the time of the first world war, most of us would have said that the age of the martyrs was past, that the world had become too civilized to engage in such atrocities. But recent history has shown us that we were wrong. Bolshevist brutalities within the past twenty-five years, and Nazi barbarism since then, to say nothing about the bombing and butchering of whole masses of innocent civilians, women and children as well as men, even among the so-called civilized nations all over the world is proof sufficient that this thing we call civilization is but a very thin veneer.

Scratch but the surface of our social order, and soon under pressure of selfish interests and allowing free reign to the unbridled elemental passions of human nature, you immediately expose the savage instincts to which human kind so easily reverts in times of great crises.

Human nature after all has not changed much for the better in the last thousand years, and if left to itself without proper direction will not make for higher levels of civilization. It needs the continued motivation of the redemptive love of the Saviour of mankind and the guiding influence of the accumulated wisdom of the ages to make it function for a better world.

We must look to religion and education using that term in its broadest sense, including all the social influences that help to change our ideas, therefore, as the two forces that will lead us to a brighter future. Whatever may happen in the course of events to all our other social institutions, the church and the school at least must ever remain an integral and perpetual part of our social structure. We can never get along without them so long as human kind remains on the earth. Religious education must remain a never ending process. Not any kind of religion, of course, nor just any kind of education, but a religion committed to the basic concepts of the New Testament as found in the Sermon on the Mount, and an educational program that recognizes the sacredness of human personality and which has the courage to supplant the vicious nationalism so prevalent today with the broader doctrine of the universal brotherhood of man and world citizenship. Only then will the kingdom as visualized by Jesus in one of his well known parables becomes a realization——

"The kingdom of heaven is like to the grain of mustard seed, which a man took and sowed in his field:"

"Which indeed is the least of all seeds; but when it is grown, it is the greatest among the herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof."

Has the day of martyrs passed? Would our young people today, or older ones too, for that matter, show the same sublime courage for the preservation of the faith as that shown by their forefathers four centuries ago? I think they would under pressure. A fine example of the sacrificial spirit latent in the hearts of our young Mennonites is found among the two thousand or more young men in the C. P. S. camps, who deliberately chose to minister to the needs of their fellow human beings under the most distressing circumstances, without pay or hope of future reward, against a strong adverse popular opinion, willing to enter any kind of service, no matter how dangerous or difficult, if only it be constructive rather than destructive and in keeping with their religious convictions. And all of this when they might easily and legally have been granted for the mere asking non-combatant service, which offered the maximum of benefits with the minimum of sacrifice and with popular acclaim. This choice takes tremendous courage. It is to this spirit that we must look for the future hope of our faith. Sacrifice is still the price of progress. The Christian spirit is propagated and preserved not by killing, but by dying for it. The blood of the martyrs is still the seed of the church.

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

STRENGTHENING THE RURAL CHURCH

In the ideal Christian community the church is at the center. Among Mennonites this has traditionally been the pattern of community organization. When new communities were started one of the very first buildings erected was a church building, or perhaps a school house which served a double purpose as meeting house and educational center. In the new community the early settlers sought to locate as close to church and school buildings as possible. As the community grew settlement was pushed farther and farther out on the fringes of the local parish. In time a second meeting house was erected. It gradually became the center of a new community social and religious life, and the growing process was demonstrated all over again.

What Has Happened?

If one observes carefully the situation in his own community he may find that the church is no longer the center. Every pastor should have a spot map of the members of his congregation. If he doesn't have one he can easily make one. With the use of a road map he can quickly draw the main roads of his parish. On these roads he can spot the location of the homes of his members. With this done it is easy to see how far the members are scattered, at what distance they live from the church, whether the church is centrally located and many other valuable points of significance regarding the church. Many Mennonite ministers who take the time to do this will discover that their church is no longer the center of the community, that the members do not live close to the church and that in fact there is only a weak shell where once was a strong, solid, closely settled body of common believers that formed a religious community.

What Can Be Done?

A mere discovery of the true facts in the situation will not solve the problem, but it will be a start in the right direction. It will give a clue to the answer to many problems. Two churches come to my mind where such is the case. As old Mennonite farmers retired or died the farms gradually passed into the hands of non-Mennonites. Young Mennonites found jobs in the cities or bought farms at a distance. This situation can be remedied. In our local churches members ought to make it a common concern to help prospective young farmers find a farm in the local area. Instead of old people selling their farms to the highest bidder they might be taught to be concerned with the future welfare of the church and sell their farms to fellow-church members. It would be a legitimate concern of home mission boards to see that local churches remain strong and vigorous as well as to come to the rescue of small struggling ones that have become dependent.

C.P.S. Camps

A New Type of Service has been provided for C.P.S. men in the opening up of a project for dairy artificial insemination. The project will be conducted in Lancaster and York Counties, Pennsylvania.

PEACE SECTION NOTES

"What If They Say....?"

"The Bible contains contradictory teachings on the matter of war and non-resistance." "The Sermon on the Mount is not intended for Christians today." "Jesus' teachings on non-resistance are limited to personal relations." "According to Romans 13:1-7 and I Peter 2:13-17, Christians should submit to government and render military service." "Non-resistant people are parasites on society who return nothing for what society gives them."

These statements and fifty others that the non-resistant Christian must be prepared to answer are answered in the booklet, "Must Christians Fight?" published by the Peace Section of the Mennonite Central Committee. The booklet may be obtained by ordering from the E. V. Publishing House, 301 N. Elm Street, Nappanee, Indiana, or from the M.C.C. Akron, Pennsylvania. Price, $ .20 per copy, or $ .15 each for ten to one hundred copies, and $ .10 per copy for orders of a hundred or more.

THE SCHWEITZER C.O. CASE

attorney. The climax apparently came at the question:

"What would you tell a student who came to you to ask whether it was right to bear arms?"

To this Schweitzer replied:

"I would tell him that when he grew old enough, the experience he had would have to determine his answer."

The answer brought a chorus of cheers from the audience and the hearing was immediately turned into an open forum with parents, Legion members, clergymen and spectators alternately praising and denouncing him. When the meeting was officially closed, it was 15 minutes before order could be restored.

The School Board Decision

About three weeks later, the School Board handed down its decision that Schweitzer should be removed. Its resolution declared that his conduct and attitude were "wholly inimical to the ideals of citizenship" and that he had "become and now is incapable and incompetent longer to perform his full duty as a teacher or dean."

—The Reporter

Editor's note: Mr. Schweitzer took the case to court after the school board decision. A Florida circuit court has now ordered Schweitzer to be reinstated in his position. The school authorities in question state that they will take the case to the Supreme Court if necessary.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Rev. Howard Raid, Fortuna, Missouri

JANUARY 17—"Harken: Behold there went out a sower to sow." Mark 4:3

Jesus is the Master of teaching methods. Note He starts out with the word "Harken" for He knows that He must get the people's attention before they will actually hear what He has to say. Then He uses the word "Behold." At the word "Harken" they stopped to listen, and at the word "Behold" they focused their complete attention upon what Jesus had to say.

JANUARY 18—" . . . but to them that are without, all these things are done in parables. Mark 4:11

The Master illustrated His great truths by telling a simple story with an every day background. He knew that if He tried to tell the truth in abstract terms none would understand it. But if He used an illustration they could understand; then the ones who were willing to think for themselves would be able to apply this truth and thereby gain the needed light. The lazy-minded would not apply it, but they might repeat the story to others as a good story, and still miss the truth behind it, seeing but not perceiving.

JANUARY 19—"The Sower Soweth the Word." Mark 4:14

Sometimes it seems that we are glad for this interpretation of the parable by Jesus, for it allows us to say to ourselves, "Well, I can not do any more, I am only able to produce thirty fold. There is no need for me to try and produce any more than this. I am doing the best that I can." Jesus said that it was not only the kind of soil but the condition that it is kept in that is also important. We cannot control the kind of inheritance that we have, but we can control what we do with it. We cannot stop the birds from flying over head, but we can keep them from nesting in our hair.

JANUARY 20—"For he that hath, to him shall be given: and he that hath not, from him shall be taken that which he hath." Mark 4:25

This is the law that is written into all of life, physically, mentally, and spiritually. In the physical realm it is called the law of "use and disuse." If we would possess the things that we have we must do two things: first we must appreciate them, and second we must use them. The sunset belongs to all of us, yet only those who take time to look at it really possess it. We may buy the finest Bible in the world, but if we do not use it we will lose the knowledge that is in it.

JANUARY 21—" . . . Whereunto shall we liken the Kingdom of God? . . . . it is like a grain of mustard seed." Mark 4:30, 31

Jesus compares the Kingdom to things which are familiar to His people. First it is small but has life so it can grow; it becomes large, it has many branches, it depends upon the soil in which it is sown for food and strength, it stands by itself, it is useful internally as an herb and externally as a shelter, it lives in the world that surrounds it, and its seeds reproduce like it. So it is with the Kingdom.

JANUARY 22—"But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour." II Peter 3:18

O God, we thank Thee for Thine unrationed grace. May we use it more and share it with others, knowing that in so doing we increase it in ourselves. Help us this day to so live that our lives may radiate Thy goodness, mercy, sympathy, and understanding. For Thy name's sake we ask it. Amen.

JANUARY 23—"Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy Law." Psalms 119:34

What a change understanding could make in our world today, understanding in the family circle, understanding in the church, understanding in the school, understanding in the state, in the nation, among nations, and understanding of the Kingdom of God. If we would take time to understand all of our relationships in the light of the laws of God we would be able to live in harmony with all people of all races. We would not be swayed by the propaganda stories of today, for we would understand that all men are made in the image of God, and for that reason, if for no other, we would treat them as brothers and thereby keep the laws of God, and bring His Kingdom to come upon earth.

RELIEF NOTES

Relief Worker for England Appointed

Additional workers are being secured for the work there. Glen R. Miller professor at Goshen College, has been appointed to serve for one year. He will leave in January. Two nurses, one from Canada and one from United States, are yet to be appointed.

Philadelphia Research Center

A busy place in Philadelphia is the Research Center located at 4035 Spruce Street. M. C. Lehman has his office at this place from which he contacts the C.P.S. Relief Training Units at Duke University Hospital, Durham, North Carolina; Howard, Rhode Island; and Polk County, Florida. Brother Lehman provides instruction and study materials for these units. Carl Kreider from Goshen College has the same responsibility in connection with the training units at Ypsilanti, Michigan, and Alexian Brothers Hospital, Chicago, Illinois.

In addition to his work with the relief training units, Brother Lehman is preparing a booklet on the history, program, and philosophy of M.C.C. as a relief agency. John E. Bender of the same office is preparing an area study booklet on Paraguay. These booklets are to be used in relief training.

Pulls 608 Teeth in Four and One-half Days

Record Set by Dr. Klassen in Paraguay

Pulling 608 teeth from 254 people in four and one-half days— that is the record reported by Dr. G. S. Klassen from the Friesland colony in Paraguay in a letter written from the Philadelphia colony on November 25 to relatives here. According to the letter "the people have terribly bad teeth. It is nothing unusual to find a dozen or more bad teeth . . .Many have only two to six teeth in all."

Speaking of the Indians who live around the Fernheim colony Dr. Klassen says that they are very peaceful, honest, and friendly. "And the funny part," he remarks, "is that they practically all speak Low German." Since Dr. Klassen relates many other interesting facts about their experiences and about conditions in the colonies we quote highlights from the letter.

Celebrate Thanksgiving Day

"Today is Thanksgiving day here for us also. We are six workers from the States here at the present time. Besides us there are Dr. and Mrs. John Schmidt and two young men, Mr. Geigley and Mr. Vernon Schmidt. The six of us are having a duck dinner tonight. Viola is personally fixing two ducks for us all. Fruit is rather scarce here at this time of the year. But there is some wild fruit in the jungle; we also get some lemons of which we make a strong lemonade. We once in a while buy some canned fruit, but that is about twice as high in price as at home. The people here eat a lot of baked stuff. They should eat more vegetables and fruit. A little later there will be lots of oranges, tangerines, lemons, grapefruit, and grapes. The trees are full of green fruit. They cannot raise potatoes here, only sweet potatoes. I never realized just how much I could miss them. They have had very much rain here in the two weeks that we have been here, so they are looking for good crops in cotton, kafir corn, etc. Almost every day we get bread baked of kafir flour mostly. It is good, but not as good as the good old rye bread at home. They say for Christmas we will have lots of watermelons. You know it is spring here and we will soon have green beans from the garden.

My office is in one end of the hospital in one large room which we have partitioned. There was no furniture or equipment. But they have very good carpenters, so I drew the plans and had them make a dental chair, cabinet, cuspidor, wash stand, sterilizing table. The instruments we sterilize above a small gasoline stove, and it works very well. In Friesland the girl had to carry the instruments outside to a summer kitchen and boil them on a mud stove, "sporhead," as we used to call them. The chair is made so that it can be raised and lowered, also tilted back. Everything is made of good cedar wood. At the present time I have only the extracting instruments along, all the other things, also the material for making dentures, is coming on the steamer. We hope it comes soon because there is lots to do here. I am also supposed to train a few men to make dentures and extractions.

Must tell you a little about our driving in a wagon. To go to Friesland we stepped off the ship on a mud bank at a small Paraguayan village. From here the Mennonites took us in a wagon, 32 miles, to the colony. We made this in one day's driving. Believe me, to sit in a wagon without springs for eleven hours is interesting. In the whole stretch was not even one mile of graded road, at many places only a narrow path through the jungle. We were always watching for limbs or branches of trees that might hit us on the head. At one place we drove in water for more than two miles. At some places we would almost upset. But here to Fernheim from the end station railroad, 70 miles it took two days. The second day it rained all day.

It is rather difficult to imagine all this, but very likely by the time you get this letter it will be Christmas, so we wish you a merry Christmas.

Fret Not Yourself Because of Evil

By Karl Baehr

"O God, in despair I cry unto Thee
I can no longer dream of man's goodness or of Thy power!
My spirit has drained away, leaving my soul lifeless—a victim of the unquenchable fire of evil.
The world is in the throes of death; night is ruler of the day;
Goodness and mercy are lost; love is a hollow mockery—unrealistic—an impracticable ideal.
How then can justice and love ever cast a canopy of peace over the earth?
How can the cross of Christ win an enduring brotherhood?

"My despondency is complete, O God.
I had hoped that the Christ would redeem the world; that he would draw all men unto himself;
But death, in a thousand garbs, is trampling upon mankind:
Bombs and bullets are violently tearing flesh and bone;
Starvation is slowly absorbing the bodies of millions;
Disease is invading weakened bodies, leaving them lifeless.
Is there a Messiah who can raise out of this destruction the abundant life?

"My weakness, O God, overwhelms me.
In the night I cry for forgiveness and love to fill the hearts of men;
I plead for a rebirth of conscientiousness and the spirit of reconciliation.
But the sound of my voice is lost—not even the echo is released by the devils of the night.
I am pitied as a duped idealist and a sentimental dreamer.
When, O God, will Thy prophets be heard and their words be respectfully heeded?
When will Thy creation lend an ear to Thy voice?"

(Then, exhausted by my outburst of despair,
My wretched body and destitute soul surrendered to sleep.
In the depth of that sleep the almighty God covered me with His presence.
I could not see Him, nor could I hear His voice;
I only felt the inrush of His wisdom and power.
My faith was rebuilt and my zeal rekindled.
My thoughts turned inward, and I found my lips echoing the voice of God.)

> "Rise, my soul. You were deluded by the world's mad race.
> You staked the greatness of God on this crushing hour and abdicated your faith.
> Time, you know, is but the rising and the setting of the sun;
> It is the succession of generations, the march of events, the thrust of life within eternity;
> It is the symbol of restlessness, of fleeting ambitions, and tired hearts;
> It is the noise of today battling the stuff of eternity;
> It is the rain of divine patience on proud and arrogant man.

"Be still, my soul; the universe belongs to God.
You have been a slave to the idea that man must inevitably progress toward perfection;
You have dreamed that the triumph of God in the universe is in the hands of man.
Though evil be in the saddle, it cannot win the race—
Be not deceived; God has overcome the world.
Christ, who still atones for evil with forgiveness, love, and immortal life, rescues man out of destruction.
Progress is the continuous overcoming of evil with good.

> "Raise your voice, my soul, and speak patiently of truth and love.
> Work for justice and righteousness without binding your will to the necessity of liquidating evil—
> For the creative conquest of ever-present evil lies in doing justly, loving mercy, and forgiving abundantly.
> Good is discovered in lifting up the fallen, healing the broken-hearted, and chastening the spiritually dead;
> Truth and love are latent within conflict and in each recurring crises:
> For good is not a static fact, nor an isle of blessedness, but the glory of resolved evil.
> Good is everlastingly rescued out of defeat, despair, and a cross."

CORRESPONDENCE

HEBRON MENNONITE CHURCH

Buhler, Kansas

The three mission societies—the Mission Workers, the Candlelighters, and the Helping Hands—of the Hebron Mennonite Church (Buhler, Kansas) had their annual mission sale in November and realized $1,332.75. This sum is to be used for such items as India Relief, Leper Hospital, the retired Missionary Pension Fund, Civilian Public Service camps, Paraguay hospital needs, etc. Mrs. P. A. Penner was our guest speaker and gave a very illuminating and challenging talk.

The Helping Hands—a high school age group of girls—had Rev. J. M. Regier speak to them on "Home Mission Work in Mexico" for their October meeting. They invited the rest of the Hebronites and their friends to be their guests. It was a good and profitable meeting. At another of their monthly meetings they had Mrs. John Suderman from Oraibi, Arizona, address them on "Mission work in Arizona" and we all learned many things of interest.

Two of our C.P.S. boys were able to spend a Thanksgiving furlough with home folks. From here they left for detached service in a mental hospital in Kalamazoo, Michigan. They were Austin Regier and Ervin Siemens of Fort Collins, Colorado. Another one of our C.P.S. boys, John Lohrentz of Lapine, Oregon, was home on furlough earlier in the fall.

In December our church adopted the Hundred Percent Subscription Plan, and the members of the Mission Societies are busy canvassing the new and old subscribers with satisfactory results. We do need to feed our souls, not only our bodies, if we want to live spiritually.

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Berne, Indiana

This morning, December 30, this church bade goodbye to their pastor and his wife, Dr. and Mrs. Suckau, as they left for their new field of labor in Omaha, Nebraska. On Sunday morning December 19, the church gave them a cash love offering, which with what has come in since from such that could not be present amounted to over $1,200. On Sunday, December 26, Dr. Suckau preached his final sermon. This was a communion service, at which time three young men and women were baptized and taken into church membership. In the evening a farewell service was held for the paster and wife, arranged by the Board of Deacons. Brief words of appreciation and farewell were spoken by representatives of the various organizations of the church. Dr. and Mrs. Suckau each also spoke briefly. At the close, the 121st Psalm was beautifully rendered in song by the Men's Chorus.

We are grateful for the ministry of these dear people among us. Our prayers, good-will, and well wishes go with them as they enter upon their new work. As we think over their ministry here, we feel led to give recognition to two special phases of their ministry which stand out prominently, namely, the faithful, uncompromising preaching of the Word by the Pastor, and the sympathetic ministry of both Dr. and Mrs. Suckau among the sick and bereaved of the congregation. This will ever be cherished among the memories of their ministry here. May God richly reward them.

It may be of interest to some to know that during the fifteen years of his pastorate here, Dr. Suckau preached approximately 800 sermons, baptized 574 persons, united 169 couples in marriage, and conducted 184 funerals.

Rev. and Mrs. J. P. Suderman, who are at present on leave from their work among the American Indians, are expected here this evening to take up the work temporarily until a new pastor is secured. We bid them welcome into our midst and trust that our ministry together will be one of rich blessing.

EMMANUEL MENNONITE CHURCH

Delft, Minnesota

People have been taking inventories of their lives for the sake of improving them in the new year. May Christians realize that this should be an everyday matter. Let us confess our short-comings and receive God's cleansing.

Our church had a time of soul-feeding the first twelve days of December. The Rev. Erwin R. Wedel conducted evening services. He came to us from Jasper, Alabama, where he and his wife work among neglected negroes, bringing them God's Word. Mr. Wedel is a very efficient children's worker. Each evening he illustrated a Bible story on flannelgraph. The children learned many choruses and Bible verses. Object lessons were used to make more vivid the truths of the Bible. While he ministered to the children, the adults were also strengthened in the faith. The necessity of prayer was definitely stressed throughout the services. If Christians would only realize the value of prayer. We thank God that souls came to the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The young people enjoyed a social on the evening of December 26. After the recreational period we sang for some of our old people. Later we gathered around a table to sing familiar Christmas carols.

Prayer services are scheduled for the first few evenings of the new year. May we make this year count definitely for God.—Corr.

GRACE MENNONITE CHURCH

The Grace Mennonite Church of Pandora, Ohio raised $1100.00 for missionary purposes during the Thanksgiving season, $700 of which was raised during the Thanksgiving morning service and $400 through a sale of harvest products, baked goods, and handmade articles. We felt especially privileged in having Harvey and Ella Bauman, who have served two terms in India, with us for the Thanksgiving service. Both brought inspiring messages.

The Sunday following a special communion service was held remembering the young men absent from us in the C.P.S. camps and in the armed forces.

The ladies of the church recently held their annual mother-daughter banquet in which all the women and girls of the church participated. Mrs. Clayton Steiner, a local missionary to Peru, gave the address.

The Sunday School has organized an orchestra which greatly assists in the service.

The pastor, Rev. Forrest Musser, has started a series of prayer services on the subject "Men Who Spoke for God."

MENNONITE BIBLE ACADEMY

North Newton, Kansas

Greetings to the Editor and Readers of The Mennonite:

By the fourteenth of this month the Mennonite Bible Academy will have finished its first semester of work. Has the effort that has been set forth to make this school possible been worth while? On Monday morning, January 3, the first day after a two-weeks vacation, the teachers were greeted by some forty happy students that were glad to be back in school. This gave the teachers a feeling of satisfaction that the Academy is not in vain and that it is worthwhile to exert greater effort to build it up and have the school help fill a vital need in our Church.

We need Christian workers in our Church and in our country. That the Academy may do its share in supplying this need, the school works toward a definite religious experience by the students which will enable them to go into the various communities and take their rightful places in the activities of the Church.

At this time the Academy would like to extend an invitation to those that plan on going to high school the second semester, as we are giving a full four-year course plus a required Bible subject for each year.

Cordially yours,
Theodore Schmidt, Principal

IN MEMORIAM

HENRY F. GRABER, son of Peter J. P. and Freni Schrag Graber, was born on July 12, 1899, near Freeman, South Dakota, and died November 24, 1943, at the home of his parents where he had lived all his life. Death came after thirty years of suffering. He was baptized by Rev. C. Hege and became a member of the Salem Church. He is survived by his parents; two sisters, Ella and Tille; five brothers, Jonathan, Edwin, John, Paul, and Felix.

LYDIA MILLER HIRSCHLER, daughter of Jacob and Eugenia Miller, was born on December 29, 1901, near Hanston, Kansas, and died December 16, 1943. In 1934 she was married to Menno Hirschler. One child, Thelma Ann, was born to this marriage. She and her husband first lived at Burrton, Kansas. In 1936 they moved to their farm near Hanston. Lydia Miller Hirschler was baptized in 1917 by Rev. Christian Hirschler and received into the membership of the Hanston Mennonite Church, of which she was a member at the time of her death.

DORA BARTEL LINSCHEID, daughter of George A. Bartel and Susan Unruh Bartel, was born on April 11, 1901, at Hillsboro, Kansas, and died November 16, 1943. With her parents she moved to Aberdeen, Idaho, in 1906. She was baptized and accepted into the Mennonite Church in 1915. She founded the True Blue Mission Society of the Aberdeen Church. In 1922 she was graduated from the Bible Institute of Los Angeles. Following two years of training at Bethel College she taught school in Aberdeen. In 1926 she was married to Marvin D. Linscheid. To this union was born one daughter LaVerne, who now with her father mourns the departed.

R. MENDELSSOHN AMSTUTZ, son of Peter D. and Helena Steiner Amstutz, died at Pandora, Ohio, November 16, 1943, at the age of forty-nine after a lengthy illness of cardia asthma. He is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Melvina Burry of Pandora, and Mrs. Hilda Thomas of Chatham, New Jersey. Mr. Amstutz was a graduate of Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa. He also completed a theological course at Dallas Theological Seminary, Dallas, Texas.

ANDREW STEFFEN, twenty-seven, Pandora, Ohio, was killed in action in the southwest Pacific in July. He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Steffen; four sisters, Nellie of Dayton, Mrs. Bessie Green of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Mrs. Arlene Snare of Chesterland, and Ruth at home; and four brothers, Willis, Leonard, and Harry in the navy, and John at home.

LINFORD FOULKE, son of Charles and Anna (nee Heacock) was born in Richland Township, Pa., December 21, 1872, and died November 28, 1943. He married Mary C. Gerhart in 1900. He was ordained to the ministry at the Saucon Mennonite Church in 1915 by Elder H. W. Shelly. Brother Foulke served the Saucon Church for seventeen years. In 1932 he was received into the membership of the East Swamp Mennonite Church.

ANDREW T. WEDEL, son of Rev. T. P. and Eva Wedel, was born December 16, 1878, in McPherson County, Kansas. He was baptized in 1897 by Peter Balzer and received into the Canton Mennonite Church near Moundridge. Later he joined the New Hopedale Mennonite Church north of Ringwood, Oklahoma. In 1900 he married Elizabeth Unruh. He died November 20, 1943.

MARGARET EPP, daughter of Jacob and Marie Wiebe, was born on December 4, 1873, at Herrenhagen, West Prussia. She received elementary schooling by private instruction in the home of her parents. In 1888 she came to Beatrice, Nebraska, with her parents. She was baptized by Elder Gerhard Penner and received into the Mennonite Church in 1890. In 1897 she was married to Abraham Epp. She died December 25, 1943.

City Visitation Work Very Necessary

I had 125 children enrolled for the vacation Bible school before the school opened. Over eighty of these attended our school. During the school I had charge of the Primary Department.

I served as Girls' Counsellor at the High School Retreat, and also at the Young People's Retreat in July.

At the request of the Second Mennonite church I also made a number of calls for them during the year.

Some new people, both children and adults, have been coming to Sunday School and other services, as a result of my humble efforts.

—Bethesda Mennonite Church, Henderson, Nebraska: The Young Women's Mission Society is beginning a series of studies on Latin America with special programs on Paraguay and Puerto Rico. The reporter says, "With fellow Mennonites in both of these countries we are certain that these programs will be interesting. . . .Also we hope that they will inform our members as to what has been done and what should be done as far as Christianity is concerned in South America. Our Conference is making investigations as to establishing a mission in South America. Our interest in the undertaking will depend to a great extent on the knowledge we have in this work." The membership of the Bethesda Church is now 831 which makes it the third largest in the conference.

—Married: Arnold A. Fast and Adeline Becker. Brother Fast is in charge of the mission work in Toronto, Canada, that is being sponsored by the Home Mission Board of the General Conference. The couple will be at home at 15 Laws Street, Toronto.

—Married: Malcolm Wenger and Esther Baehr. Brother Wenger has already spent some time on our General Conference mission field in Montana. According to present plans he and his wife will serve this field for our Foreign Mission Board in the future. Both are now studying at Bethel College.

—The Federal Bureau of Investigation has checked up on 10,094 registrants who claimed to be conscientious objectors, according to the Department of Justice. There were 6,685 men in C.P.S. as of November 30, 1943.—The Reporter.

—Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas: Rev. Walter Gering left on January 4 for Freeman, South Dakota to attend the funeral of his grandmother. The father of Rev. Walter Gering was operated recently, but according to latest reports is recovering satisfactorily.

—Peter W. Goering, who was ordained to the ministry on December 26, is serving the Methodist churches at Barnes and Lynn, Kansas, alternating at these two places. Brother and Sister Goering are both teaching in the Barnes high school.—Upon the death of one of its members one of the women's Sunday School classes gave twenty-nine dollars to M.C.C. relief in honor of the deceased.

—New orders for about 2,500 copies of the German Sunday School quarterly, Sonntagschul-Lektionen, have recently come to the Mennonite Publication Office. The total orders for this quarterly now run over the 10,000 mark. It is the only German quarterly published by our conference. C. H. A. van der Smissen was editor of it for many years. He has now retired and Rev. J. M. Regier is the new editor of it. The "Old" Mennonites have stopped publishing their German quarterly.

—No deacon for sixty years. That is the history of the Zion Mennonite Church, Elbing, Kansas. It has, however, had a board of trustees. Now recently at its annual meeting the congregation decided to have a deacon and elected J. L. Regier to that position.

—Orders for copies of Must Christians Fight are coming in from various places to the undersigned. If you do not have a copy of this booklet, write for it today. Have an answer for that member in your church who says, 'We must fight, for the Bible says that there shall be wars and rumours of war." Those in the Western District may order from Reynold Weinbrenner, North Newton, Kansas. Those in other districts should be able to get copies of the booklet from their peace committees.

—A C.O. teacher in Miami, Florida, was ousted from his job by the school board last September upon charges of incompetency. This charge seems to have been based solely on the fact that he was a C.O. However, this C.O., Schweitzer by name, was praised by his superior as an excellent teacher. Now a Florida circuit court has ordered the county board of public instruction to reinstate Schweitzer as science teacher and dean of boys in the junior high school in question.

—C.O.'s are among the "most reliable workers" ever employed in mental institutions. So declares Dr. George S. Stevenson, executive-secretary of the National Committee for Mental Hygiene. "They have a definite, sympathetic feeling for people under their care," he reported. By November 30, a total of 1,166 C.O.'s were working in mental hospitals. This number has, undoubtedly, been considerably enlarged by this time.

—The Mennoville Mennonite Church, north of El Reno, Oklahoma, commemorated its fiftieth anniversary on November 28. A large number attended. Many old friends got to see each other and to call to mind experiences of long ago.

—War Restrictions Affect The Mennonite: Due to government restrictions on the paper supply, this paper will appear once a month with fewer than the regular number of pages. However, through the use of different type we hope to bring to our readers practically the same amount of material that they have received heretofore.

—Otto Hirschler, who is organist of the Wilshire Christian Church of Los Angeles, gave an organ recital to the First Mennonite Church of Upland on January 9. —Decide to vote for pastor every three years: This was the decision of the First Mennonite Church of Berne at its business meeting held recently. The decision resulted in a change of the church constitution.—A commmittee is to see to the landscaping of the church and parsonage grounds.

—C. E. Banquet of Eden Mennonite Church: The annual C.E. banquet was held with a large group of young people attending. Professor Bernhard Bargen of Bethel College was the main speaker. There were also short talks by members of the C.E.

—Rev. P. H. Richert, Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board, recently attended the Foreign Missions Conference held in Chicago. Rev. A. E. Kreider, another member of the board, also attended. On the way home Brother Richert visited the C.O. unit at Ypsilanti, Michigan. The Mennonite Church at Madrid, Nebraska, has invited Brother Richert to hold services there during the last week in January. Brother Alvin Fast is pastor of the church.

EASTERN DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Bethel, Perkasie—Stereopticon views of the birth and boyhood of Jesus were presented during the Christmas program. The Sunday School is sponsoring an attendance contest during the first quarter of 1944. Any one bringing eight visitors to Sunday School will receive a $5.00 Bible and any one bringing four visitors during the quarter will receive a Testament valued at $2.75.

Springfield—Several of the members assisted in the Christmas program in the Perkasie Church. The pastor of the Perkasie—Springfield Charge, the Rev. Ward W. Shelly, is calling attention to the importance of subscribing to The Mennonite.

Eden, Schwenksville—At a recent service the offerings for the Mennonite Central Committee amounted to approximately $250. The annual congregational meeting was held on January 1 at seven o'clock in the evening so that more members might attend.

—Deep Run—The C. E. Relief Project was brought to a successful close Sunday December 12, with the offering amounting to $211.03. The young people of the church planned to spend Saturday, January 8, at Men-O-Lan to begin the construction of their cabin at the Retreat Grounds.

Souderton—Dr. J. E. Hartzler, pastor, is delivering a series of lectures at the Sunday evening services. The themes for January are: 2, "Life, What does it Mean?," 9, "The Land and the Book," 16, "Palestine and The Jews," 23, "Divine Revelation," and 30, "The Authority of Jesus."

First, Phila.—In a recent church bulletin, the pastor, the Rev. J. J. Plenert, inserted the following, "Tithing Does it! It gives churches confidence. It convinces men and women that it is more blessed to give than to receive. It creates a new race of Christians who put God and His Kingdom FIRST in their lives. It means adequately paid pastors, renovated buildings, rebuilt organs, improved Sunday School, more missionaries, better colleges, and more self respect."

Fairfield—The Closing Union Vesper Service was held on Sunday evening December 19. The joint choirs presented a Cantata. There were ten members from our church in the Choir.

—Howard G. Nyce, Conf. Corr.

Dairy Herd Improvement Units in Pennsylvania and Michigan will be increased by seven and eight men respectively. C.P.S. men serving in these units have been doing a good job and as a whole are pleased with the opportunity to do this type of work.

Primary Bible Story Book

Some time ago we raised the question in this paper as to whether our conference should produce a Primary Bible Story Book. Several helpful replies came in answer. Below we present a letter received from Brother Menno Schrag, Superintendent of the First Mennonite Sunday School, Newton, Kansas:

Dear Brother Weinbrenner:

Finally I am getting around to write you about your timely question in The Mennonite, "Shall we Provide a Bible Story Book?" If I am rather free in expressing my opinions, I assure you it is in a brotherly spirit and with a prayer that the suggestions might be constructive.

I feel that the arrangement in our Sunday Schools as far as lesson material is concerned is so completely out of line that it is almost a tragedy. In our public schools it is the children which are being educated; it is for them that graded courses, scientifically arranged and prepared at tremendous cost, are outlined by specialists in the educational field. Can the Christian church bring any less care or talent to the teaching of the Sacred Scriptures?

It seems to me our entire program for the Sunday School is an inverted pyramid. I have frequently said that in case our conference does not have the funds to publish material both for children and adults, it would be far better to omit the Senior Quarterlies, and let the Bible be the only text-book for adults, but use the available funds to publish first-class graded material for the children. This material should be Scriptural, true to the Bible, but also pedagogically correct. It should be in accordance with our particular Mennonite doctrines, designed for our own pupils.

Many of our problems today can be traced back to the fact that we have no program for the systematic training of our youth, children from six to twelve, in our Sunday Schools. May the Lord lead our conference to definite action, for the salvation of our youth and for His glory."

IT'S LOVE

"If you would try to sum up all the Old Testament in one word, I would suggest the word, righteousness. If you would try a similar summary with the New Testament, I would say without question love. And this Christian love says to the agony of the world: you must break men's hearts with Divine love. You must break men's hearts instead of men's heads. If God's love shines through you clearly enough it will work miracles." —Donovan Smucker

Oklahoma Convention Plans Extensive Program

The Church Worker's Committee of the Oklahoma Convention plans to promote the following activities in 1944:

I. Young People's Retreat: Possible places, time, theme, and leaders have been discussed. Oklahoma ministers will serve as leaders in order to save expenses.

II. Church Leaders' Conference: This is to replace the Oklahoma Ministers' Conference and is to include minister's wives and Sunday School superintendents. The program of this conference will include: Morning, Bible study and one theme. Afternoon, discussion of practical problems. For the discussion the conference is to meet in these three groups: ministers, Sunday School superintendents, and ministers' wives. Each is to discuss problems relating to its work. Evening, open to the public. This conference is to be held in February if possible.

III. Youth Conferences: Christian youth conferences are to be held for the Oklahoma churches with members of the Church Worker's Committee acting as leaders. The following schedule was agreed upon:

Brother R. Schmidt, Carnegie, is to be the leader for the churches of Inola, Goltry, Meno, Gotebo, and Taloga.

Brother Lubin Jantzen is to lead for Enid, Geary, Medford, Deer Creek, and Carnegie.

Brother H. N. Harder is to be the leader at Hydro, Orienta, Turpin, Bergtal, and Herold-Sychar.

The Worker's Committee is asking each minister, minister's wife, and Sunday School superintendent to send in a topic or a problem that they would like to have included in the discussion of a particular group.

Members of the Church Worker's Committee are the brethren: Rudolph Schmidt, Lubin Jantzen, and Henry Harder. The last named is secretary.

Every Man His Own Priest

Is the Christian of today, perhaps, somewhat careless about the opportunity of being his own priest? Does he depend too much upon the performances of religious specialists, such as the minister, the Sunday School teacher, etc., while neglecting opportunities for direct, personal communion with God, his Heavenly Father? Does he spend more time and energy regularly in group worship than in "enter into thy closet" worship?

Before the days of Jesus, and even into his time, the priest in the temple was a significant factor in the spiritual life of the people. However, we do not find Jesus urging the people to rely upon the performances of the priest. He declared unto them a loving Father in heaven, who wants men to be his children. The child-father relationship suggests a very direct and personal fellowship.

Many in the early, Apostolic Church undoubtedly experienced the glories of such a relationship. Then arose the Catholic Church with all its intricate machinery for salvation. Priests again officiated in elaborate edifices. The Word of God was lost to the masses. The individual Christian felt dependent upon those who professed to have the keys to heaven and hell.

The Reformation cut the cords that were choking the individual and left him free to do his own praying to God, his own reading of God's Word, and his own meditation upon it. A surge of spirituality swept Europe as men and women learned to know their heavenly Father better and began to approach him as children approach their father.

Time swept on from the slow sixteenth century to the twentieth with its airplane speed. The ordinary Protestant Christian still has the opportunity to be his own priest. But the monster Hurry Hurry seeks to block the Christian in his personal, direct approach to God. This modern monster succeeds in many cases; there is no searching, unhurried meditation upon the scriptures and no refreshing heart-to-heart talk with God at the beginning of each day. Many Christians depend nearly entirely upon organized public worship. "Let the religious specialists do the meditating and the communing for us," they seem to say. For others there is a family altar. But even there much may glide off the individual's heart like water glides from a duck's back.

It takes time and effort to fellowship richly with God. A happy, helpful personal relationship with God can be entered into; by giving God a chance to talk to us in an unhurried reading of His Word—a reading that honors God by seeking to discover His will for the purpose of doing it,—by that kind of meditation that permits him to put our thought and feeling house into order for the day, and by praying to Him with a surrendered heart. "Enter into thy closet," that is, do it all alone.

We need to make more of our group worship services. We pray too little for them and too many of our members do not attend them regularly enough. However, it seems true that today we stand in greater danger of neglecting our own personal worship services. On the Sabbath day Jesus went into the synagogue as his custom was. But who would say that this was more important to Jesus than those early morning periods of prayer that seemed to have meant so much to Him? Do we give the same proportion of time and energy to these two types of services that Jesus did? If we do not and if we feel spiritually weak at the same time, the solution is evident. Every man his own priest! That is an opportunity not to be ignored.

"And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed."

A CHALLENGE

How often one hears and reads about the blessings that humanity will reap from wars. Even churches have repeatedly stressed the fact that this war is producing many earnest Christians, that young men and women are led to Christ through their war experiences. To some the statement made by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt before the Columbia Institute of Arts and Sciences on January 3, as reported by the Associated Press, may come as somewhat of a shock. She is reported to have said: "Boys of 18 or 19 have seen death so often, they believe life is very cheap. They have learned what organized force will do and have lost their regard for human life." She further stated that the treachery of the enemy had caused American fighting men to lose their belief in "the fair and square thing," and that trustfulness was "gone from the top admiral down to the youngest private." "It is important," she added, "for all of us to make an effort to understand all these boys are going through."

In view of the fact that Mrs. Roosevelt has recently spent some time among the boys on the battle fronts, her statement may well give us reason to pause. When we try to understand the boys she suggests, and we must do this, may we not forget that many of these boys were sent into this environment of death and destruction, not only with the consent of many churches, but even with the urgency and blessing of a righteous crusade. Let us hope that no Mennonite church will have the necessity of repentance when the full effects of the war become fully evident.

Having just returned from the annual meeting of the M.C.C. one cannot be thankful enough to God that in His infinite wisdom and benevolence, He has opened avenues of service and sacrifice to our church where the Christian spirit of love and mercy can still find effective expression. May this spirit not only be kept alive, but may it be enriched and deepened for a still greater witness to the power of a Christ-given love. Should our church fail at such a crucial moment, it might indeed be said that our martyr forefathers had largely died in vain. But judging from the support given to our constructive program by the many churches, they have not died in vain. May we hand on that glorious heritage!

Sunday in a Country Church

By Myrtle Wasser

As the dawn breaks upon a warm Sabbath morn- ; in summer in southeastern Pennsylvania, it re- ıls a red brick church with white shutters located the country. Tall trees with spreading branches d green leaves, birds with their many songs, and d flowers give to the church the surroundings which : evidence of the handiwork of God.

People in cars begin to arrive. They come in fam- s from the baby to the grandparent and remain both services. Very few families live near the ırch. Previous to entering the church people greet h other in a friendly manner.

Having been built in 1849, this simple church build- ; of one story today stands in its original with the eption of some changes in the inside of the church. has served as a place of worship for nearly a cen- y. An inscription under the eave of the church tes that it was formerly known as the "Mennonite iety of Deep Run and Plumstead." The present tor is the sixth to serve the congregation, and he ows the long term of service by the late Rev. Allen Fretz.

About 200 members including farmers, school teach- commission men, and factory workers, comprise membership of the church. Approximately twenty erent communities are represented, and some fam- s must travel a distance of fifteen miles to attend services. Although at present no one lives within king distance, at one time the members did live r the church.

brief devotional period, consisting of a hymn and yer, opens the Sunday school. The adult and ng people's classes, which make the main portion he church building a scene of buzzing activity dur- the Sunday school hour, are large and held close ther. Listening, one can hear the small children ing from a room in the rear of the church. One wo of the children's classes gather under the trees, there in God's outdoor world the pupils and their her together discover new truths about r Heavenly Father.

receded by a piano prelude, the call to ship marks the beginning of the worship ice, which is informal and simple in nature. average attendance at the worship service 50 people. Frequently, special music from church or neighboring churches is a part of service. The pastor's sermon may be about response to Christ or one of a series on onal problems, but it always challenges the le to an intimate companionship with God. ı during the worship service the birds can eard adding their songs of praise. After enediction and doxology the pastor greets eople at the door.

nday morning at Deep Run is a busy ing. There are frequently special business ings of church organizations after the service, such as the Women's Missionary Society, program committees, or Sunday School classes because it is the only time people are together to carry on such activities. A friendly spirit exists among the members of the congregation, and those who are not at any special meeting engage in conversation. Pennsylvania German is commonly used in speaking. Activity also exists outside where the children play games.

About an hour after the worship service the last car usually leaves the church grounds. The church with its closed shutters remains until again a week hence people will seek strength and fellowship within its walls. Occasionally, families bring their lunch to church and in the afternoon visit friends in the community.

On one particular Sunday all agreed to bring their own lunch to church and spend the afternoon together on the church grounds. Everyone ate on a long table which was set under the trees. The afternoon provided something for young and old. While the children and young people had a grand time playing together, the adults discussed various subjects and problems. At the close of the afternoon a common feeling existed that the fellowship together had been of real value. It had provided a fine time socially, but also people had been drawn closer to each other and to God.

This church and its people are only a part of the world-wide fellowship in Christ.

SAVED?

"In China they don't ask a man whether he is saved—they ask his neighbors." This quotation from a former missionary to China (Mennonite Brethren) suggests that deeds often reveal the heart of a man much more accurately than do words, especially when spoken of self.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

LETTER FROM MRS. J. R. DUERKSEN

Jagdishpur, Via Raipur, C.P., India
July 30, 1943

Dear Rev. Richert:

We come to you with greetings in the name of Him who sendeth rain and causeth grass to grow in the fields and food for mankind. We are in the beginning of our rainy season and it is truly beautiful in this area. Everywhere we are surrounded by the green of trees, grass, and growing crops. Just this week the representative of the British and Foreign Bible Society was here at our station and he spoke repeatedly of how beautiful things were here. So far crop prospects are good.

I have been trying an interesting experiment for about a month and feel it is so valuable that I want to repeat it some time later. I had asked for 150 rupees in the budget to use for women's work and since it was granted I went forward with plans. There are so many girls in the district who have not had the opportunity of going to school. I felt it would be helpful for these girls to come here for a month for special instruction. Only ten girls came in—all illiterate—and of such families that had been Christians for only two or three years.

Yesterday afternoon the evangelists were in for some work and in the afternoon they visited our school. They were amazed to see how much the girls had learned to read in the simple readers that have been prepared for teaching adults to read. I believe that in three months they would be able to read in the New Testament if they had one in large print. The evangelists have promised to try to continue the work when the girls go home. They sang a number of songs that they have learned from memory, recited verses, and gave answers to Bible stories. It will cost me about fifty rupees to have these girls here for this time, so I will have some money left to repeat the experiment. And I hope to let these girls come back for more work before too long. One sees so many things that could be done that one would like to have more hands and heads. But I suppose the best thing I could do would be to train others to carry on. I have a young girl of seventeen as a helper and also an older woman who knows the village dialect well to help with the Bible teaching.

Mr. Duerksen continues his district work and would have many interesting little stories if he had more time for writing and was not so hesitant about talking about himself and his work.

The Lord willing, we expect to go to the hills in a week from now. We would not especially feel the need of a hill leave this year if it were only because of the heat because the summer was not too hot. But we feel we must have the time with our children as they face some of their problems. Going late in t season also reduces the rent bill for we can get t house at half of what it costs in the hot season. T Lord has been very good to us in the matter of fi ances so that inspite of higher bills from school, sp cial gifts and the extra allowed by the mission boa make it possible to pay as we go. Praise His de name.

In His Service,
(Mrs. J. R.) Christena H. Duerks

WORDS OF FAREWELL

Dear friends of the homeland:

As we leave for another term in India we wa to thank you for your love and hospitality, for yo prayers with which you have promised to accompa us, and for your testimony that you believe in message of Jesus the Savior which is being taken the far ends of the earth.

It is well for us to remember that spiritual thi belong to those which must come first even in midst of war. Therefore missionary work can be suspended for the duration.

It will be better to publish the itinerary of journey later. We are assured of your intercess in any case. May all our churches grow in gr and strength and may they keep the faith.

Yours in Christ Jesus, our Lord

News Notes from Sam J. Goering

(The following quotations are excerpts from a card ıd a letter written by Sam Goering.)

In a card from Champa, India, written October 30, rother Goering tells of living conditions in China as scribed to him by a missionary from there: "Living nditions are very high there (China). A missionary ld me he was offered for his bicycle thirty thousand hinese dollars which at the present exchange is a ousand dollars in our money. He says a shirt sells r a thousand and a good bath towel for five hun-ed."

While in Calcutta Bro. Goering met Bishop Chen, ho baptized the Generalissimo Chiang Kai Chek and w recently the son of the Generalissimo.

In a letter written from Kutsing, Yunnan, China, on ovember 11, 1943, he states:

"We left Calcutta on November 8 . . . arrived at unming at 8:30 p.m. We had a very fine trip y air). We crossed the "hump" in the evening. ecause it was clear we could fly much lower and which Hugh Stanley came over everybody was ry sick, and he told me that he passed out for at ast thirty-five minutes. Hugh is the one boy of e China unit that came through. We understand that b Kreider and the rest are on their way back now.

"They finally quartered us at the Y.M.C.A. in the A.U. office, where they board bunks. At first the ards seemed so hard I thought my bones just would t be able to take it. But this is the kind of life we ve ahead of us, and we may as well get used to it. d really it is surprising how one can take it. We read our few blankets (two light cotton blankets m India) that we could bring in by air out on e board—say our prayers and go to sleep—and sleep d that we have a place. For the nights that have en cool the woolen underwear came in handy. I ar mine at night instead of day. When I get time want to sew the blankets I have into a kind of eping bag. I suppose you feel that it is odd that don't buy stuff, but things are so high priced that e gets only the things that one just can't do without. For example, there were plenty rickshas in Kunming but Joe and I walked everywhere we went just because we felt that we could not spend the money ricksha men asked to take us . . . Quite different from the way things used to be when we lived at Kaichow. Strange as it may seem there are plenty supplies in the stores and food on the market in Kunming . . ."

"They (Friends relief organization) buy and eat the things that do not cost so much and rejoice when they get things that they have been doing without. For instance, this morning they had small oranges for breakfast—one for each and when the one in charge of the dining hall was congratulated for getting them, he remarked that they were a gift from the British minister (to China)."

"This was a pleasant stop on our way to Chungching. We came here . . . on the back of a loaded F.A.U. truck, and we are going on from here in a British Motor Convoy. Our next stop will be Kwei Yang and then Chungching."

Cable From China

Another cable has been received from the China Commissioners, S. J. Goering and J. D. Graber. This one was sent from Loyang, a city near the Yellow River in the province of Honan. Chengchow, referred to in the telegram, is near Loyang and near the line of battle. Japanese control the northern bank of the Yellow River in this area but have never been able to hold for any length of time a position on the guerilla-held southern bank.

We praise God with you, that we are back once re in our home country. The dear Lord has heard ur prayers and brought us into the land of freedom d peace. If it had not been the Lord; we would g ago have perished. His loving kindness has eemed us out of the hands of the enemy. It is nderful, oh, so wonderful! The Lord has done a at thing. Let us praise His holy name! Later will be glad to have an opportunity to tell you re about it. We shall also take time to publish ne of our experiences. But in the meantime we t to remind you, that we still have missionary co-workers now in concentration camps, both in China and in the Philippine Islands. For these we must continue to pray for sustaining grace, and if it so be God's will, liberation. Secondly, we have thousands of Chinese Christians, that, although they are not in concentration camps, are nevertheless in great distress. Many of them are suffering far more than the missionaries. Some have been arrested and often faced death, even when not in jail. There are so many things here at home that claim our prayer life, but let us continue to share sympathy and intercession with the Christians in China. They are looking up to the mother church with a pleading voice. Prayer changes things, and prayer will bring relief to them.

MY NEIGHBOR AND I

By Earl Salzman

I. Introduction: The Laymen's Missionary Movement is sponsored by a group of laymen who claim that no one can be a follower of Christ and then side step his responsibility to either carry or send the gospel of Christ to all the world. For a group of laymen to be inspired by such a conviction every minister should be indeed grateful. When the plan of God for world redemption is considered, it is very evident that Christ's mission for the world can not be fulfilled except through His own followers. This lays an inescapable task on every Christian man.

II. "My Neighbor and I."

Who are our neighbors today? If to live close together physically means being neighbors, then we have many neighbors today. We live much closer today than our fathers did. Folks live in villages and cities the like of which they never dreamed. However, to live in an apartment often means just exactly that, to live apart. Old men die and babies are born within five hundred feet of us, and we don't even know it unless we read the birth and death columns very closely.

The old community. In the old days a birth was a community affair. When a baby was born, the neighbors came in; they had to be there or the event wouldn't come off right. If the death angel came, again the neighbors came in. They notified the friends, cooked the meals, dug the grave, sang at the service, carried the body out to its final resting place. The neighbors helped to carry that whole burden of bereavement. If it was harvest time, apple butter cooking, or butchering, again the neighbors all turned out to help, and what a wonderful blending of joy and laughter with all the sweat and toil. Aside from Amish communities this is all gone now.

Today's community. Today babies are born in a hospital, very scientifically and almost painlessly, while father walks up and down the corridor wondering how things are going. Today when death comes, the funeral director takes charge. He does his part so efficiently and there is nothing overlooked. Those who have had need of him remember him with gratitude. These things have their advantage, but isn't there something lacking? Being neighbors today means physical proximity, nothing more.

III. Jesus' community. When Jesus talked about neighbors, he was not thinking about this tame, insipid, lifeless something that passes today for the reality. He was thinking about that life-giving bond that holds people together in a life and death struggle. He knew the joy and blessing of having neighbors and being one, and the sorry plight one was in who had none. Jesus also lived at a time when certain folks did not neighbor with certain other folks. Jews and Samaritans, Romans and Greeks had no dealing with one another. These folks didn't neighbor with one another. It was because of this situation that Jesus told the story of the Good Samaritan" Luke 10:25-37. This story is a picture of true neighbo liness. According to Jesus neighborliness means response to human need regardless of race, or cree or the cost.

IV. Today all the nations are our neighbors.

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

GOVERNMENT STATISTICS OF MENNONITE BODIES

Every ten years the Federal Government takes a census of religious bodies. The last such census was taken in 1936. Separate analysis can be secured for each denomination from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C. The consolidated report on Mennonites costs ten cents. In it are seven tables showing: 1. Summary of statistics for churches in urban and rural territory, 1936; 2. Comparative summary by decades from 1906 to 1936. 3. The number and membership of churches in urban and rural territory, membership by sex, and Sunday schools by states, 1936; 4. Number and membership of churches, 1906 to 1936; 5. Value of churches and parsonages and amount of church debt by states, 1936; 6. Church expenditures by states, 1936; 7. Number and membership of churches, value and debt on church edifices, expenditures, and Sunday schools by conferences, 1936. Here are a few interesting summary facts:

"I Am In Heaven, Where Are You?"

Last July the good ship Brazil landed in New York harbor with its precious cargo of 470 missionaries and children. As soon as these passengers were in port one of the boys who had finished high school here in India and was sent home by his parents, sent to his parents here in India this telegram: "I am in heaven, where are you?" After the long and hazardous journey the young man thought he had landed in heaven. By now (November, 1942) he will perhaps have found out that he had not quite arrived in heaven. The parents were so taken up with that telegram that they circulated it among their friends and fellow missionaries. For quite a few of us it caused a little sober thinking. Were we in the opposite place from where that boy thought he was? After further reflection the greatest majority of us do not think so. India goes through a terrific struggle in this transition period; and many may be caught and ground up in the wheels of destiny. Yet to be in India in a time like this seems to be a special challenge and opportunity. The Christian church and all others need guidance.

HOME MISSIONS

A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary

New Worker in Portland Mission

For the past three months Rev. and Mrs. Herman Wiebe, have been serving as leaders in the Alberta Mennonite Church. They live in the Workers' Home, 5215 N. E. 23rd Avenue, Portland. Rev. Wiebe comes from the Mennonite Brethren Church. He has been associated with General Conference work, having lived in the Dallas, Oregon, section for some time. He was born in Kansas and attended the Bible Institute as Los Angeles and also at Moody. While in Portland, he intends to attend college and get a degree in connection with his church work. According to the last report the attendance is increasing in worship services morning and evening and the other auxiliaries.

Renovation at Memorial Church, Altoona

During the summer months the church roof was repaired. Some painting was also done in the Sunday School rooms. It has been several years since any painting was done in the auditorium. After careful investigation it was found that to install a non-conducting fibre board ceiling would cost little more than painting; so it was decided to make the improvement which will need no painting.

The members and friends in the church responded nobly and donated and subscribed almost a hundred dollars toward this improvement. Rev. Delbert Welty who follows the Master in his labors being a carpenter as well as in preaching, is installing the new ceiling.

Rev. Arnold A. Fast, Toronto, Married

On Wednesday, December 22, the marriage of Rev. Arnold A. Fast and Miss Adeline Becker, was solemnized at the Evangelical Mennonite Brethren Church, Marion, South Dakota, just a few days before Miss Becker completed her course at Moody Bible Institute. After January 9, they will be at home at their new home, 15 Laws Street, Toronto, Ontario. Hearty congratulations!

At a meeting some time ago the Toronto Mennonite group gathered and elected a council to work with their minister. The congregation has not been formally organized as yet, but may be in the months to come. Regular worship, Sunday School and young people's services are held.—A.J.N.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Rev. Howard Raid, Fortuna, Missouri

JANUARY 24—"Why are ye so fearful? how is it that ye have no faith?" Mark 4:40

The disciples were worrying about something they could not change regardless how much they worried. Jesus will not refuse to help us, even if we come to Him only in times of storm. But if we come to Him at all times, He will help us over the storms by giving us strength to overcome them. We need not worry about these things, for this only shows a lack of faith in the goodness of the Father to do so. He will take care of us if we give ourselves to Him completely.

JANUARY 25—"But when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran and worshiped Him." Mark 5:6

The mentally sick find in Jesus and His followers healing and health. Today the C.O.'s work in dealing with the mentally sick is a great step forward, for here he applies his belief in nonresistance and is finding that it works with "crazy men." In one hospital where the former attendants had control of the inmates only by beating them, the number of accidents dropped 40 per cent within three months time after the C.O.'s took charge. The mentally sick still recognize the healing touch of the Master's followers.

JANUARY 26—" . . . and see him that was possessed with the devil . . . clothed and in his right mind: and they were afraid." Mark 5:15

They were afraid but of what? of sanity. We are afraid because we do not understand or we lack faith. Were we afraid of sanity? Have we become so used to insane ways of living that when the sanity of the Christian way is shown us, we are afraid to follow? Christ could not help these people because they would not let Him. The only way to rid ourselves of fear is to let the Master help us.

JANUARY 27—". . . Thou seest the multitude thronging Thee and Thou sayest, 'Who touched Me?' " Mark 5:31

When we are sick do we rush to the Master, throng Him, seeking help? There is a great deal of difference between touching Jesus and thronging Him. The curious, adventuresome, the thrillseekers might throng Jesus seeking to see Him, to get something from Him. They were not afraid to ask for all that they could get. But the woman who came in humility and meekness to the Master was healed spiritually and physically.

JANUARY 28—". . . Be not afraid, only believe." Mark 5:36

As surely as a human being is born, so he must sometime die, that is the way of all life. A little child telling of death used the story of Enoch. She said that Enoch and God walked each day together and one day they walked farther than usual and they were very tired. So instead of turning back, God said to Enoch, "Come on to my house and rest there." So Enoch rested with God. When we walk daily with the Lord then death is only our resting with the Lord.

JANUARY 29—". . . O Woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt." Matt. 15:28

God is a very present help in time of trouble. Let us thank Him that we are not orphans but that we have a Father who cares. He cares even for the sparrow and not one falls to the ground without His care. As we take the first step to come to Him for help He is ever ready and willing to help us. Even in the turmoil and confusion of today, our faith may burn as brightly as this woman's and we can claim His everlasting promises.

JANUARY 30—"My help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and earth." Psalm 121:2

We get our help from the Lord who made all, the Ruler of all life and death. Yet even if our trouble is not large compared to the entire world, God will take time to help us in solving it. No trouble of ours is too large or too small or too personal for Him to help us with if we but ask Him. Why then, are Christians so often disturbed in mind and heart about so many things, why so much anxiety for the morrow, why this panic of fear as though the world were sinking into everlasting night? Simply, because we forget that "our help cometh from the Lord." "Speak to Him thou for He hears, and Spirit with Spirit can meet."

JANUARY 31—"And Jesus when He came out, saw much people, and was moved with compassion toward them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd: and He began to teach them many things." Mark 6:31

Jesus wanted to rest and talk to His disciples, for His disciples had many experiences that they wished to discuss with Him. But when Jesus saw the crowds of people He showed His own true greatness by forgetting about what He wanted to do, and He did what He saw ought to be done.

A QUESTION

God, who made the shining stars,
The circling planets, the fair green earth,
With friendly seasons,—jubilant spring,
Bountiful summer, winter that puts tired life to rest;
God who made morning songs and sweet night-croonings;
God of the forests and silver rivers,
Gardens and orchards green and golden,
God of harmony, God of beauty—

Mrs. Aron E. Jantzen Describes Elephant Ride

(Written especially for the youth section of THE MENNONITE)

Last August during the rainy season the call came from Champa that a nurse was needed to attend Miss Pauls following her operation. I was the only one who was free to go. So plans were made and Miss Pauls informed that we would come. But getting out of Korba during the rains is not such an easy matter, as we well know; so plans had to be made carefully. We knew that the road was impassable for the motor and buffalo carts. Even walking would be very difficult. So some means of transportation had to be found. Aron had the use of a horse, but that would not carry both of us. Arrangements were made to borrow a horse for me, but as the day for departure drew near it was discovered that the horse was off touring with officials and was not available. This left us perplexed indeed, for we had promised to go to Champa. We had to find some way to get there. After prayer Aron paid a visit to the palace and asked whether the Queen would loan us her elephant for the trip. She was very gracious and granted the request. We praise the Lord for this boon.

Last minute preparations were made. The elephant was due at 7 a. m., but did not appear until three hours later—a perfectly natural thing out here. An Indian bed was quickly strapped "upside-down," on the elephant's back on top of a padding of quilts. Ropes were strung around the four legs of the upturned bed to make a railing, thus protecting the rider from falling off. When all was ready, Lakshmi Prasad (the elephant) knelt for me to mount. Someone grabbed the fellow's tail and held it for me to step on while Aron assisted me in climbing "on board." Then Lakshmi slowly arose to his feet. I had to hold on tightly to keep from tumbling off as he rose to a standing position. A few hasty good-byes were called, and we were off.

It was a beautiful day, and Lakshmi was feeling in good spirits. We were soon out of the village of Korba and headed south. We made good time and raced along at the speed of three miles per hour. Everything was green and fresh from the rains. So it was a delight to watch the landscape from my elevated perch. The sun was warm, but I had an umbrella for shade. It had been two months since we had last been to Champa, so we welcomed the opportunity to get out to civilization once again. Since we are so cut off during the rains, this first trip out is always a thrill. The road is not passable for motor traffic until late fall, so we must use some other form of transportation to get out after the rains. The previous year we went out much later, so were able to use a cart for resting when tired of walking.

The Mahwat and I chatted together of many things as we ambled along. Feeling this a golden opportunity to speak to my driver of the Lord Jesus Christ, I turned the conversation to things spiritual. For an hour he sat quietly listening to the gospel story. He occasionally grunted and replied to a question put to see if he were following the points of the message. It turned out that he was a Moslem, but really did not seem to know too much about his religion. I tried to present a message which might be a means of opening his heart to Christ, but do not know what impression was made. As I brought my message to a close, the coolie carrying our lunch and water jugs caught up with us. With his support some Indian songs were sung in the local Chhattisgarhi dialect. The Mahawat seemed to enjoy these messages in song which were written by an Indian (blind) evangelist.

Mrs. Aron E. Jantzen writes that this picture is an excellent illustration of how she traveled to Champa. She says further, "Of course I was the only passenger as Aron went by horse, but the general setup was the same. I believe it was this same elephant who took me to Champa, for he has been here in the service of our local queen for about twenty years, according to the story told me by the Mahawat (driver)." The picture above was taken many years ago and shows Mrs. Suckau and children on Lakshmi Prasad, the elephant. However, our missionaries do not usually travel by elephant. (Editor's note: We hope other missionaries will write articles similar to the one by Mrs. Jantzen for use in the Youth Section.)

When a swollen stream was reached, Lakshmi carefully probed its depths before proceeding. He was very cautious until he was sure of his footing. He gave us a bit of excitement at times as he took us under some low hanging trees. His purpose was to tear off some nice juicy limbs to munch as he jogged along. He quenched his thirst so generously at streams that the water splashed back on us. It was indeed interesting to watch his antics.

After a while a horse was sighted in the distance, and we knew that Aron was catching up with us at last. He had stayed behind to close the bungalow and finish last minute business, knowing that he could travel much faster than we. Barpali, the half-way village, was soon reached and a halt made. The animals were watered and fed, while we ate a picnic lunch and rested. It felt good to walk about after the confinement of the morning. We had planned to make only a brief stop, but our servants were otherwise minded, so we did not get off again until 4 p. m. In the meantime a nice shower had passed just up the road. By the extra wait we escaped a drenching. This was God's plan for us.

The last twelve miles we made less speed as Lakshmi was tired after his long trip in spite of the rest and food. The horse was still fresh but was kept in check so we might ride together. Aron and I chatted as we rode along. As evening came on, it was evident that we could not reach Champa before dark. It was decided that Aron go on ahead and ask for a car in which to meet me somewhere out on the Champa-Korba road. (The road was just passable near Champa.) Praying each for the other's protection, we parted.

Clouds which had been gathering in the darkening sky now became more threatening. Lightning flashed about among the clouds. Darkness fell. A few stars blinked coyly behind "scarfs of cloud." God was near and we were not afraid. How very sorry I felt for Lakshmi as we plodded along. He was so tired, he walked slower and slower. I did not like to have the driver beat him.

We had now covered twenty miles since morning, and we knew that we were not far from our destination. This made it easier to bear the cramps which constantly brought pain to my weary legs. Try as I would to relieve the cramps by shifting my position, the pain would not leave. Suddenly off in distance we saw a light. It was different from the dim lights of nearby villages. We studied it. Yes, it must be the car coming for me. Excitement had to be suppressed lest it be some other vehicle moving in the dark.

I counted the furlong posts which seemed farther and farther apart. The light drew closer. There was no mistake now—it was a motor! A joyful shout went up as the car stopped and its occupants tumbled out. I was soon off my tired beast and into the car. It seemed no time at all until we were at the home of the Rev. and Mrs. Orlando Waltner, where a hot supper awaited us.

As we stepped onto the porch the clouds broke, letting down torrents of rain. The Lord had stayed the storm until we were safely under cover. Our hearts were full of gratitude to God for His wonderful protection and care. "Bless the Lord oh my soul and all that is within me bless His Holy Name."

More "Christlike" Ideas

Young people are frequently challenged to acquire "new" ideas. Should not the outstanding Christian challenge be that they acquire "Christlike" ideas?

If one means by new ideas growth in the knowledge and grace of our Lord and Saviour, good and well, but that should be made clear. We cannot have too many of the new ideas that mean growth in Christian perfection. Alas, too many Christians hover near the flunking line in their spiritual studies. We need to have newness in spiritual life in the sense that a brown kernel of wheat stands up in a new cloak of green and then changes to a new coat of yellow with a new head of nourishing kernels.

On the other hand God would not have us acquire the newest ideas for making a bomb, exploiting our fellowmen, or living in riotousness. Sin is old, very old, but there are many new ideas for sinning which we do well to avoid. Not all that glitters is gold; neither is all that is new Christ-like.

But neither is all that is old, Christlike. Sin has been in the world a long time; so there is much that is old and sinful. Furthermore, much old sin has become so familiar that Christians are careless about it and even indulge in it without thinking much about it. Thus it happened that many Christians once upheld slavery. No, the old is not always safe, far from it. We need to prove all things to see whether or not they are sinful regardless of how old they are. Too many things are old and rotten, rather than old and sound at heart.

However, we ought to revere and accept the old when it is from God. God is old, but He is by no means behind the times; He is at the beginning and end of it. Christ our Saviour lived on this earth nearly two thousand years ago, and He was with the Father before the world was. But whoever deems Him too old-fashioned to follow is very, very much mistaken. More Mennonites need old ideas about non-resistance, the simple life, the value of one's word, and the authority of the scriptures. Many who have accepted something new should never have given up the old.

The simple point is that not everything that is new is good and that not everything that is old is good. But in absolutely every instance can we be assured that that which is Christlike is good for us. The terms old and new can be misleading for they can denote either good or bad. That which is Biblically Christlike is always good. People ought to acquire more and more Christlike ideas.—rw.

Greetings To the Conference

We have repeatedly done relief work in times of drought, but how much more did one good soaking rain! The fields quickly brough forth a rich crop, that no relief, be it ever so liberal, could match. Therefore let us pray for them!

SENIOR DEPARTMENT

No. 2 OF SERIES ON YOUTH PROBLEMS
GROWING INTO LIFE, Luke 2:52

Youth is pre-eminently the time of learning. It is the golden age for forming habits and for growing into life. It offers so many opportunities for making life rich, fine, and noble.

First of all there is the opportunity to learn to obey. God's Word promises a special blessing for those who obey their parents. Parents' love will offer the best it has gained through years of experience to the children and try patiently to teach them this and urge them to accept their guidance. Seldom will children have reason to regret obeying their parents, and respecting and doing what their parents ask of them.—It is also valuable training, for it is true that no one is fit to guide, or to command, who has not learned to obey.

Another privilege is learning to work. No life is rich and satisfying which does not know the joy of hard work. Physical work which finds you genuinely tired at the end of the day as well as mental work in which you tax your powers of concentration and perseverance bring rewards in later life. Let no one forget that we do not learn to work in a day, but that we develop that art by painstaking efforts through many days. Remember how much Jesus was able to do in a day and how much he accomplished in a few short years. He knew how to work.

Self-control, too, is something that is especially fine in a young man and a young woman. It is the means of making your powers and abilities count. A train that does not jump the track but stays right on it makes good use of its power. It is one of the most admirable qualities of a Christian and well worth striving for. It adds beauty and strength to your character and enhances your influence over others. Think of Paul, and how often he had need of it.

Then, too, youth needs to learn to love. This is the time to build friendships, beautiful, enriching, ennobling. Some one has said: "When you have a large number of friends to live for, it will challenge you to higher ideals." Learn to appreciate older people and to see that which is fine in them, but, also, enjoy the sense of comradeship with those of your own age and draw out the best that is in them. And in the early years of your teens put the emphasis on being friends rather than on trying to single some one out whom you expect to be your life companion later. Enrich your life by associating with varying types of fine young people. "You must learn to know people before you are ready to make an intelligent choice of a life companion," says John R. Mumaw in the booklet Growing Into Life And Love.

Further learn to be interested in others, and you will find that there is always some one who needs a bit of help, a word of cheer, a genuine handshake of appreciation. This interest in others will act like a boomerang, and you will be surprised how it frees you from self-consciousness and adds zest to your living and keen enjoyment of each new day.

And lastly and above all, learn to trust in God. That will give poise and meaning to your life. "Nothing in my hand I bring, Simply to Thy cross I cling"—expecting Him to give whatever is needed, knowing that He will not fail you—what more do you want with life's journey before you!

Topics for Short talks:

1. Learn to obey. Luke 2:51
2. Learn to work. Matt. 20:1-7.
3. Learn self-control. I Cor. 9:24-27, James 1:26.
4. Learn to love, I John 5:2.
5. Learn to trust in God, Matt. 6:5-15.

For Discussion:

1. What does it mean to grow into life?
2. What do we have a right to expect from a friend?

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT

Theme: LOVING OUR NEGRO NEIGHBOR
Scripture Reading: Mark 12:28-34
Song: "In Christ There Is No East or West"
Call to Worship: (Leader)

"Lift up our hearts, O King of kings!
To brighter hopes and kindlier things.
To visions of a larger good,
And holier dreams of brotherhood."
John H. B. Masterman

Remarks: The scripture we have just read tells us that Jesus considered love for God the first and greatest commandment, and then followed it with love for one's neighbor. Love for God and love for man are the all-embodying commandments. If we love with all our hearts, it is likely that we will follow the will of God and that we will be kind to our fellow men—our neighbors. This evening we are going to consider one specific neighbor, the Negro. How would you like to sing a few Negro spirituals?

Songs: Select familiar ones like, "Lord, I Want to be a Christian" or "Steal Away to Jesus." If "Go Down Moses" is sung read Exodus 3:1-7, 10, explaining that the Negroes have this story in mind as they sing the song.

Remarks: This concern for the Negro is not a new one for Mennonites. C. Henry Smith in his book, "Story of the Mennonites" tells us that in 1662 a Dutch Mennonite colony on the Delaware established the first American settlement to forbid the employment of Negro slaves. Since that time little progress has been made. In America today there are 13,000,000 Negroes. Most of them are denied equal opportunities with white people because their skin is of another color. In the South they must sit in certain seats in railroad trains and if those seats are taken they must stand, even if there are empty seats nearby. They must send their children to different and poorer schools. In the North they are not treated so badly. But even here, they must live in certain sections of town because real estate owners will not sell or rent them property in other sections; they can seldom get the kind of jobs they are trained for because many employers will not hire them.

Discussion: Does discrimination against the Negro exist in your community? How does Christ's second commandment to love thy neighbor as thyself apply to the Negro? Can a real Christian bear prejudice in his heart against people of a different color? Will there be race distinctions in heaven? If you were a missionary in Africa how would you explain the attitude toward Negroes in America? Who have been some great Negro leaders in America.

Sentence Prayers: By members of the group.

Closing Prayer: (Leader) Our dear heavenly Father, Thou who has taught us to love one another, Thou who lookest on the heart of man and not upon his color, race, or location, draw us nearer to each other in our love for Thee and for our neighbors. Bind us together as brothers with thy love. Amen.

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT

John 13:35

The Source of Love—I John 3:16 "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because He laid down His life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." Before we can exercise love to others, we must have true love in our hearts. Since God is love, and since He has shown us His love on Calvary, we can have true love if we have Him Who is love as our personal Saviour.

The Proof of our Love—First to our parents: "Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well pleasing unto the Lord" (Col. 3:20). Merely saying that we love our parents won't have much significance unless we show them that that is true by our deeds. Being obedient to them will be the proof of the truth of our words. It is easy to be obedient to those whom we love. Truly, if we love the Lord, we want to follow His commandments.

Next, we can prove our love to our friends and classmates. In John 15 verse 12 we read, "This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you." To those we love—our friends and classmates—we are not unkind, selfish, or ill-tempered. No, if we have Christ's love in our hearts we will even love those who do not love us.

The Results of Love—"And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in Him." I John 4:16. When our friends have seen our love for them by our deeds, their love and respect for us will be stronger. Not only will that be true but also our circle of friends will grow. Above all, what greater result could we wish for than the wonderful assurance of this verse that "He that dwelleth in the love (of Christ) dwelleth in God, and God in him?"

Some suggestions for songs are: "Love Divine," "More Love to Thee," "Angry Words! O Let them Never."

In Christian love,
—Mrs. Alvin Fast, Madrid, Nebraska

C. P. S. CAMP NEWS

Appointments of C.P.S. Personnel

Albert Gaeddert, General Director of Camps
Phil Frey, Regional Director for camps east of Ohio
Robert Kreider, Assistant Director of Hospital Units
Marie Groening, Dietitian at Belton, Montana
Mary Duerksen, Nurse-Matron at Ft. Collins, Colorado
David Suderman, Director at Colorado Springs, Colo.
Mrs. David Suderman, Nurse-Matron at Colorado Springs
Dorsa Mishler, Unit Leader at Beltsville Agr's Station

Methodists to Administer Two Camps

The Commission on World Peace of the Methodist Church has been authorized to administer two units for their own C.P.S. men. One of these units will be at the State Hospital at Cherokee, Iowa, and the other an Agriculture College Unit in Tennessee. This is the beginning of a policy to have churches other than the peace groups administer units for their own men.

New Medical and Dental Policy Set up for C.P.S. Men

The extension of the C.P.S. program well into the third year for a number of men in the camps has necessitated a change in the policy of M.C.C. relative to medical and dental needs of the campers. Beginning with the second year of a camper's stay in C.P.S. the M.C.C. will provide all necessary medical and surgical care including necessary hospitalization; a semi-annual dental examination; payment of all necessary dental care costs, but not exceeding $20 annually as the M.C.C. portion.

Quarantine on California Camp

C.P.S. Camp No. 35, North Fork, California, has been under quarantine for the past several weeks due to a few cases of scarlet fever in the camp. About half a dozen men are sick and all the cases are light. The camps have not been immune from the nation-wide influenza epidemic. Colorado Springs reports that as high as twenty men at one time were confined to their beds.

Mental Hygene Official Reports on C.O.'s in Hospitals

Dr. George S. Stevenson, Executive Secretary for the National Committee for Mental Hygene, declared, according to an article in January 4, New York Times, that "C.O.'s are among the most reliable workers ever employed in mental institutions. They have a definite, sympathetic feeling for people under their care."

CORRESPONDENCE

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Hillsboro, Kansas

In this correspondence we would like to share briefly with our readers a few facts rather than opinions gleaned from a survey over the year's work.

In the Sunday School department we have changed almost entirely to material from Mennonite publications. In our estimation the new Junior Quarterly ranks high in being practical and true to Mennonite teaching. Realizing the lack of Bible knowledge on the part of our young people, the Christian Education Committee introduced a number of classes to meet this need. Instead of the Sunday School lesson on Sunday morning the seventh and eighth grade boys and girls study Old and New Testament stories in chronological order. On Wednesday nights there are two Bible classes for children, and beginning this year, our pastor, Rev. Unruh, will open a class for the high school age group. The Junior C.E. has been reinstated after several years of absence.

The committee in charge is hoping to make further advances in religious instruction by promoting those just above grade school age to a class in charge of our pastor where subject material such as church history, Mennonite doctrine and heritage, church loyalty, and Catechism will be taught. Such a course will terminate with baptism. The details for this step remain to be worked out.

We are realizing, at a late hour perhaps, that our church has suffered a great loss because of inadequate and inefficient religious instruction. At the same time we are mindful of the great importance of the home in providing its share in such instruction. Our problem of finding the necessary workers in the church is an acute one. No doubt, other churches are struggling with the same difficulty. How is the future church to carry on, if there is no material from which it can draw?

In surveying the financial side of our church activity, not including the generous contributions from the four sewing circles, some figures might be of interest to our readers. Foreign mission offerings totaled $487; Home Missions, $209; C.P.S., $1,287; and membership dues and church gifts, $2,819.77.

As a congregation we have witnessed sad as well as joyful occasions. A few days before Christmas a young mother of forty-six was laid to rest leaving a very empty place in the home on Christmas Day. In many homes on this day one, two, three; or as many as five chairs were empty around the family table. Already we have thirty-five men in the service of the government with a number of others expecting the call. We do need to bear one another's burdens, for there are those who are bearing such heavy loads. Let's take courage in thinking often of this verse in the new year, "All things work together for good to them that love God."

BETHANY MENNONITE CHURCH

Quakertown, Pa.

The churches of the West Swamp Charge had a Thanksgiving service at 8 a.m. We had a goodly number out. Our mission society had its "mite box" service in connection with one of our regular evening worship services. The service included reading of "giving" passages by Rev. Neuenschwander, litany no. 89 in the Hymnary, the reading, "My Mite Box," the presentation of the mite boxes, the prayer of thanks by Dr. Harvey Bauman, and a choir anthem. The pastor then gave a sermon the "The Years of Silence." On December 4, we enjoyed having as our guest speaker, Jacob E. Entz from Kansas, who is studying in New York City. Our minister was attending a rural life convention in Indiana at that time. For our Christmas program we used the program outlined by Walter H. Hohmann and as given in the November 16 issue of The Mennonite. We used the hymns suggested. Comments of appreciation were made about the program. Charles W. Martin and Florence E. Babel were married on January 1. On January 2 this newly married couple celebrated the Lord's Supper with us, a wonderful way to start out this new life together. Our pastor used as his text, "What Is Your Life?" It was based on James 4:14. A few thoughts from it are: "There are those who strike out for self-satisfaction and find so many dead ends. Then there are the stoics who steel themselves to life. Singlehanded they cut a path through the thickets of life. Then there is a third group who look to God, who enjoy following Him. Some, however, follow afar off. But for others, like for Paul, there is no wavering." Since so many of our young men are gone, those of us who are left must work so much the harder in the Lord's vineyard. We would like to have more folks enjoy our mid-week Bible study and prayer meeting. We have been encouraged by the faithful workers in our church and especially by our faithful spiritual guide, Rev. Neuenschwander. I leave with you Ephesians 4:7.

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH OF CHRISTIAN

Moundridge, Kansas

On November 15 it was forty years since Rev. P. P. Wedel was ordained into the ministry.

Because of the illness of our pastor, several of the teachers and ministerial students of Bethel College brought us some of the messages on Sunday mornings in October and November and on Thanksgiving Day.

In the evening of December 19 Missionary John Sudermans gave us a better understanding of the mission work in Arizona.

Sunday morning after Christmas we observed Holy Communion. The Alexanderwhol Men's Chorus rendered an inspiring musical program in the evening.

Quilting is again part of the work the Sister Society is doing this year. The sisters are planning to do more relief sewing.

Missionary H. J. Browns were with us the first week in January. Missionary Brown brought the Sunday morning message. Mrs. Brown talked to the Sister Society on Thursday.

BETHEL MENNONITE CHURCH

Langdon, North Dakota

"O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt His name together."

May this be our prayer, our aim as we enter this new year.

Great has been His faithfulness to us this past year and we praise Him for it.

On December twenty-three a splendid Christmas program was rendered here at the church. The following Sunday evening our pastor, Rev. Paul Dahlenburg, and a group of the young people gave a Christmas program at the Grey Community Church. (Rev. Dahlenburg ministers to those people on Sunday afternoons.)

We have been enjoying warm weather the past few weeks and have little snow. The men are busy building a barn for the church. One end is to be a garage for the parsonage.

A watchnight service was held at the church on New Year's eve. Those who attended were richly blessed. The service began at nine-thirty with a program given by the young people. Following that lunch was served. Rev. Waldo Flickinger from the Alsen Mennonite church spoke to us the closing hour and led in a consecration service. The Lord blessed and souls were consecrated to Him.

Pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you.

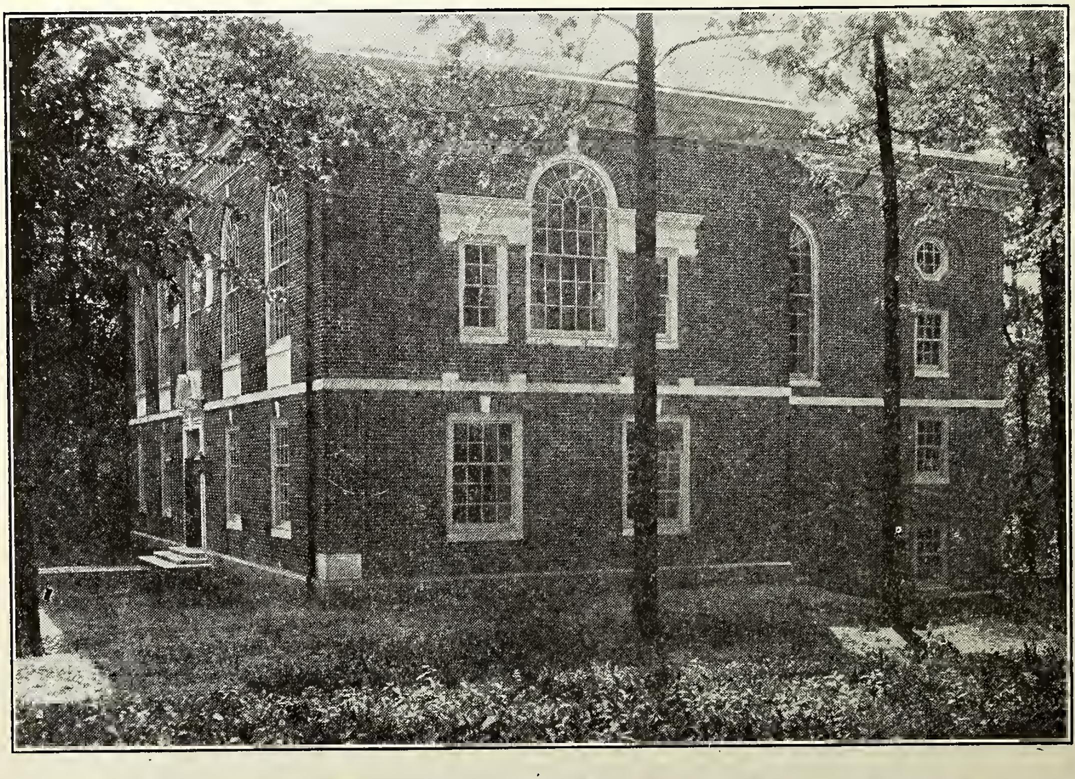
HEREFORD MENNONITE CHURCH

Bally, Pa.

On Advent Sunday, our pastor conducted a prayer service for the boys from our church who are in the services of our country. He prepared these prayers and they were read by seven young ladies and twelve young men from our congregation. Dr. Elmer E. S. Johnson, our minister, prepared thirty-eight sentence prayers and it was a very inspirational service. One mother expressed that the effect of these prayers must have been felt by the boys themselves even though they were in the fartherest corners of the earth. A beautiful bouquet of dark red carnations was placed in the church by one of the Sunday School classes, and a flower was presented to each mother or wife having someone in the service. Three of these boys have been discharged due to age or ill health. An appropriate prayer was also read in their behalf.

At this service an honor roll was also hung on the walls of our Sunday School Room listing those in the service.

Our church members again spread cheer to the guests at The Old Folks Home in Frederick on December 28. Here, too, we found ever so many confined to their rooms with colds and grippe.



This is the Musselman Library at Bluffton College. The library was named after C. H. Musselman of Biglerville, Pa., who died January 6. See correspondence.

FAIRFIELD MENNONITE CHURCH

On January 6, Mr. C. H. Musselman of Biglerville, Pa., passed from this life. Mr. Musselman was a member of the Fairfield Mennonite Church. He is survived by his wife, two children, Mrs. Lovella Musselman, Arnold and Lester Musselman; four sisters, Mrs. B. E. Benner, Fairfield, Pa., Mrs. Harry Stover, Orrtanna, Pa., Mrs. Frank Baer, Salunga, Pa., and Mrs. William Tomlinson, Harrisburg, Pa., and two grandchildren.

He manifested his interest in education by making substantial gifts to colleges of the Mennonite church of which the most outstanding is the Musselman Library at Bluffton College. Pres. L. L. Ramseyer of Bluffton College attended the funeral service of Mr. Musselman and on the following day preached for the Fairfield Mennonite congregation at its regular church services after which he returned to Bluffton.

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. MARYANN MOHR, Quakertown, Pa., a daughter of Levi S. and Caroline Weinberger Moyer, was born May, 1855, and died January 2, 1944. As a girl she was baptized and received into the Springfield Mennonite Church. In 1915 she transferred her membership to the Bethany Mennonite Church. She married Henry K. Mohr and lived with him for more than fifty years. Surviving children are: Mrs. Carrie Moyer and Mrs. Helen Shaw, Quakertown; Mrs. Lottie Longacre, Spinnerstown; William H., Bethlehem; and Raymond, El Paso, Texas.

ORLEY SCHROEDER was born in McPherson County, Kansas, November 29, 1906, and died December 18, 1943. TOBE IRVEN SCHROEDER was born January 2, 1930, and died December 19, 1943. ROLENA MAY SCHROEDER was born November 30, 1931, and died December 19, 1943. SUSIE JANE SCHROEDER was born June 25, 1935, and died December 18, 1943. JOHN DALE SCHROEDER was born April 7, 1939, and died December 19, 1943. GENEVA MARIE SCHROEDER was born January 11, 1943, and died December 18, 1943. Orley, the father of this family, was married to Dena Boehs in 1929. After living at Ulysses, Kansas, they moved to a farm near Ringwood, Oklahoma, in 1937. "Saturday night, December 18 . . . a gasoline stove tank exploded throwing gas and fire over the whole room and its occupants. The father and two childern, Susie Jane and the baby, Geneva Marie, perished in the flames. Tobe Irven, Rolena May, and John Dale, whom the mother somehow managed to get out of the fire, died later at the General Hospital in Enid . . . Only the grief stricken mother, who is also in the hospital severely burned, is left alive of the family."

JOHN HIRSTEIN, son of Abraham and Barbara Wittmer Hirstein, was born near Summerfield, Illinois, on March 25, 1858. In 1872 he was baptized and received into the membership of the First Mennonite Church, Summerfield. For many years he served as a deacon of the church and as a teacher in the Sunday School. In 1883 he married Katherine Baer who preceded him in death in 1940. He took a great interest in agriculture. Children who survive are: Mrs. Gus W. Ruth and Samuel of Summerfield and Edward T. of Golconda.

More Churches Take Up 100 Per Cent Plan

More churches have adopted the 100 Per Cent Subscription Plan to our church papers. They are: Bruderthal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas; First Garden Mennonite Church, Halstead, Kansas; Hebron Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kansas; Johannesthal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas; Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota; Bethesda Mennonite Church, Henderson, Nebraska; and Mennonite Church, Madrid, Nebraska. All the families of the Mennonite group at Wisner, Nebraska, also get one of our church papers. (Whether this is on the basis of the 100 Per Cent Plan or not the editor can't tell at this time.) Thus by this time over two dozen churches have adopted this plan.

The purpose of the plan is to put a Christian paper of our own denomination into every home of the church. The plan also enables the subscribers to get it at a considerably lower rate. Write to the Mennonite Publication Office, Newton, Kansas, for information about the plan.

« « JOTTINGS » »

—Bulletin, Burrton Mennonite Church, Burrton, Kansas: "The church adopted a resolution at the annual business meeting to charge each member a $5.00 membership fee per year. This, however, will not do away with the current expense collections. Let us work hard to reach the goal of $1,500.00.

—Rudolph Wiens, son of Rev. and Mrs. P. J. Wiens, is to take part in relief activities in India under the International Y.M.C.A. Brother Wiens is well fitted for this work for he grew up in India where his parents served our conference as missionaries. During the last several years he has been engaged in Y.M.C.A. work in the mid-west and on the Pacific Coast. Previous to that he served as high school superintendent. His last service in this capacity was at Lehigh, Kansas. Here a farewell meeting was recently held in his honor. Brother Wiens may leave sometime in February. His wife and two children will remain living in Newton.

—"Only A Boy" was the junior sermon topic of Brother Henry Franzen, pastor of the Buhler (Kansas) Mennonite Church on January 9.

—Junior Sunday School teachers and Superintendents: How do you like the illustrations in the new Mennonite Junior Quarterly? Write to the editor of this paper and state whether the illustrations are clear and helpful or not.

—Married: Floyd L. Fiedler and Lucille E. Ruth. The couple is at home on a farm near Freeburg, Illinois.

—According to a Gallup Poll residents of small towns and rural communities read the Bible more than urban residents.

—Notice: Ferd Neufeld, Route 1, Burrton, Kansas, is the new treasurer of the Board of Trustees of the Western District Conference. All moneys for this treasury should be sent to him.

—Two broken jars in a shipment of 55,900 pounds of canned goods. This amount of canned goods—or one carload—was sent from Newton, Kansas, to North Fork, California, for distribution to other western C.P.S. camps. When it got there only two jars were found broken. Rev. Gerhard Friesen supervised the packing and shipment of the goods.

—The Alexanderwohl Mennonite Church had a prayer service on the afternoon of January 9. The service was held because the congregation faces the necessity of electing an Elder, Brother P. H. Unruh having been the former one. Brother P. A. Penner, who brought the message for the occasion, based his words on the third chapter of II Peter.

—The Menno Mennonite Church, Lind Washington, divides its mission offering thus: five-eighths to foreign missions, two-eighths to home missions, and one-eighth to the Pacific District Conference.

—General Conference Membership increased 67 percent from 1926 to 1942 according to Information Service. Membership in 1926 was 21,582 and in 1941-42 was 36,032. The Conservative Amish Mennonite Church had the largest increase in percent, namely 294.9 percent.

—Between 1926 and 1941-42 the total church membership reported in the Continental United States increased 25.5 per cent, the number of religious bodies reporting increased 20.7 per cent, and the estimated population increased 14.3 per cent. Numerous small religious bodies made spectacular gains, but more than one-third of the small bodies reported decreases. The main growth in church membership is accounted for by 50 bodies having over 50,000 members. The 43 Protestant bodies having over 50,000 members gained at the rate of 23.8 percent, almost exactly the same as the Roman Catholic gain in the same period—23.3 percent.—Information Service —Mennonite Church, Madrid, Neb.: This little church gave $386.00 at its harvest mission festival this fall. Brother Alvin Fast, pastor, writes, "From January 23 through the 30th we expect to have a series of special services with the Rev. P. H. Richert of Newton as our guest speaker. We are expecting great blessings from God."

—Dr. J. D. Unruh, President of Freeman Junior College, has resigned to enter other teaching duties; so reports the Bundesbote.

—The Second Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: The Junior, Intermediate, and Senior C.E. societies meet from 2 to 3 o'clock on Sunday afternoons to accommodate those families who find it difficult to come for evening meetings. This arrangement is for the winter months.

—Bluffton College: Professor G. A. Lehman, baritone from Rochester Divinity School recently gave a song recital. Professor Lehman was formerly head of the Department of Music at Bluffton College. Recently, A. C. Ramseyer, member of the Board of Trustees, gave $8,000 for the remodelling of College Hall. Dr. M. C. Lehman is scheduled to speak on Mennonite relief problems on January 26. Dean Bender of Goshen College and Paul Harris are scheduled for speeches at later dates.

—Bethel College: Missionary H. J. Brown told the Student Volunteers on January 11 of God's guidance in his life. The group is again giving programs in various churches.

—First Mennonite Church, Bluffton, Ohio: Lloyd L. Ramseyer, President of Bluffton College, has been elected chairman of the congregation. Dr. C. H. Smith, Rev. F. Pannabecker, and Dr. I. W. Bauman compose the peace committee, which is to carry on a program of peace education and to look after the church's relationship to C.P.S.

—Rev. Walter Gering, who is conducting special services for the First Mennonite Church, Berne, is conducting a study in the book of Amos in the morning Bible study periods.

—The M.C.C. has doubled its relief budget for the coming year. The Clothing Depot Report showed an increase for the current year of more than eleven tons of relief clothing. A new activity of the committee is the training of relief workers. For the time being Congress has blocked relief work in foreign countries by C.P.S. men. However, the way may still open.

—Approximately one-tenth of the Church of the Brethren (Dunkards) young men have gone into Civilian Public Service as an alternative to the use of armed force in the settling of disputes.

—One rural pastor writes: (Brother Raid of Fortuna wrote this sometime ago, and the editor unfortunately misplaced the letter.) We have the chickens in the new house. (Brother Raid, who formerly taught industria arts, and members of his congregation built a new her house out of used and new lumber this fall.) They really seem to like it. It is warm and light. We got forty-three eggs; that is the most. Am planning on getting some good dairy calves; a number of the men have o are getting some more as they are planning on putting in a cooperative milk plant in town. It would certainl help this country a lot." (Brother Raid follows th Apostle Paul in not being ashamed of using his hands Furthermore, he lives close to his people by sharin their manner of life. We hope to run a good article from him sometime.—Editor)

—Rev. I. J. Dick of Mountain Lake writes, "We had farm sale in November but still live on the farm an are nearly as busy as ever. There is plenty of work i the church. (Brother Dick is one of those strong, consecrated men who has carried on with both farm an church work.)

—The Menno Mennonite Church, Lind, Washington wit a membership of 131 gave a total of $23,638.56 this pa year. Contribution per member averaged $172.03.

—Dr. Ed. G. Kaufman after returning from a meetin of Mennonite college presidents at Cincinnati, Ohi brought the morning message for the Eden Mennoni Church, Moundridge, on January 16. This church, th fourth largest in the conference, is Brother Kaufman home church.

While It Is Yet Day

Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church
Wichita, Kansas

Dear Friends of Home Missions:

Those of us who are making every special effort to foster Mennonite fellowship in Wichita have been somewhat heartened by the forward step of the Western District Conference in endorsing and creating a revolving, new church building fund. However it takes time to develop such a fund sufficiently large to make itself felt to any large degree.

In Wichita the need for a house of worship, with more or less adequate facilities, is urgent.

Much precious grain is being lost for lack of adequate ingathering machinery and storage facilities. Much valuable material and support has already been lost to the Mennonite membership at large for lack of a progressive and constructive expansion program.

Our group here is steadily growing and has done remarkably well, according to its ability. However, growth in attendance and membership is not abreast

Give Versus Grab

We are much tempted to grab. It seems wise and satisfying to do so. We say to ourselves, "If I can only gather enough in for myself, then I shall be happy." We are so impressed with our wants that we strive desperately to fulfill them.

But, alas, grabbing does not bring that much longed for happiness. For feeding one want makes twelve others spring up and bark for satisfaction. That means more and more grabbing.

And grabbing doesn't work so well in a world where it is practiced so extensively. The individual soon finds himself failing in many of his attempts. He feels frustrated. He is not getting what he wants so badly. He is pained and unhappy. If he could only have his way! But he can't because of the interference of others. How sad it all is. Clutching for life he finds it slipping away through his fingers.

How different it is with giving. God made man for purposeful activity. He has also given him a way of life in which he need not be blocked or frustrated. That way is the way of giving. Desire to give and you will always find a ready welcome for it. The world is full of need. Man wants what other man can give.

It is natural for us to enjoy activity. How much better it then is to enjoy that kind that will not be blocked for us. Why insist upon enjoying grabbing? One can enjoy giving. How much wiser to enjoy that of which the world never has enough. What an unlimited amount of happiness there is in store for him who has learned to enjoy a life of giving.

Willingly making a sacrifice of what ordinarily is taken as the one sure way to happiness, he finds himself on the road to heaven. There are no dead ends to this road. The light is always green. Giving himself away, he finds a joy that can come in no other way.

"He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." (Matt. 10:39)

PROMISES

"Promises are like pie-crust, made to be broken," said a person one day. Yes, they are often lightly made and as lightly broken. We may think ourselves honest people, as honest, that is, as the average person. Yet everyone of us can, no doubt, recall many small promises which have not yet been made good.

For example, how are you faring with your New Year's resolutions? No doubt, they were made in good faith. It may be that your resolution was a promise to God that you would do this or that thing. Has that promise been made good? There is no merit in promises unless we have made an honest effort to do as we have promised.

Many promises are not kept merely because we have forgotten about them. Let all of us think about the commitments we have made to God and our fellow-men and make an honest effort to fulfill them.—Arthur Wenger

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

HOW TIMES CHANGE

In 1803 at the Ibersheim Conference in South Germany it was decided that all Mennonite young men who voluntarily took military service should be excommunicated from the Mennonite fellowship. Many of the Mennonites were pressed into military service during the Napoleonic wars, but they were anxious to maintain their position and testimony of non-resistance. Fearing the loss of this testimony, many Mennonites from France, Switzerland, and South Germany decided to migrate to the United States. Three-quarters of a century later a large number of Mennonites in Russia feared the same thing and decided to migrate to the Western part of this country and Canada. They preferred giving up their homes and friends in the lands of their birth to surrendering religious freedom and remaining at home.

The Irony of the Present

What seems so ironical about the present situation among many American Mennonites in the light of what our forefathers suffered is their attitude toward religious freedom now that they have it. Now that this freedom has been won and Christian consciences are respected by law, many of our people not only refuse to use this freedom but they renounce the very doctrine for which their fathers struggled and won.

The section of the law deferring Conscientious Objectors from training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States reads as follows: "Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to require any person to be subject to combatant training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States who by reason of religious training and belief, is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. Any such person claiming such exemption from combatant training and service because of conscientious objections whose claim is sustained by the local board shall, if he is inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act, be assigned, to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or shall, if he is found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, in lieu of induction, be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction."

Rural Support

What strange changes time does bring? Men seek for goals which when they obtain them they renounce again. It is gratifying that the Mennonite Church still officially holds to the freedom won by our fathers. It is further significant that Mennonites in the rural areas are supplying the men to maintain this Christian witness in largest numbers. Biblical non-resistance is one of the great Christian traditions Mennonites have given witness to through the centuries. There are other doctrines and traditions too. Are rural people supplying the largest number of witnesses for these too?

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

PROFESSIONAL POVERTY

The reader will remember our previous articles about the various phases of poverty we find on the mission field. We are very glad to report that most of our poor Christians are honestly poor; and if our friends in America can send something for the poor so that we can give them a chance to earn, they eagerly take the chance. It is also a joy to us to see when a family has food to eat and the father can look up with a smile because he feels he has earned his family's food. We are most grateful to friends in America who have contributed from time to time so that our several hundred poor people can earn something and live.

But there are always a few who make the managing of relief funds difficult. All who have ever been called upon to manage relief work and funds will readily understand that it is not all easy. I wish to tell you here about our Christian brother, Beni. He lives about 2 miles from our mission station. He has a wife and four children. The whole family is on a starvation level. He comes to me and asks for help. I say "Yes, there is some ground to level out, I'll pay you well for it, go and do it." "It is too hot," he replies. Then I say, "Well, I need some bricks at the new well, go and carry bricks and I'll give you so and so much per thousand (a little over standard rates)." He replies: "I can't carry bricks." Then I say: "I have field work, cutting ravines and filling in others." He replies: I have never done such work." And so on. He turns down offer after offer, yet he sits at my door and looks at me with accusing eyes which say: "You hard man, why don't you dish out something to me for nothing." It came to my mind that such is professional poverty. Having nothing, wanting nothing, accusing others for their condition. It seems to me that neither God nor man can help such people. There must first come a change of the spirit within.

HEARTFELT THANKS

Dear Editor:

Greetings in the Lord!

We desire to express our deepest thanks to the large number who have interceded in prayer for the wellbeing of our interned missionaries on the Philippine Islands.

Truly, dear friends, the Lord has heard your prayers. He has wonderfully kept our missionaries, Lester Wuthrichs, Marvin Dirkses and family and Albert Jantzens and family, from harm. To Him be honor, praise, and glory.

Once more we thank you, dear friends, and let us continue in prayer that the Lord may continue to shield them from all harm. Praised be His name!

(Mrs. Wuthrich was Agnes Harder; Mrs. Dirks was Frieda Albrecht; Mrs. Jantzen was Wilma Lichti.)

We thank you all in the name of our precious Savior, Jesus Christ, the living Son of God. Amen.

John and Levina Lichti.

with the influx of Mennonites to Wichita. One reason for this, of course, is lack of active interest in a goodly number of our Mennonite younger folk in their own church program before they came here. Another is that it is fairly easy for some of our fine, commodious city churches, with their up-to-date facilities, to welcome incoming Mennonites into their groups. A third, and even more obvious reason, is a feeling that with our crowded conditions and lack of facilities present members and church goers would be deprived if they added to the congestion.

Therefore, we repeat that unless something can be done very soon, that will make it possible to offer adequate facilities and a progressive, constructive church program, casualties among Mennonite youth to our own Mennonite cause will continue to be large. It is alarming, but we do not believe hopeless.

It is however a problem in which all of the churches of the Western District Conference must take an active interest if it is to be solved. Other churches and denominations are continuing to grow and expand by leaps and bounds and are continually absorbing talent that is indeed a very definite loss to the cause of Mennonite church growth and education.

We are indeed grateful to all the friends from near and far, both Mennonite and non-Mennonite, that have already contributed to the new church building fund here. Our own group here have done especially, remarkably well.

We have again undertaken a special three-months active solicitation effort in order to try to raise the additional necessary funds to enable us to build, at least, the auditorium and basement part of the church building. Perhaps most folks are aware of the fact that our present building used for church purposes was built and designed to be used later as the parsonage. To this building the group here built an addition. However, again this has become entirely inadequate.

It was indeed gratifying to receive a nice gift, unsolicited, from the Young Women's Sunday School Class of the Hoffnungsau Mennonite Church of Inman, Kansas, for the church building fund.

Gifts could either be forwarded to Rev. P. E. Frantz, pastor, or to the Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, 655 South Lorraine, Wichita, Kansas; or if preferable, to the treasurer of the Western District Conference to be either earmarked for the Wichita Church, or to be considered as a loan.

The Expansion Committee.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Rev. H. P. Fast, Orienta, Oklahoma

FEBRUARY 1—"For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost. Luke 19:10

Man is sinful by nature, and a sinner by deed. He is lost. His first, great need is salvation. He needs to be saved from the guilt and penalty of sin, which gives him a new heart. He needs to be saved from the power and dominion of sin, which gives him a new life. He needs to be saved from the temptation and presence of sin, which gives him a new hope. Jesus Christ is the Savior; therefore he needs Christ All who trust in His atoning work experience His salvation. Salvation is a present personal possession. Christianity is a personal relationship with Christ.

FEBRUARY 2—". . . Sirs, what must I do to be saved? . . . Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved . . ." Acts 16:30, 31

Never did a man ask a more important question than the Philippian jailer. He received a simple, clear answer. Faith is the hand that takes. To believe is to trust. The one who sees himself lost and trusts in Christ is saved. Thousands have had this experience. All need it. All may have it. To believe in Christ means to cease to believe in ourselves, or in anyone, or anything else. "Nothing in my hand I bring; simply to thy cross I cling."

FEBRUARY 3—"For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." II Cor. 5:21

What an exchange! It is the greatest bargain ever made. He took my sin and gives me his righteousness. He took my place of condemnation, and gives me his place of justification. God dealt with his Son as he would deal with sin. Christ was made the very object of sin. His sinless body became sin that my sinful body and soul might be looked upon, by God, as sinless. If I trust in Christ, God sees me and deals with me as though I had never sinned. What love!

FEBRUARY 4—"And Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house . . ." Luke 19:9

Zacchaeus met Christ and was saved. Note the steps in his salvation. First, his desire, his need; his sincerity is expressed in running along the streets of Jericho and climbing a tree. Ordinarily this is not considered becoming to people of wealth and prominence. Secondly, he received Christ—verse 6. Thirdly, he restored what he had taken falsely. A biblical conversion includes these three: repentance toward God; faith toward the Lord Jesus Christ, and restitution toward men.

FEBRUARY 5—". . . These men are the servants of the most high God, which shew unto us the way of salvation."

What a testimony from the lips of one who was still bound by satan. To show the way of salvation we must know that way by personal experience. Many around us need to know that way. May we show them the way by our testimony and life. There is no more important work than this for us to do. There is much darkness as to the way of salvation even among Church members. Many know the way, but will not choose it. May God make us servants of the most high God.

FEBRUARY 6—"And that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."

The theme of the scripture is Christ. The work of Christ is to save. God gave us the Bible to instruct us, not how to live in order that we might be saved. but how to be saved, in order that we might live. God does not save good people. He saves the ungodly and makes them godly. The law said, "Do, and you shall live," the gospel says, "Live, and you will do."

FEBRUARY 7—"How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation . . .?" Heb. 2:3

To be lost we need do nothing; all are lost. We were born with our backs toward God. We were conceived in sin. We were born onto the broad road. To continue on that road leads to destruction. If we neglect to accept God's provision of salvation in Christ, there will be no escape from judgment. The salvation in Christ is great because it demanded the greatest sacrifice, because it saves from the uttermost to the uttermost, and because of the great consequences if someone neglects to accept it.

FEBRUARY 8—"He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?

When God gave his Son he gave all. When we purchase an article, wrapping paper and string goes with it. When we have Christ, we have all spiritual blessings. Aside from Christ we have none. Christ is the key to God's treasure-house for this life and for the life to come. In Christ all of God's many gifts are wrapped up. Are we in him and is he in us?

PICTURES

Educators and journalists are using pictures more widely than they have ever done before. We can learn facts from pictures that could not be brought to us in many words of description. Photographs of people, especially, tell us much that words could not impart. Take the picture on page 728 in Smith's Story of the Mennonites. It is the picture of a Mennonite refugee Madonna, enroute from Harbin, China, to the Gran Chaco in 1930. This picture would serve as an excellent subject for themes in English classes because it expresses so much about the story and the character of the woman and her child.

We need more good pictures of our older people, our missionaries, our church leaders, and our pastors. Such pictures have great historical value. The Mennonite Historical Library at Bethel College has a collection of such photographs, and an attempt is being made to make it much more complete than it now is.

Since these photographs should portray the personality and the character of the individual, it is essential that they be good pictures. Many pictures in the files show poor workmanship. A few simple rules on the taking of pictures are therefore in order.

In the first place, if a camera is jarred it cannot take a clear picture. There are few people who can hold a camera still enough to take a good picture, unless they have an expensive camera with a fast shutter. It is always better to set the camera on a tripod or a firm support rather than to hold it in the hands when taking pictures. If, however, no support is accessible, take a deep breath and hold it, press the camera firmly against the chest, and snap it with the right arm and hand away from the body and touching no part of the camera with the right hand except the release.

Another simple rule is that it is difficult to get a good portrait of a person near noonday or of a person looking directly towards the sun. If the sun is about half way between noonday and the horizon, it will hit the face at an angle that will reveal the features of the face most accurately. The person photographed should turn away from the sun enough so that the light strikes just at the profile of the face. The lens of the camera should always be shaded so that no direct rays of light hit it.

Good portraits can be taken in the shade if the camera has a diaphram or a stop that can be opened to admit more light. Pictures in the shade, however, should not be taken on porches or beneath the branches of trees. The person photographed should always stand so that there is open sky directly above him.

More amateur pictures are spoiled by a faulty backgrounds than by any other single mistake that might be made. A common fault is to line up people close to the wall of a house so that the siding of the house detracts from the portrait. If the picture is to be a portrait there should never be any details in the background that will attract our attention away from the person photographed. Often there are details in the background that seem to grow out of the subject's head. The sky, a smooth hill, a uniform expanse of foliage, a large even toned rock, or the side of a building if there are no windows, doors, or lines to distract one's interest are excellent backgrounds.

The problem of a natural expression is a difficult one for most amateurs. One should choose the background, set up the camera, pick the place where the subject is to stand, measure the distance, and if possible compute the exposure before placing the person for the picture. Then have them stand in the proper place and suggest a pose that is natural for them. Now take the picture before the person has a chance to become camera conscious. Often it is well to have the person do something or hold some object at which he is looking.

The picture should be so spaced that the person's head is in the upper half of the picture. The subject's head should be a little to one side of the center of the picture and should be facing towards the center of the picture rather than to the nearest outer edge.

In taking group pictures, it is well to plan to use an ordinary 45 degree front lighting; that is, the light should fall across the shoulder of the photographer. In grouping, one should avoid a too mechanical arrangement at the other extreme a too confused arrangement. One should watch to see that an equal amount of light is hitting every part of the group.

There are many excellent rule books for amateur photographers. How To Use Your Camera, by the editor of Camera Craft, San Francisco, was used for this article.

"The latest statistics indicate there are as many as 10,000,000 lepers in the world. At present, the areas of highest incidence are (in order of importance) Africa, Asia, the West Indies, Mexico, Central America, and the northern half of South America. Cases of leprosy have been recorded in thirty-eight states in this country." —Selected

Youth Jottings

—Hendrik Van Loon on the movies: Moving pictures producers are a group of money chasers who are turning an entire race of youngsters into hysterical little psychopaths, whose eyes and ears must forever be glued to something that can only be described by a single word 'ignoble.' "

—Here's How: The Senior C. E. of the Burrton Mennonite Church gave a program for the Halstead Mennonite Church on January 9 and then gave it to their own church on January 16. Thus one program was made to do double-duty. A good program is worth repeating.

—Youth conferences for Oklahoma young people are to be held before the heavy spring work begins. The plan is to have each church have a conference with an afternoon and evening session. Leaders have been appointed for these conferences. The leader will present the coming Oklahoma retreat and the various projects of our C.E. societies. He will be willing to assist the pastor and the C.E. organization with other problems that they may have in regard to young people's work. The leader is also to give one or two messages that are to be inspirational, devotional, and evangelistic. See the front page of the last Mennonite for the names of these leaders.

—Shafter, California: Our young people are editing a paper "Y.P.C.E. News" quarterly for those in the service and other young people away from here. Vernon Neufeld is editor. We started it in January 1943. —Mrs. Albert Froese —Ellis Graber delegate to youth conference: Ellis Graber, who is president of the young people's organization of the Northern District and at present a student at Hartford Seminary, attended the Student Planning Conference on the World Mission of the Church, which was held at Wooster, Ohio, December 28 to January 3. The conference was limited to 500 students from Canada, Mexico, and the United States. There were fifty foreign students in attendance and forty-two seminary students. Ellis Graber was the only Mennonite student present. He is to speak at a convocation service in the Hartford Chapel on January 27 at 4 p.m. at which time he will present the plans on the World Mission of the Church. After some local lectures he and other delegates will spread the message of the conference throughout New England speaking in schools and churches. Mr. Graber was one of the photographers at the conference, and some of his pictures will appear in publications on the conference which will be edited soon.

—Some Missionary Kids! (Readers may be interested in the following descriptions of Arthur and Harold Thiessen that were given in a recent issue of the Olive Branch, the camp paper of the Grottoes, Virginia, C.P.S. camp.)

"Arthur Thiessen is the son of missionaries to India. Spending most of his four and a half years in this country at Bluffton College, Ohio, he has been taking a pre-medical course, and some day hopes to return to India as Dr. Thiessen, M.D. The draft interrupted his studies, but it has not hindered his experience in practical life. Here at camp he has been "doc's" assistant on numerous occasions, and knows what it means to treat the aches and colds. The chemistry and anatomy he learned in college is blossoming forth in deeds of kindness around the infirmary.

Arthur has been here four months now and is looking forward to a transfer to the Florida unit." (Has transferred. Sorry, no picture obtainable.)

"Harold Thiessen is another "M.M." or Missionary Kid. He managed to graduate from Bluffton College before he went to Goshen for the Relief Training Unit, where he became more convinced that the suffering world needed some help.

Before coming to Grottoes, four months ago, he gave his promise to a Mennonite Maid, and joined the ranks of the married, never to be regretted." (Has also transferred to Mulberry, Florida, Unit.)

Harold Thiessen as College Graduate

—Hugh Hostetler, who also has an article in the above-mentioned paper and who is the son of Rev. and Mrs. Lester Hostetler of North Newton, Kansas, is introduced thus: "Hugh Hostetler came to Grottoes from the Goshen Relief Unit and has showed an active interest in discussions on subjects concerning religion and its relation to everyday life. He is a keen thinker, spiritually minded and always ready to seek the truth. Hugh is looking forward to relief service, and with an honest interest in the church's problems he has written here." Hugh has also been transferred to the Mulberry, Florida, unit, where he will continue training for relief.

—Industrial Arts Shop: The young people of the Mennonite Church at Fortuna, Missiouri, are so fortunate as to have a pastor that is able and willing to teach them to make things. Rev. Raid formerly taught industrial arts in high school. But more than that, he has fixed up one of the rooms in the spacious parsonage with tools and machines for the young people to use. The Fortuna community is a wooded country with hard wood trees that furnish good lumber for making things. How's this for a good use of leisure time?

Hugh Hostetler as College Senior

—Letters of Purpose: On January 1, 1939, eighteen young people of the First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California, prepared letters of "Purpose" and gave them to the pastor with the understanding that they were to be returned to the writers January 1, 1944. This year they were returned. Helen A. Penner, commenting on this plan, writes, "This is an interesting idea that might well be tried by other groups. It is well at times to take an inventory of ourselves. Has our purpose changed? Are we better Christians than we were five years ago or even a year ago? Has our purpose enlarged?"

—Jake Enz of Newton, Kansas, is president of the Student Association of Biblical Seminary, New York, which he is attending.

—Always double-space any typewritten material which you send in to The Mennonite. The copy can be corrected much more easily, and those who set the type can read it much better. Remember, Double-space.

—"No Such firm or address at Newton, Kansas." is stamped on an envelope before me that bears the address, "The Mennonite, Newton, Kansas." Remember, contributions for The Mennonite should be sent to North Newton and not Newton. All subscription matters should be mailed to the Mennonite Publication Office, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas. It is important to get these two addresses right.

CORRESPONDENCE

LORRAINE AVENUE MENNONITE CHURCH

Wichita, Kansas

At a congregational meeting last September, we passed a resolution to build our new church as soon as we have the necessary funds and material. Since other churches are being built here we unquestionably could too if the money were at hand. We further decided to give 50c per member per Sunday which has already brought in a very substantial sum.

Furthermore, we have now organized our whole church for a new three-months campaign to solicit additional funds.

All this is because we are desperately in need of more room. With our present facilities it is impossible to take care of all our people coming to Wichita. Some of our members have threatened to leave our church if our over-crowded condition is not remedied. Most Sundays we have to place chairs in the aisles and corners. We have many small children and babies in our congregation but no nursery. Even the basement has every bit of space utilized by the Sunday School and week-day Bible school; no room for a rocker or bed for these little ones. The Women's Friendship Circle cannot even find space for a sewing machine for their work.

One of the neighbor women said not long ago, "Last summer when I passed by your church on Sunday morning, it looked as though your people were hanging out of the windows and about to "bust" out the walls. That was blunt but expressive. Gasoline and tire shortage, long, hard working hours, night work and Sunday employment now lowers our attendance. When the war ends our condition will be even more acute.

For the 192 members to build adequately for the growing future is a big undertaking. We do need outside help. When so many millions are spent for destructive purposes it seems shameful that the cause of Christ and His church should be so hindered because of lack of money. Our church life and growth is very definitely retarded because of poor accommodations. This is truly a mission field and now foreign mission fields are in part closed for us, why not carry on the mission work lying at our door?

We now have about $7,000 in cash and about $4,000 in unpaid pledges; but we estimate our need $25,000 to $30,000. Now is the golden time, money is plentiful. Is God's cause getting its share?

> God builds no churches. By His plan
> This labor has been left to man.
> The humblest church demands its price
> In human toil and sacrifice.

NEW YORK FELLOWSHIP IS ACTIVE

The January meeting of the New York Mennonite Fellowship was held at the Biblical Seminary in New York on January 5. Sixteen Mennonites of the New York area were present; two of this number attended for the first time: Rev. Howard G. Nyce of Allentown, Pennsylvania and John Hostetler, a member of the Marlboro, New Jersey, C. P. S. Unit.

Erna Fast, a student at Biblical seminary, opened the meeting with devotionals using the Mennonite Hymnary——the first time this hymnbook has been used in the meetings of the Fellowship. Rev. Nyce then gave an excellent review of the missionary work of the General Conference indicating statistics, accomplishments, problems, and outlook for the future. It was of interest to note that an estimate revealed that there is one missionary for every 350 members of the General Conference (counting missionaries and their wives). This report of the missionary activity proved to be very helpful.

The group is looking forward to the possibility of having Dr. J. Winfield Fretz as its next speaker on February 2.

Any names of Mennonites who have moved into the New York area recently should be sent to Jacob J. Enz, 235 East 49th Street, New York 17, New York.

A NEGATIVE INFLUENCE

Another testimony for church-controlled education as against public education is that of William C. Bower of the University of Chicago in a recent lecture at the University of Virginia. Through the exclusion of religion in the public schools, as Mr. Bower said, "The cultural inheritance of the nation's childhood and youth has been not only distorted, but dismembered and falsified. Without intending it, the school is placed in a position of exerting a negative influence regarding religion, since what appears to be neutrality turns out practically to be a discrediting of religion."

—The Bethel Mennonite Church, Wolf Point, Montana, had its annual church meeting on December 27. Apart from the election of officers, the members decided to take up a monthly offering for the C.P.S. camps and to have two weeks of evangelistic meetings during this year. The pastor was re-elected by unanimous vote for another term of three years. We decided to get a church parsonage as soon as possible. The land has already been purchased, and work on the basement will begin immediately.—Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Colfax, Washington: At the annual business meeting Rev. W. Harley King was re-elected as our pastor for another year. We appreciate his faithful and untiring guidance. Carl Waltner and Irvin Aeschliman were elected as deacon and representative of the young people, respectively, to act in an advisory capacity on the church council. Our benevolent contributions for 1943 amounted to $4,010.00. This does not include the benevolent contributions of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor societies, which are union (with the Methodists) enterprizes. The total of $1,653.54 for War and India Relief was the highest. Foreign missions received $982.87. Home missions received $504.89, not including the Pacific District appropriation. The amount given for peace work was $438.75. The total expenditure for local work was $2,950.00.

—Mrs. Alvin M. Rubin, Corr.

—Pulpit Changes in 1943: (As listed in the church paper of the Grace Mennonite Church, Lansdale, Pa.) 1943 will go down in history as a year for many pulpit changes. Here in our Eastern District there was, Souderton, Second Philadelphia, Fairfield, Perkasie, and Roaring Spring. In the Pacific District there was Reedley, Calif.; Pratum, Oregon and Portland, Oregon. In the Northern District there was Salem-Zion of Freeman, S Dak.; Butterfield, Minn.; Bloomfield, Mont.; Madrid, Neb.; and Alsen, N. D. In the Middle District there was Berne, Ind.; Noble, Iowa; Wayland, Iowa; Fortuna, Mo.; Nappanee, Ind.; and Lima, Ohio. In the Western District there was Alexanderwohl, Goessel, Kan.; Burrton, Kan.; Enid, Okla.; Geary, Okla.; Sichar, Okla.; Herald, Bessie, Okla., Zion, Kingman, Kan.; Meadow, Colby, Kan., and in the last month the pastor at Newton, Kan., resigned.

—C.O. statistics: There are 55,280 C. O's in Britain. About 16,000 of these are serving as noncombatants. Canada has about 5000 C.O's. Here in the U. S. 13 men in C.P.S. have met their death through accident or sickness.

—First Mennonite Church, Shafter, California: Dr. J. H. Langenwalter is to spend a week with us, beginning January 30. I am sure we will enjoy his services as much as others have.

—Mrs. Albert Froese

—The program of theThird Quarterly Conference of the Eastern District unfortunately came too late for publication. The Second Mennonite Church of Philadephia was host to the conference which was held January 24. The program included a discussion of the Phillippian Epistle by Brother Harold D. Burkholder, an illustrated lecture on "Church Architecture" by Brother George S. Stoneback, and business. The Brethren Paul R. Shelly and Winfield Fretz presented some matters to the ministers during the luncheon hour.

—The brethren D. J. Unruh of Pandora, Ohio, and C. H. Dirks of Hutchinson, Kansas, are the two main speakers at the Bible Conference that is being concluded this week at the Oklahoma Bible Academy. Brother John W. Boehr of Dallas, Texas, was also scheduled to speak sometime during the conference. Several pastors of the Oklahoma churches were also to give special messages, and regular faculty members were to offer several of the courses. Brother D. J. Unruh served the church at Meno on January 16 and 23. Brother John Boehr is to serve it on January 30.

—Foreign Service: Foreign service for C.P.S. men is off again.

Without comment or explanation, a joint committee of U. S. Senators and Representatives agreed to eliminate form a Deficiency Appropriation Bill the amendment specifically allowing C.P.S. foreign units.

Although such conference committees operate in executive session with no official record being kept of their conversations, it was understood that several Representatives had objected to the proposal, which the Senate had passed the week previous, and the Senate agreed to recede.

The action ended all hopes for official approval of C.P.S. foreign service in that particular legislation. Any further attempt to lift the ban applied by Congress last June must start again from the beginning.

—The Reporter

—The death of C. H. Musselman was mentioned in last week's issue. The following additional facts recently appeared in the Berne Witness. In 1928 Mr. Musselman made a gift to Bluffton College of $160,000 for a library and its maintenance. (Library was pictured in last issue.) He followed this gift with other sizeable contributions to the school. Mr. Musselman was the founder, president and general manager of the C. H. Musselman Company, one of the largest fruit processing companies in the nation. "His canning plant, which he started from a small bankrupt concern, is now a ten million dollar plant, covering fifty acres and 1,000 acres of fruit bearing trees.

—Word has come of the death of Mrs. H. D. Penner, widow of Rev. H. D. Penner who was well known in the conference. Mrs. Penner had been staying at the Home for Aged, Newton. Funeral services were held on January 18. After a short service at the Home for the Aged the body was taken to Hillsboro for the funeral service in the First Mennonite Church and for burial.

—Mary Becker, missionary candidate for the India field, is busy teaching school at Goessel, Kansas. However, she manages to find time to be managing editor for the Missionary News and Notes. Miss Becker has promised an article for the near future.

—A number of the students of the Mennonite Bible Academy, Newton, have organized themselves into a group called "Ambassadors for Christ." The group has already served some of our churches.

—Expression of thanks for canned goods: Dr. H. A. Fast states that the C.P.S. camps are expressing deep appreciation for the canned goods sent to them from the various Mennonite communities and that they would like to have these thanks conveyed to all the people who have had a share in this important work.

—Brother H. J. Andres has plenty of work as Administrator of the Bethel Deaconess Hospital, Newton. However, in addition he serves as Chairman of the Publication Board of our conference and also as President of the Kansas State Hospital Association, as well as taking an active part in the local church. Recently Brother Andres spoke on "The Problems and Opportunities of the Smaller Hospitals" in connection with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Salem Hospital, Hillsboro, Kansas.

—One way to get letters written to ALL one's friends is to have one letter duplicated and sent to your complete mailing list. Missionary and Mrs. Harold Ratzlaff, at intervals, have such a letter mimeographed and mailed to their many friends in the homeland. If you desire such service, write the editor for information.

—Want your Mennonites bound in neat volumes? Ministers and others may care to have their Mennonites of each year bound in a volume that is easy to use. You can have this done for as little as $1.50. The cover to be of buckrum. Old copies of the Mennonite are often very valuable for reference purposes.

Twentieth Century Godliness

by Donovan E. Smucker

The oldest conviction of Christian faith is quite simple: Man must be reconciled to God through the Lord Jesus Christ. The newest factor of the twentieth century is the amazingly widespread condition of Godliness. But, at the very outset we may notice a curious fact about modern unbelievers. I refer to their obvious sadness and unhappiness about the loss of faith.

In this Godless era there are millions who are also crying out: "Oh that I knew where I might find him."

Recently, I discovered a modern poem which caught this sense of pain in the hearts of those who have lost the Living Lord. The poem is a haunting tribute to the toll of atheism. It is contained in Edna St. Vincent Millay's famous verse: Conversation at Midnight. Listen!

"Man has never been the same since God died.
He has taken it very hard. Why, you'd think it was only yesterday,
The Way he takes it.
Not that he says much, but he laughs much louder than he used to.
And he can't bear to be left alone even for a minute,
And he can't sit still.
He gets along pretty well as long as its daylight: he works very hard
And he amuses himself with the many cunning amusements
This clever age affords.
But it's all no use: the moment it begins to get dark,
As soon as it's night
He goes out and howls over the grave of God."

He goes out and howls over the grave of God!!!" Christian friends: Isn't that a pathetic, tearful, heartsickening picture? The atheist trying to pull Almighty God down into a man-made grave! Human pride is a frightful thing.

What shall we say to this? Perhaps Psalm 53:1 says it most directly: "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. Corrupt are they, and have done abominable iniquity: there is none that doeth good."

Well, when men or armies lose one position they etreat to the nearest one behind them. And so it is with faith. When humanity lost God then it decided to worship itself—to worship man. Thus Thomas Hardy. He discarded the Lord and then urged people to face life like this:

" . . . with dependence place
On the human heart's resource alone,
In brotherhood bonded close and graced
With loving kindness fully blown,
And visioned help, unsought, unknown."

Indeed, the worship of man by man is the greatest modern heresy. There is a colossal amount of practical atheism at this point atheism masquerading as Christianity. The well-known columnist, Dorothy Thompson, has written a brilliant paragraph on this very point. "Twenty years of observing the wars, miseries and savageries of the twentieth century," she writes, "have convinced me that what is happening to us is essentially a moral collapse . . . In eighteenth century America the leadership of the country was in the hands of preachers, scholars and soldiers. Whatever their limitations they had a strict moral sense. They had a conception of sin. They read the Bible, believed in the Ten Commandments, taught their children hellfire . . . That moral code was the very basis for the new world . . . I don't know," continues Dorothy Thompson, "when this moral code was replaced by the simple idea that wrongdoing is not profitable. If you listen to the radio dramas nowadays, you learn that crime doesn't pay. The G-men always get the gangsters in the end. In the old days it used to be God and remorse that were punishment. Nowadays God is J. Edgar Hoover and he's an inadequate substitute."

Our world is shattered today because it has put inadequate substitutes in place of the moral reality of God. Proverbs 3:5 says, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding."

Some of you may say: that may be true of the heavyweight thinkers and philosophers, but is it true of the common people? Is it true of the young people? Consider for a moment the funny papers or comics. There you will find an immense amount of clever atheism. And this to unbelievably large audiences. Members of the American Association of University Women made a survey of the schools in Gary, Indiana last winter. They questioned 696 grade school pupils. During that week they had read a total of 2,370 comic magazines or about 34 per pupil! And note well this astounding fact: one-third of these pupils had read nothing but comic strips. No Bible. No Scripture. Not even a good book of any kind. Who is the most popular hero of the comic strips? Why, it's that wonderful wizard known as "Superman." And what is the "Superman?" In my humble opinion he is a secular God. The God of the Bible no longer performs miracles. For, these great events are done by a super-man. (The word itself is a demonstration of what I am talking about. Not God Almighty. But superman!) Recently educators in the Methodist church attacked these comics. They said that the super-man element encourages day-dreaming, convinces children that ordinary procedures are unworthy of consideration, and leads them to expect false miracles, instead of the proper means of solving difficulties. Maybe I'm getting rigid in the third year of my ministry. Maybe I'm an old-fogey. But I truly believe that a daily diet of Superman is a poor exchange for a regular study of the stories of the Bible.

There is a final resting place for those who have lost their faith. It is cynical disillusionment. The man-centered worship is exchanged for a sour, brooding hatred of humanity. Then the unbeliever is moved to the next step of retreat: the old, old philosophy of materialism. In 1900 a brilliant young American of that type went to Paris. He wanted to see the famous Paris Exposition. He wrote home to his relatives saying that every afternoon he went to the fairgrounds and prayed to the dynamo. He prayed to a mere piece of machinery. He said that he had nothing else to respect! My friend, I wonder if today millions of people are not praying to machinery to save them. I am sure this is the case. And how futile! For the machine soon becomes a Frankenstein monster which destorys its maker.

I cannot leave you at this point. For the Apostle Paul tells us not to sorrow as others which have no hope. (I Thess. 4:13.) Christianity brings a glorious message of good news for those who seek the blessed hope of God through Christ. At Christmas the world celebrated anew the blessed light of the Bethlehem star. If in this life we assume that star shines only on December 25th we are of all men most miserable. Thank God the Christian Incarnation is a year-round gift. "Jesus Christ . . . is our hope." (I Timothy 1:1).

LET US PRAY: O God, send Thy angels of mercy to all seeking Thy glorious presence. Purge this generation of unbelief! Save us from our sins! Open our heart through the faithful reading of Thy Word. Hasten the day when Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Amen.

The Starving in Europe

People of occupied Europe are starving. Need they? It hardly seems so. There, undoubtedly, is enough food in the whole world to feed all the peoples of the world. The Allied nations could send food to the starving.

But so far the protest has been made that it would help the Nazis. It is insisted that the Nazis would get the food instead of the starving. Yet the Swedish and Swiss governments have been sending food to Greece for many months. Our State Department admits that the food is being consumed by the Greeks and not by the Germans. Furthermore, it is reported that the British government trusts the Nazis enough to make generous provisions for British prisoners of war in Germany. These are, of course, unde German supervision. If such an arrangement exists then it would seem that there should not be a greate danger in providing food for the starving in the occupied countries.

Many people in America and England seem to favo feeding the starving. But the governments of thes two nations decide the issue. Senator Gillette ha now introduced into the senate a resolution that ask the Secretary of State to "work out, in cooperatio with the British government and the governments o Sweden, Switzerland and the accredited representa tives of the other governments concerned" a plan fo feeding the starving peoples of Axis-occupied countrie If you favor such action why not write your senato asking them to vote in favor of Senate Resolutio No. 100, the Taft-Gillette resolution.

ENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

LAND AND THE OLD TESTAMENT

n Old Testament times the life and fate of the d are so bound up with the life and fate of the ple that Jehovah in blessing the people for their dience also blesses the land with great fertility.

A Promise

od promises the Israelites the choice of a bless- or a curse depending on their obedience to Him. lessing: "If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my nmandments, and do them; then I will give you ns in their season, and the land shall yield its rease, and the trees of the field shall yield their t. And your threshing shall reach unto the vin- shall reach unto the sowing time; and ye shall your bread to the full, and dwell in your land ly. And I will give peace in the land, and ye ll lie down, and none shall make you afraid: and ill cause evil beasts to cease out of the land, neither l the sword go through your land . . ." Lev. 26:3-6.

ut this is only one-half of the promise, for God ns the Israelites that disobedience too has its re- d. He says: "I also will do this unto you: I appoint terror over you, even consumption and r, that shall consume the eyes, and make the to pine away; and ye shall sow your seed in for your enemies shall eat it. . .and I will break pride of your power: and I will make your heaven ron, and your earth as brass; and your strength l be spent in vain; for your land shall not yield ncrease, neither shall the trees of the land yield r fruit." Lev. 16: 19, 20. Who is there among ving men that would say that God did not keep promise throughout the ages on just these matters?

Attitude Toward Ownership

hen the Hebrews came into Canaan they shifted a semi-nomadic to an agricultural and pastoral It was in this capacity that they made their great ribution in religion and ethics, not later when became merchants and traders. The fundamental iple of Israel in regard to the land was that God the owner, the Lord of the land, He was the r but he had given it to his people and distri- d it to the various tribes. At first, it was held mmon property as in the nomadic civilization, n the course of time portions of fields were as- d by the sacred lot to individual families.

ere are many Scriptural references indicating tenaciously the Israelite families tried to keep rty in the family. The most dramatic example at of Naboth who refused to surrender it even generous offer from King Ahab. (I Kings 21). e law of the inheritance Num. 27:1-11, and in 36:1-12, Jer. 36:6-11 we see how sacredly y land holdings were viewed. Land was not to ld to strangers and if it was sold it was to be ned to the original owner in the year of Jubilee. re to respect these sacred customs is denounced mos, Micah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. Is there not much that the modern Christian farmer can profit by in meditating on the attitudes of Ancient Israel toward the land in which, and from which, they lived?

C. P. S. Men to Receive Monthly Allowance

As the C. P. S. program continues well into its third year, the M. C. C. is providing a monthly allowance for C. P. S. men. In many cases local congregations and conferences are providing their men with a monthly allowance, but there are other campers who receive no support.

To equalize allowances, the M. C. C. decided at its annual meeting to provide a plan, beginning January 1, 1944, whereby campers who do not receive any regular support from their home congregations or conferences may receive an allowance of five dollars per month from the M. C. C. This will only affect men in base or non-maintenance camps, as men in hospitals and on farms receive small allowances from their employers.

The camper has the privilege of using this allowance according to his own discretion, but it is suggested that it serve as an emergency fund from which to draw from time to time, or that it be permitted to accumulate and any unused credit on his account be kept to be given him upon discharge. If the camper chooses, he may contribute it to War Sufferer's Relief, C. P. S. Rehabilitation, or any other cause he considers worthy.

That congregations and churches continue to send their men allowances was approved and encouraged by the M. C. C. in order that the campers might be encouraged by such gestures of love and support, and that the bond of fellowship might remain intact. It is hoped that this practice may be adopted by other churches who have no such plan. But where campers do not receive five dollars per month from their home congregations or conferences, the M. C. C. will provide it.

Boards Present Budgets

Each year the boards of the General Conference are asked to make out their budgets for the year so that these may be published in the conference papers. For 1944 they are as follows:

Board of Foreign Missions	$90,000
Board of Home Missions	$25,727
Emergency Relief Board	$35,300
Board of Education	$4,500

The Board of Publication does not suggest a budget because a part of the expenses of the Board are met by receipts from the publications. However, due to the low price of these publications, the income is not sufficient for the expenses of the Board. For this reason the Board needs help from the churches and appreciates very much if every church holds at least one offering during the year for the work of the Board.

—Phil. A. Wedel, Secretary

Our Support of Civilian Public Sevice

At the annual meeting of the Mennonite Central Committee, December 30 and 31, 1943, held at Chicago, Ill., full reports were given of the relief activities of the Menn. Cenral Com. as well as of the whole work of Civilian Public Service. The report on C.P.S. also provided certain financial and statistical information. This report as a whole was quite encouraging, but it also indicated that our Conference continues to lag a little in carrying its proportionate share in the total cost of Civilian Public Service. The following table, I believe, will speak for itself. I hope it will serve to spur our Conference churches to contribute more liberally and consistently toward the support of this worthy Christian witness in this time of war. The last column was not furnished by the Mennonite Central Committee report; it was worked out b member of our Conference who was curious to out how our average annual contribution per ch member compared with similar contributions of o cooperating groups in the Mennonite Central C mittee.

It should be noted that the M. C. C. passed a tion to "clear the quota deficits" as of Novembe 1943 and to "start fresh as of December 1, 1943." is to be hoped, however, that God will lay it upon heart and conviction and consciences of our chur and our people to measure up more fully to our given opportunity and responsibility in C.P.S. (See table below)

The Mennonite Junior Quarterly

Our Lord's disciples were the first builders in the Christian church. They were sent out by our Lord with definite instructions to "preach" and to "teach" the gospel to all nations. They "kindled" the first fires of evangelism; we are to "keep" it burning. One way to do this is through the Sunday School. The work of the Sunday school begins with the child. Prov. 22:6 says, Train up a child in the way that he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it. Both the Old and the New Testaments emphasize the responsibility of parents and teachers in ministering to the spiritual needs of children. The noted Gypsy Smith said, "Save an adult you save a unit; save a child you save a multiplication table." "A child," someone has said, "is a field with a character hid in it." Another has said, "A boy is the beginning of a man." Someone else has said, "All one's adult life is the reflection of his childhood." A Scottish Shepherd was once asked how he could raise such good sheep, and he answered, "By taking care of the lambs."

Many are asking, "Why do pupils leave the Sunday School when they are fourteen?" One answer is, Because they are not saved before that time." To reach most effectively our youth for Christ in our Mennonite Sunday Schools we must have our own Sunday School material and lesson helps. The Mennonite Junior Quarterly is used by our Sunday School and we like it. The arrangement of its lesson material, its apt illustrations, and its emphasis on the saving power of Christ and on the work done by the organizations of our Conference should prove most helpful to our youth. recommend it as a good piece of work and w of adoption by our Sunday Schools.

Many of our Kansas Sunday Schools state problem as being the need of material and lesson for children and ask for advice. We hope that we will have our own Mennonite material, tr Christ and the Bible, which we can recommen every department of the Sunday School. One I saw a man planting an orchard and asked "How long will it be until you can realize som turns for your work?" He said, "From seven t years." "But why work so hard now for som you might get in ten years?" Then the man "If I don't plant trees now I won't get fruit i years. I am investing in the future."

Sincerely in Christ,

Another Letter from W. C. Voth

(Friends often ask what the latest word is from our velers in South America. We are now able to re a heartening letter.

After waiting for eleven days at Cali, Colombia, for plane reservations Mr. Voth was able to make the ht to Lima, Peru, on December 28. In Arequipa expected to meet Mr. Stucky who had gone earlier Ecuador and Peru and was at that time in Bolivia. ile on the plane he wrote that they were having a oth flight and that he was feeling fine. Arequipa, Peru his is New Years Day. Out here it is a very tiful day with its bright sunshine and cool moun- air. I stayed over one day in Lima and got to see e of the city. It is quite an impressive city con- ring that so much of Peru is a desert. Of course h of its wealth has come from silver and gold ing. I was surprised how much I heard the Eng- language used on streets and in stores.
January 1, 1944

r Ones at Home:

he narrow strip of Peru west of the great Andes ractically a desert except where the mountain ms bring water for irrigation. Arequipa with 80,000 population is entirely dependent on moun- water and so are all the towns south of Lima. e are some very nice farms though along the river ms, the way it looked from the plane.

little to the northeast of Arequipa rises majest- y the mountain "Misti" with its perfect cone- ed summit. They say it is snow-capped most of ear—but there is no snow on it now. However, north of here and a little farther back at the side ount Misti is the giant Mount Chachain, 20,000 igh, and it now has a nice white cap on it. These are in full and splendid view from here. They like they are just a short distance away, but be- of their tremendous height it must be many miles here. Then over to the other side of Mount Misti other giant called "Pichu-Pichu" which is 18,600 . . You recall Mount Evans which is I think o. So these Andes mountains are considerably r than the Colorado mountains.

the morning of December 30 the PAA (Pan- ican Airways) called me, and at 4:15 their car to pick me up and took the passengers to the t. Here we had our tickets checked and passed ns. Then breakfast. The Pan American Air- furnish meals while enroute and they are always good, supposed to be well balanced. So we have everal meals way up in the air. Shortly after fast the one clang of the bell rang. This is a for the airplane crew to march to the plane. o clangs of the bell the passengers line up at the exit door where an officer reads off each name as you file out to the plane. As soon as all passengers are inside the propellers begin to whirr and in a minute the plane moves out to the runway; the motors are spun for a few minutes to warm them up and to get the final check on them. Then we start off and you don't know just when the wheels leave the ground, but there is no roughness any longer and you see you are higher, so you know you are in the air.

It was 5:30 a. m. when we left Lima, just before sunrise. In a few minutes we were up at the lower cloud level and what a gorgeous sunrise! The sun emerged between the peaks of two mountains shrouded in the fleece of golden clouds, and then the glow changed into all exquisite colors. The day we came to Lima, the last stretch was also over much of desert land or rather desert mountains. The evening sun shone through some clouds on to those treeless, barren mountains and yellow sand beneath us. This made in the variety of color blending a very memorable sunset. And now when I saw the sunrise over the Andes I hardly knew which was the more superb.

January 4—Time does go pretty fast even when you have to wait for certain things—like waiting four days for a plane. You write about snow and zero weather. We have spring here. Sunday, January 2 I had my breakfast on the roof garden. Decorated with flowers and green shrubbery it is delightful and to crown the beauty of it there is that almost magic sight of the snowcapped mountain near by.

I went to the Mission Sunday School where Rev. A. H. Hawley has charge of the evangelistic work and also has the American Bible Society office. This is vacation time; so not many school children were there —had a good attendance of 130. Had a nice communion service in connection with the preaching service. Rev. Hawley asked if I would like to go with him to one of their other congregations in this city— they have four. This I did. I made a sketch of a field near here which Rev. Hawley wished we might consider.

Yesterday afternoon Mr. Stucky arrived from Bolivia. We were in the same boarding house and, of course, had lots of notes to compare. This was the first time we saw each other since November 26.

This morning we took the plane and came to Santiago, Chile. Just about an eight-hour flight. That took us a long way. About 1,200 miles farther south since this morning. This was a very nice flight again. The first 600 miles mostly desert hills and snow-capped mountains to our left and the great expanse of the blue Pacific to the right of the plane. All the way we flew right along the coast line.

January 7—Temuco—The morning of the fifth we went out to the Presbyterian Mission in Santiago . . . Yesterday we arrived here at Temuco after a night on train. There were no sleepers to be had, all booked long ahead . . .Tomorrow we expect to go to Chiloe Island where there is only one elderly couple at work on one end, we are told. Aout 100,000 inhabitants and an open field. Had schedule to leave by plane for Buenos Aires on January 15, but may have to change that date as we may not get back to Santiago in time.

South Chile is a beautiful country. Something like around Berne, Indiana, Brother Stucky says, lots of trees and somewhat hilly, but with the high Andes in the distance.

With much love to all,
(W. C. Voth)

From Dr. and Mrs. Delbert Preheim

Below are snatches of news from a letter written by Mrs. Preheim to Lena Waltner, who teaches at Bethel College. The letter was dated January 11.

"Air mail letters come regularly from our folks and some friends, but 'three-centers' tend to come in groups. Last Wednesday we had sixteen letters or cards, some of them having been on the way since November 7 . . .We are planning to organize a small hospital, hence will need more nurses and more C.P.S. men. We hope for two doctors but may get only one.

"Patients have been calling at rather inconvenient times. For instance, at 11:30 one night Del went out to a home where an old man was reported to have had a heart attack, but it was asthma. Having been a sufferer of asthma for a long time, he might have been taken care of by the family. However, the people were frightened, and such a call was perhaps justified. What we dislike more is to have people come on Sunday with no more ailment than a scratch or small infection. On Christmas Day, Del saw six patients, all of whom might have come the day before if they had wanted to. We'll take care of this problem with fees or special calls. Just handling our services and pills may harm these people more in the long run than it will help. Many are contributing to the hospital, however; some $150.00 have been collected locally for a project in the hospital. Patients also bring such things as eggs, fruit, or whatever they can.

Erwin Schrag . . .is doing an excellent job in the kitchen. To relieve him a bit, I make the menus and take over the kitchen half a day a week. Then on Sunday all of us take our turns at cooking. The boys help regularly with dishwashing, too. We have lettuce and turnips in our garden at present. O.K. for January, isn't it? For some time we have had very excellent tomatoes, sweet corn, and green beans, but are now waiting for the next crop. Food is good. Now in the orange season we are eating oranges and drinking juice to our heart's content. Bananas are available throughout the year, but one seems to tire of them if eaten too often. We still like them, however. Little boys call at our door periodically to sell these fruits.

"Carl Epp, who was at Bethel in 1937-38 is head gardener, but he also works in 4-H in the community building program. N. Paul Stucky is our laboratory technician now. He gets along fine with the "muchachas."

"Since its publication in 1889, the book, In His Steps, by Charles M. Sheldon, has had a total sale of more than 20,000,000 copies, says a United Press report." —Selected

News From Paraquay

(Herewith we present a letter from Mrs. John R. Schmidt which she wrote to relatives here in the United States. Brother and Sister Schmidt have been sent by the M.C.C. to Paraguay to do medical work among our needy brethren there.)

Phil. Chaco, Para., S. A.
November 19, 1943

Dear Friends:

Even though it is a warm afternoon, like an afternoon in August could be expected to be, we are sending you the very best wishes for a VERY MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A BLESSED NEW YEAR. It hardly seems possible that in a little more than a month, we will be celebrating Christmas again, but by then we hope that you will receive this letter.

We have been here in Philadelphia over two weeks now. The last part of our trip was most interesting, and I want to tell you something of it before I go on. We left Puerto Casado per train early in the morning, November 2. You probably remember the narrow gage railroad and train from pictures. It really isn't a half bad job. Especially since a new passenger car has been built, equipped with screens as a protection against mosquitoes, it could be very comfortable. The trouble was, though, that the native Paraguayan has not been educated to such things as screens. As soon as we started, they opened the windows, giving the mosquitoes, all the freedom they needed to get a good breakfast. These people are so used to being in the open that they can not breathe through the screens. They were frantically fighting with cloths and anything they could get a hold of, and putting their women and children under mosquito netting, instead of merely shutting the windows. And are the mosquitoes pesky! They love to crawl under the blanket that I had wrapped around my legs, and bit through my slacks with a pair of pajamas underneath and crawled up my legs in spite of two pair of socks with paper in between. They even got into John's boots, and another favorite place was up into his tropical hat which has an air space around the rim. Fortunately by 10 o'clock it began to rain, and for that they closed the windows. Soon we were all swatting the enemy and were at peace for the rest of the way, for this group of Paraguayans had come to realize the use of the screen windows.

We got to Kilometer No. 145 about at 8:30 that night, the rate of travel must have been about 15 miles per hour. Here a wagon was waiting for us, so after eating a bite out in the open by a fire we set out and drove till midnight. The evening was lovely and cool and the moon gave us enough light to see the holes and stumps along the way. Then we stopped and had a little sleep in a sort of trailer car that belongs to Vernon Schmidt, and at 3:30 we were having breakfast and by dawn were on our way. You see, we were very anxious to get here. Drove till 10 at night, with a stop at noon for dinner and to rest the horses, when we saw the lights of Philadelpia. To John, it was very much like coming home. He pointed out to me where different people lived and different things had happened. Neither one of us could realize that we had reached our destination when we walked into our little house together, the one in which John has always lived. We are going to live here until the house which is being built for us, just in back of this one is ready, and like it very much. We don't do much housekeeping, because there isn't enough room, and also because there is much work to be done at the hospital till everything will be arranged and the work be done more routinely. So far they bring us our breakfast "on a platter" and the other meals we have with Dr. Klassen's at the hospital. They arrived here one week later than we did, Dr. Klassen having pulled over 600 teeth in the colony Friesland in the meantime. They arrived on one rainy afternoon, very wet and full of mosquito bites, but are fine now and anxious to get into the swing of their work. It is really taking much time, thought, and work to get started. The hospital has been out of use for over a year and everything, including the pharmacy is in disorder and in need of cleaning, as well as planning changes and new arrangements. So far, we have no pharmacist and only one nurse, but we have had three emergency patients and have seen many people in the office. The reason for the delay in getting our personnel is mainly that we have had such lovely rains and the farmers are all busy planting, so that the committees have been un-

The Program of the Mennonite Central Committee

To Train Relief Workers

By M. C. Lehman

After the prohibitory legislation of Congress last summer, making it impossible to continue the training of relief workers in Mennonite Colleges, it was difficult to devise any plan to continue such training. According to the terms of the legislation, giving such training would need to be done while the men were working for government in their capacity as conscientious objectors drafted into Civilian Public Service. Sending all the men back to the fourteen different units from which they had come to Goshen, would certainly make a continued program of training administratively and financially impossible.

It was decided to seek the government's permission to send the men to mental institutions where they could continue to work as required by C. P. S. regulations. The government was willing to allow this and further to assign the men to as few institutions in as restricted an area as practical in order to facilitate administration. The government further graciously assigned these men to institutions where some study and recitation in the way of relief training would be possible after work hours as attendants in the mental hospitals.

Those training for relief at Goshen last summer together with a number more who have been selected since have now been distributed as follows:

25 men, Ypsilanti, State Hospital, Ypsilanti, Michigan; 15 women, Ypsilanti State Hospital, Ypsilanti, Michigan; 25 men, Florida Health and Sanitation Unit, Mulberry, Florida; 6 men, Alexian Brothers Hospital, Chicago, Illinois; 9 men, Duke University Hospital, Durham, North Carolina; 20 men, State Hospital for Mental Diseases, Howard, Rhode Island.

The fifteen women working and training at Ypsilanti are, of course, not Cilivian Public Service assignees but volunteers training for relief service. More men are to be added to this complement raising the number to about two hundred. Not all of these may be appointed for foreign service, but the group will be a nucleus from which appointments will be made. A definite effort will be made to send as many as possible of these into relief service of some kind. Choice has already been carefully made in selecting for training. Two additional units for men may also be allowed by the government where some of our candidates for service will get special training in the care of milch cattle as a part of relief work.

The question as to minimum school requirements for relief service has been frequently asked. It is of course desirable that workers have high school and preferably college training, but there are candidates of ability and Christian character who fit into certain parts of relief work and who have had neither of the above school advantages. Such will not be rejected if they volunteer. In fact, some such may be sought for.

The hours of work as hospital attendants are usually eight hours per day. This allows time for study and recitation after work hours which usually end at 5:00 p.m. With this much time free from hospital duty about three hours of work in study and recitation is possible each evening after work.

The material to be covered in the training taken by candidates is as follows. About one-third of the time, or a semester 2 hours course, is to be given to special Mennonite concerns comprising, (1) relief methods, (2) Mennonite faith and heritage, (3) Mennonite principles of relief, (4) Christian life and witness.

The second third of the time, also the equivalent of a two-hour semester course, is to be devoted to a study of the cultural patterns of the area abroad where the candidate has volunteered to work. The Mennonite Central Committee has chosen, Central Europe, China, Paraguay, and the Near East as the four areas where it proposes to operate. Thus a volunteer for Central Europe would study the soil, climate Government organization, educational system, transportation systems, agriculture and general culture of that area. A third division of the material would take in a study of the language or languages where a candidate will work. Courses in Spanish, Chinese, French, German, and Russian are now being given in different training units.

Courses in mental hygiene are available in all of these institutions. These are usually taught by experts on the staff of the institution. Courses in nursing are also available. Skills in handling he sanitation problems of refugee and other groups are acquired in other units.

Brother Ernest Miller, President of Goshen College, has been chosen as director of this training program. Brother Carl Kreider has direct charge o the units in Chicago and Ypsilanti and does some o the teaching. Brother M. C. Lehman has a simila connection with those at Howard, Rhode Island, Mulberry, Florida, and Duke University. Brother C. L Graber is Director of Mennonite Relief and candidat Secretary. This organization reports to an advisor committee and to the Executive Committee of th Mennonite Central Committee and works under th direction of Brother Orie Miller, its Executive Secretary.

It is the aim to make the witness of our relie work one of thorough going evangelism. A witness if necessary, by suffering for Christ is an integra part of the program. By this program of prepar tion and service may God through His Spirit lea us to a better understanding of the spirit and fait of our church fathers and more consistent livin and service for Him and His Church.

Two More Churches Adopt 100 Per Cent Plan

The two latest churches to adopt the 100 Per Ce Subscription Plan for our church papers are the En maus Church at Whitewater and the First Mennoni Church of Halstead. The latter has not yet sent the names of all the subscribers, but it has official decided on the plan.

What Does the Ministry of Jesus Mean to Me?

By Marjorie Linscheid

Jesus' ministry not only means to me His preaching and healing, but also the example He set in His life. A life so radiant, so full of love, so consistent in every way, that one like myself cannot help but draw a challenge from it.

In the Sermon on the Mount I see there is a choice between right and wrong living. The Beatitudes are a guide to the kind of characteristics I want to develop in my life. Christ, in this sermon, also made clear the true way to conduct myself, my actions, and my relations with others,namely, to build on Christ, have Him for my foundation, think on Him rather than on worldly things, and follow to the best of my ability the principle of love. In order to do the above, communion with God is necessary. Consequently, Jesus gave us the Lord's Prayer and admonitions on the spirit in which we should pray.

One thing that especially impressed me was that Jesus chose for His disciples twelve men who were poor, unlearned, and had human weaknesses. From His instructions and lessons to the twelve, I, who too want to follow Him, can receive much benefit. For instance, warnings on hypocrisy and covetousness, and His discourses about God's love.

What an inspiration I received from observing Christ's spirit of mercy, patience, and forgiveness, during His great healing and preaching ministry. Here was Jesus, still a young man, always doing good for everyone, yet constantly being criticized, discouraged and sought after. For example, when Jesus cured the man sick with palsy, immediately the scribes began finding fault, but Jesus kept calm and serene. "Why is it then," I asked myself, "that we humans are apt to give up a good work because of unkind criticism and actions toward it?" Jesus said He would not leave us comfortless. God did not leave Jesus, His Son; so surely He will not forget us, who are children of God! Yes, Christ said that His coming would bring conflict, but He also said that we can take our troubles to Him.

Referring back to the healing of the sick with palsy, Jesus cured him on seeing his friend's faith. This is only one incident in which Jesus mentions the important subect of faith. He said if we have faith as a mustard seed, we can remove mountains. From this I see that Christ would be willing to do so much more for me if my faith were increased.

Another great phase of Jesus' work was His parabolic teaching. From these stories I obtained new and clearer thoughts on the Kingdom of God, Christian growth, and humbleness. In connection with the latter Jesus told the story of the Pharisee and the Publican. What a lesson it drives home! The parables were told to help us understand, and they certainly did that for me.

In summarizing I would say from Christ's life and ministry I see that He is my Friend, Helper, Guide, and Saviour.

Victory through Suffering

By Erland Waltner

"But the God of all grace.......after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you." I. Peter 5: 10.

Suffering can either "make or break" an individual. It may make him strong and brave, or it may make him weak and fearful. It may lead him to sympathize with all others who may suffer, or it may make him more self-centered and more demanding than ever before. It may drive him to a deeper trust in God, or it may create in him dismal doubts concerning God.

Peter, who in his epistles had much to say about suffering, because he was writing to a suffering people, indicates that it is God who in His grace can use suffering to a good purpose. It is not the suffering itself that makes a character better but it is God who may use suffering as an instrument. A chisel in the hands of a destructive child can do great damage but in the hands of a skillful sculptor it can create much beauty.

By the grace of God suffering can lead us into a more perfect life for Christ, into a better established faith, into a stronger determination to do God's will and into more settled convictions.

If suffering comes our way let us make sure that God is given the chance to use it for His own purpose and glory and then may we be comforted in believing that "all things work together for good to them that love God." Then we may be sure that the fires of suffering only burn away the impurities and the dross of our souls and leave that which is pure gold. Then we may be assured that for us suffering is a steppingstone and not a stumbling-block.

Notice: Senior Outline

The Senior C. E. outline in this issue is the article entitled "Our Work at Champa," written by Mrs. P. A. Penner. The editor knows of no other article that describes the work at Champa so adequately in so few words. Save it for other mission studies. It could well be used for daily Vacation Bible schools, etc.

A Study of Our Work at Champa

To get better acquainted with the Champa Mission Station we should know the following facts: Champa is a large town. The Bengal Nagpur R.R., one of the main lines running from Bombay to Calcutta, passes through Champa.

Champa has a number of mentionable industries. Silk weaving, brass utensil workers, shellac factories, gold smiths, and potteries. Since our area is one of the best rice growing districts, Champa has a number of wealthy rice merchants.

But now to our main interest in the place. The first plot of land comprising twenty-two acres, acquired by the Mission, we call the Mission Compound. The second plot of land, comprising thirty acres is for the Leper Home, and the third plot acquired, consisting of twenty acres, is the Medical Station.

The Champa Mission has two hospitals, one general, and the other in the Leper Home for lepers only. It has two primary schools: one for children of the healthy community and the untainted children and non-Christian children, the other in the Leper Home for children of lepers that are tainted. Our Mission in Champa has two churches, the one on the mission compound and the other in the Leper Home. Church activities are Sunday morning worship, Sunday School, C.E., and midweek prayer meetings in both churches but besides this Sunday School and prayer meetings on the Medical Station. The two churches, the one on the Mission Compound as well as the one in the Leper Home, have their own Indian pastors.

Missionaries living in Champa at present are:

Mr. and Mrs. P. W. Penner on the Mission Compound. Mr. Penner is Secretary-Treasurer of the entire Mission. Mr. and Mrs. Penner are in charge of the Mauhadih station as well as of all the work connected with it. They are in charge of a number of newly organized smaller churches belonging to that area.

Miss Eva Pauls R.N. is the sister in charge of the hospital in the Leper Home. Her assistants, ie., staff in this hospital and large clinics are: One Indian doctor, three compounders, one symptom-free man, four to five leper men and four to six women, to help with the special injections. These are trained. Some of these are used as nurses for the hospital. Miss Pauls has a nurses' training class every year. Of the 547 inmates, 514 get special treatment. The number of dismissed as relatively cured were 197.

Mr. and Mrs. Waltner, on the Mission Compound. He is the Superintendent of the Leper Home. All the various phases of the work among lepers are under his jurisdiction. He has a very efficient caretaker as his right hand who buys rice and flour and other necessities as well as makes out and submits monthly reports for the Government and mission. The pastor works in the church only, but harmony among all workers is a strong asset in the work in this institution.

Mrs. Waltner has the children's homes, in which there are twenty-two boys and thirty-four girls. I do not know their ages, but we usually have children ranging from seven months old until they are qualified to make their own living or get married. Most probably Mrs. Waltner helps in all the different church activities and she is in charge of the school. The care of these children is a joy but also a great responsibility.

Mr. and Mrs. Ratzlaff, on the Medical Station. Mrs. Ratzlaff is in charge of the evangelistic work connected with Champa. He has evangelists in several out-stations. (Villages, a distance away from the main station.) During the touring season, he is out among the numerous villages with his Indian workers. Please read his story of Jojowah, a recent convert in one of the villages of this area. You will find it in the "Mennonite" of Nov. 30, 1943. The title of this story is "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit." Mrs. Ruth Ratzlaff R.N. is in charge of the large hospital on the Medical Station. Her staff consists of one Indian doctor, one or two compounders, two trained nurses, water carriers, and a few other helpers. Two other very important helpers in the hospital must be mentioned. They, too, are under the supervision of Mrs. Ratzlaff. I refer to one evangelist and one Bible woman. They teach and preach the gospel to all in and out patients.

No hospital kitchen help is required, because patients bring their relatives along to do their cooking for them.

We are grateful to Mrs. P. A. Penner for writing us the outline study of our Champa Mission Field, and sincerely hope that our C.E.'s will make good use of it.—Mrs. G. F.

THE SPIRIT

We may profess that we believe in certain fundamentals or doctrines and judge others accordingly. But have we checked ourselves to see if we carry out into action what we believe and say? We must go even further; we must have the right spirit in order to attain the highest good and happiness. For example: we know there are certain churches today who practice the washing of feet. I do not wish to criticise this practice in any way. Personally, I believe much good can come out of such practice. As one professor stated, "It does or can make a difference when a big, noted business man humbles himself and stoops to wash the feet of a poor, common laborer. This can and should be a beautiful experience. However, the practice alone is not valid. We must have the spirit which is shown through faith, hope, and love. To illustrate: Mr. A and B both lived on farms next door to each other; so they saw much of each other. A's church did not practice feet washing as B's church did. He often criticized A's church for not being as good since it did not carry out the tradition of Christ washing His disciples' feet. One evening B stopped A and asked him where he had been that day since the town was in the other direction. A answered simply, "Oh, I've just been washing my neighbor's feet today." B's face turned red. He too knew that their neighbor, a member of his own church, was ill and needed help badly, but he had been too busy with his own work.

This neat church is located on the Mission premises at Champa, C. P., India. Together with an architect, the plan of this building was made by Rev. and Mrs. Suckau and Mrs. Penner and I. The material is brick in lime. (We erect no houses of any kind in India of timber, because pine wood is practically unknown, and even if we had the timber, buildings of pine wood would be ice cream to the termites.) Bricks, when this edifice was erected, cost about $2.00 per thousand delivered. The floor is of cement. Somewhat to our regret the congregation asked for benches. Indians usually prefer to sit on the floor. So this church has hardwood benches.

During the construction, we employed some outside labor but besides this our Christians helped gratis. All Bible women and some preachers gave a month's labor free; others did not work but paid into the building fund the equivalent of a month's salary. Missionaries did likewise. Children when not otherwise employed or in school, were likewise helping to in this undertaking.

It would be interesting to know how many people have found the Lord in this church, to know how many children have been consecrated in it, the number of baptisms, communion services and marriages have taken place in this church. Funerals have not taken place in it.. These are not conducted in a church because of climatic conditions and other reasons.. We endeavor to bury the dead on the day of death, if at all possible. ..

This building is now much too small even for ordinary Sunday services. The members of our congregation are already planning a new building and have some funds on hand for that purpose. They are endeavoring to build this with indigenous funds. Whether it will be able to do so, remains to be seen.

To preach from the pulpit of this House of God to a reverent house full of worshippers has been a great joy to all that have had this privilege. Forthy-three years ago the place where this church stands was a part of a jungle and not a Christian in Champa. Today so many Christians that a new and larger building is imperative." This is God's doing and it is marvelous in our eyes."

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT

LOVING OUR JEWISH NEIGHBORS

Opening Hymn: "Blest Be The Tie That Binds"

Bible Readings: (To be interrupted by each reader, watching for the special references to Jews and to Christian brotherhood Psalms 33:12-15; Acts 17:22-28; Romans 1:14-16; Romans 2:10-11; Romans 10:1-15; Matt. 10:5-7.

Prayer: The following thoughts might be expressed in the prayer: that Christians may remember the second commandment to love their brothers, that Jews may be loyal to the first commandment to love God through Christ. Remember, too, the suffering and persecuted Jews throughout the world today.

Remarks: The following facts may be assigned in advance to different members of the organization, for further information and discussion.

Facts About the Jews

1. Our religion is Jewish in origin and leadership. Jesus was a Jew, born of Jewish parents and reared and trained in the Jewish faith. He began his ministry in the Jewish synagogue at Nazareth.

2. The Old Testament is today the Jewish Bible. We are in debt to the Hebrews for the marvelous riches of these books.

3. The New Testament, our Christian scriptures and emphasized by the Mennonites as the New Dispensation having authority greater than the Old Testament, was nevertheless written by converted Jews.

4. The origin of our modern church came from the Jews. The Jews in exile in 586 B.C. had no Temple so they banded in small groups for worship. The gatherings were called synagogues, a Hebrew word for "gathering together." Even after the death of Jesus, Christians met in synagogues and eventually modeled their own churches after them.

5. The Jews contributed greatly to the teachings of Christianity itself. Consider the following scriptures in the Old Testament and compare them with the Beatitudes: Psalm 37:11; Isaiah 61:2; Psalm 24:4.

6. Before the war there were only 16,000,000 Jews in the world. Since that time 2,000,000 Jews have been cruelly murdered in Europe.

7. Jews have concentrated in certain occupations as merchants and small business men, because in the early days in Europe they were forbidden to own land and could not farm.

8. The American Board of Missions to the Jews proves that Jewish domination of American life is a myth. Jews do not control American banking, only a tiny percentage are Communists, and their political influence in general is vastly overrated. There are two industries in which they have a dominating position (a) the ready-made garment industry (b) moving pictures. For further information write for the small pamphlet "Do Jews Control America?" American Board of Missions to the Jews, 27 Throop Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. In some respects the Jews have been victims of the same kind of false propaganda which has been leveled at Mennonites. All persecuted minorities suffer this kind of abuse. It is significant that all those engaged in actively preaching Christ to the Jews as missionaries repudiate anti-Jewish propaganda.

9. Since the last war in America Jews have found jobs barred to them because of their race; they are often refused admittance to hotels, resorts, and clubs. Signs reading "Gentiles Only" appear. Educational institutions have limits on the number of Jewish students they will accept.

Discussion: What is the solution for discrimination against the Jew? Some suggestions are: become real Christians and purge ourselves of race prejudice; be good Samaritans to the Jewish refugee; Christianize the Jews. At the present time there are Mennonites working in missions to the Jews although our denomination has no projects under its direct control. Do you suppose that one of the reasons so many Americans hate the Jews is because we are so heavily indebted to them?

Closing Hymn: "Rise Up O Men of God"

READING THE BIBLE

Theme Chorus: The Best Book to Read is the Bible

Songs: Open my Eyes that I may see; Thy Word have I hid in my Heart; Wonderful Words of Life.

Why should We Read the Bible?

"As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby" (I Peter 2:2). We would not think of not eating for a week. We need food every day for physical strength, growth, and energy. Likewise our souls need nourishment too. The Word of God, our spiritual food, first gave us Life; now, it gives us strength and growth in grace. That is just one of the many reasons the Lord gives us for reading His Word.

When Should we Read the Bible?

We again turn to the Book to look for a suitable answer. In Acts 17:11 we find these words: "And searched the Scriptures daily." The Psalmist says that those who love the Word "meditate therein all the day." When we see the infinite value and greatness of our salvation, surely we want constant contact with the Book that has brought such spiritual riches to us.

How Should we Read the Bible?

Read the Bible carefully. Read it prayerfully. Read the Word systematically—by books, by topics, study the characters; search for the promises in the Bible. Romans 15:4—"For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope."

"Few books can stand three readings. But the Word of God is solid; it will stand a thousand readings, and the man who has gone over it the most frequently and the most carefully is the surest of finding new wonders there." —Hamilton

A, in reality, had the true spirit of feet washing though he did not practice it in his own church. Let us check ourselves—do we profess certain doctrines—yet our closest friends wouldn't know it by our life? Have we found the true spirit ? Are we striving to live it? —Florence Auernheimer

YOUTH JOTTINGS

—First Mennonite Church, Butterfield, Minnesota: The young people here meet regularly as a young people's fellowship. Varied programs of music, themes, Bible study, etc., and a social period make up the meeting. The young people have also undertaken special projects. While visiting there the editor saw a very substantial and practical blackboard on a stand. This had been made by the young people with the assistance of their pastor, Rev. Victor Sawatzky. In the same way had they made the bulletin board in the entrance hall. This bulletin board is very practical. It is of a good size with a base on which things can be tacked. Covering it are two sliding panels of glass. These keep the winds from tearing at the papers on the board when the doors are opened. The glass had been gotten for nothing by the pastor because it had slight flaws. The young people and pastor plan to remodel the place in which they keep their library books. The church also has a C.E. organization, but the fellowship meeting helps to fill a unique need.

—Johannestal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Every Wednesday night the young people gather for forty-five minutes of study in the "Mennonite Heritage" booklets and forty-five minutes of choir practice. Their pastor, Rev. J. M. Regier leads them in their study. They are now taking through book number five, taking about two chapters at a time.

—The Senior C.E. (high school age) of the Bethel College Mennonite Church meets in some home every two weeks. Discussion periods and speakers are alternated. The group has finished discussing booklet number three of the "Mennonites and Their Heritage" series and is now planning to take up a study on "How To Pray." Rupert Hohmann is the chairman of this group.

—Looking in on some Indian children: The following letter was written to the Intermediate C.E. Union of the Eastern District by Missionary John Thiessen of India. Miss Huldah Myers states that Juniors and Intermediates throughout the General Conference shared in the project mentioned above. Here is the letter:

Our Dear Christian Friends and Co-workers in God's Kingdom, Greetings to you all with I Cor. 10:13 beginning with the words: "but God is faithful—." That is a wonderful word of comfort and assurance for young and old, and anyone in between.

With this we want to thank you very heartily for the $30.00 you have sent us for India's Children. I wish I could show you our more than 25 brown faces. And just this week you would all enjoy the match games that ar being played after school. There is a volley-ball match, a kittenball match, a soccer football match, several strictly Indian games like "Koh" and "Kahaddi" etc. In "Koh" a representative from one side runs to the other side and repeats "Koh, koh, koh—" in one breath as long as his lungs supply the breath. When his breath is exhausted he must make his getaway before anyone of the opposite side can touch him. If he is touched he is "out." Kahaddi is a game of 10 squares five in a line or row. These squares are all guarded by one side or team. If anyone from the other side or team gets through these squares without being touched, the team scores. If he is touched he has become "salt," and his whole team becomes "salty" and are "out." With so many children one has to have many games to keep them going. We hope to buy an iron swing someday when the prices of iron things become a little more moderate again. We want to thank you very much for making such a fine contribution to the enjoyment of India's children.

Just recently, we had special religious meetings for our boys and girls and forty-four made promise to follow our Lord and Saviour from now on. It is always a great joy to see our young people willing to be true and faithful Christians.

In our daily work we are also making progress. Our school farm is providing work two hours each day for our boys and girls; and besides providing work it yields plenty of vegetables and fruit. Part of the farm is still in an unprepared forest condition, and that provides work for poor Christians who depend on relief labor. It is fortunate that friends in America have also provided some funds for relief in India. Just while I write this we have ten men and thirty-five women—all Christian—at work earning the standard wage of eight cents and six cents respectively per day. That keeps them from starving."

—Deep Run Mennonite Church: The Senior C.E. "Society recently brought to a close its relief project, the proceeds of which were turned over to the Mennonite Central Committee for War Relief. With just a little sacrficing here and there, we were able to help this worthy cause to the extent of $220.00." Not so very long ago this group invited a group of talented negroes to sing for them.

—The Los Angeles Mennonite young people sometime ago sang for the patients of the general hospital and gave them small glasses of jelly and jam. They included Bible verses with the gifts.

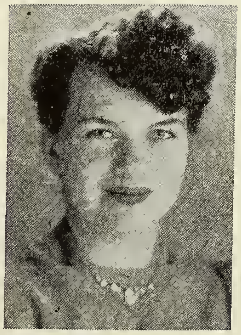
—The Aberdeen, Idaho, young people have given $100.00 to the campers of the Downey, Idaho, C.P.S. camp. This act of understanding and love was prompted by a desire to enhearten the boys who are in the camp.

—The Reedley young people are publishing a monthly C.E. bulletin that is about the size of a post card. It lists the program topics with leaders for the month and other activities which will take place.

—The Girls' Mission Society of Newport, Washington, recently gave the play, "A Missionary at Home in China."

—The Albany, Oregon, church has a new Christian Endeavor group, composed of boys and girls of the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth grades.

——Anna Fern Regier, a member of the West Zion Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, and Mrs. Victor Janzen, of the Bethesda Mennonite Church, Henderson, Nebraska, are two of the three Mennonite young women that have been added to the relief training unit at Ypsilanti State Hospital, Ypsilanti, Michigan. This bring the total in the unit to seven. Members of this unit engage in mental hospital work, and in their spare time attend a number of relief training courses in preparation for future relief work. Mrs. Victor Janzen formerly attended the Bible School at Henderson. Her husband is now in C.P.S. Anna Fern Regier is a former student of Bethel College, where she was very active in student activities. While there she often played the pipe organ for the chapel services and for the worship services of the Bethel College Church.



Anna Fern Regier

—Evelyn Regier, a member of the West Zion Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, has taken up work in the M.C.C. office at Akron. She reports enjoying her work and the fellowship of the office staff.

—Colonel Lewis F. Kosch, who has had oversight over the C.P.S. camps, has been promoted to Assitant Director of Selective Service. It is understood, however, that he will continue in charge of the Camp Operations Division.

—Several English students at Bethel College are writing research papers on various aspects of the General Conference. Some valuable contributions have been made in this way in former years.

—Selective Service system warns ministerial students against taking summer vacations. It states: "We are not prepared to say, as a matter of policy, that a student who was preparing for the ministry and was classified in Class IV-D should lose that classification by reason of an extended summer vacation period, but it is the policy of this headquarters that if a local board or board of appeal determines that such a registrant, during his summer vacation, has ceased to be a 'student preparing for ministry' and reclassifies such student as available for military service, this headquarters will not normally look with any favor upon a request for administrative action to have the case of such registrant reconsidered or reviewed."

—Carlus Basinger, a student at the University of Chicago, spent a part of his vacation in Summerfield, Illinois, at the home of his parents, Rev. and Mrs. Basinger. One Sunday morning he gave a short talk, and in the evening he showed to the young people some pictures which he had taken in school. The Summerfield Bible Class is issuing a news pamphlet for the boys in service of the government. The boys enjoy it. —Mrs. P. H. B., Corr.

—Rev. Henry Franzen, young pastor of the Buhler Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kansas, in greeting his congregation for 1944 gives the following motto and application, " 'I will live at my best for the best, regardless of what may befall us.' It can be applied come poverty or prosperity, come disaster or good fortune, come pain, come distress, or pleasure, each of us may keep our soul attitude at the best. And for the best for more goodwill to our neighbors, for more sacrificial efforts in noble causes, for more service for the kingdom of God."

—Buhler, Kansas: The Mennonite church here has twenty-one of its young men in the armed forces and nine in the C.P.S. camps.

RELIEF NOTES

Earthquake in San Juan, Argentina

The advantage of having M.C.C. representatives stationed at a number of places throughout the world was seen this week when a catastrophic earthquake occurred at the Argentine city of San Juan. The following telegram was received from Vernon Schmidt and Robert Geigley, M.C.C. relief workers in Paraguay:

Terrible earthquake in San Juan near Mandosa Argentina. Request permission both go there help where possible. Request $5,000 be sent Lewis Weber 1427 Puan Buenos Aires for that purpose.

Negotiations are being made to determine how M.C.C. might bring help to this stricken city.

India-Famine Relief Progressing

A cable from India informs the M.C.C. that the famine relief work in Bengal is progressing and results seem encouraging. Workers have been able to purchase clothing for distribution. A large shipment of condensed milk is enroute to India part of which will be consigned to the Mennonite relief unit in Bengal.

A cable sent to China from M.C.C. informs J. D. Graber to proceed to Bengal to help with the work there as soon as the survey in China is completed. S. J. Goering will return to the States to give a report of the needs in China.

Refugee Work in the Middle East

It seems that the M.C.C. commissioners to the Middle East have completed a survey of the relief situation in Palestine and Syria. They have been instructed to make their headquarters at Cairo, Egypt. While waiting further developments, they will work among Greek refugee families in the Egyptian area in helping to reassemble families parted during their flight from their homeland.

M.C.C. Office in Canada

Plans have materialized for the opening of a branch office of the M.C.C. in Canada. According to the latest word, the office will be located in Kitchener, Ontario.

able to do much planning for the hospital. But this morning we had a meeting with representatives from both colonies and will have 5 additional nurses and an assistant in the pharmacy beginning Monday. So far the people have been told that only the emergency cases will be taken care of, soon it will be open to all and we know that we will have much work. This morning during the meeting we were called out to treat a baby which had taken some ant poison, which we hope will be all right, and tomorrow we have an appendectomy, so you see we are not waiting for something to do.

Sunday was a big day for us, welcoming day, I guess you would call it. In one corner of the colony they had a program for us in the morning and here in Philadelphia a large crowd greeted us in the evening. They had gone to much work with decorations, etc. to make us feel welcome. One preacher had written a song for the occasion. It gave us all increased inspiration for our new work. We gave them the greetings of our friends back home, and told them of the interest and the many good wishes that had accompanied us on our way. Continue to remember us as we go into our work, for we need grace and strength to carry on according to His will.

Many of you will be wondering how it feels to be in this land of "tomorrow" where you have time to drive for several hours to another near-by village, and even time left to take a nap. Well, we just take those things for granted here and indeed, they seem quite natural already. I guess we just naturally take on the tempo of the people around us, and I really believe, it is not a bad idea to slow down a bit. Also the freedom from the effects of the war are so noticeable here, and those we don't miss either.

We will be thinking of you all very much during the coming holidays and of the years that we have spent them together. I will especially remember the festivities at Bethel Hospital. We will no doubt have many plans for celebration here; also enjoy the way these, our people, celebrate. The whole M.C.C. group which includes Vernon Schmidt and Robert Geigley besides the four of us, are planning our Thanksgiving dinner now. Mrs. Klassen is an excellent cook and has already been a great help in the kitchen. Just now the food problem is not easy. There are hardly any fruits or vegetables to be had, so variety is a problem. Yesterday she made grape nuts out of Kafir flour instead of whole wheat bread, etc. No one uses cereals here as a rule, and we miss that too. Outside of the lack of these certain foods, the meals are excellent, and with beans and lettuce coming up now and the watermelon season near at hand, we will soon have more of the foods to which we are accustomed.

We hope to hear from many of you soon. Have enjoyed the letters which were waiting for us very much and those which we have received, which has just been twice since we are here, once a week.

CORRESPONDENCE

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Halstead, Kansas

On the threshold of a new year we cast one backward glance to review the manifold blessings of the past year. Joy and sorrow were again intermingled and opportunities of service were our privilege.

During the summer when our pastor, Rev. D. C. Wedel, was taking an enforced vacation of several brief stays in the local hospital for medical treatment, Rev. P. S. Goertz of North Newton and Rev. A. L. Koeneke of Halstead, kindly supplied the pulpit here. In spite of such handicaps Rev. D. C. Wedel was very active within church circles and outside, in conference work, etc. Three young couples were married and six times within the latter half of the year church members were called upon to lay to rest one of their loved ones. Of them, five were of our older folks, and in one instance an elderly couple was called within less than a week. One was a young man in the service of our country.

In August our young folks experienced their first one-day retreat at Springdale, which proved a great success with Rev. Reynold Weinbrenner as guest speaker. In September Dr. and Mrs. P. A. Penner brought us an inspiring message in word and picture.

In November our annual church business meeting and fellowship supper was held. The latter part of the month the harvest-thanksgiving festival was held. Rev. and Mrs. Isaac and Dr. H. A. Fast were the guest speakers.

In October Rev. William Stauffer of Ohio held two very interesting meetings here concerning the C.P.S. camps and showed slides of the same.

On December 19, under the direction of Rev. D. C. Wedel, our church choir rendered the beautiful cantata, "The Wondrous Story." The children's program was well rendered in pageant and song.

Some twenty of our young men are serving their country.—Corr.

DEER CREEK MENNONITE CHURCH

Deer Creek, Oklahoma

The golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wecke was observed, also the silver wedding of Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Krehbiel.

Throughout the summer, alternating with Christian Endeavor, Bible study groups were held Sunday evenings. Bible and singing were taught to three groups of young people. A program was rendered by the entire group at the end of the summer. A group of young people was welcomed into the church through baptism, making our membership 121. A survey, made by our pastor, of all the church treasuries for the past five years shows that God has blessed us so that we have grown in that phase of his work also.

Most of our young men who are in various camps were home sometime during the year. Some could be here during harvest. Several are serving in mental hospitals; some are on various camp projects, and a few are overseas.

We are grateful to the different boards of our conference who make it possible for missionaries, evangelists and teachers to be in our midst. It gives us new inspiration and determination to work in God's vineyard.

—Mrs. Milton C. Lichti

SWISS MENNONITE CHURCH

Alsen, North Dakota

It is now over three months since our pastor and family came into our midst. The services are fairly well attended, although there still are some who do not show interest. Let us continue to pray for such. There is much need of prayer for our pastors in these days, since those who stand true to the Word of God are often criticized far more than those who walk with the world.

The pastor conducts a young people's Bible study on Tuesday evenings. We also have a children's Bible class on Friday afternoons. Richard Spenst and Charlotte E. Andersen were married during January. I think nine of our boys are in the army.

Is the Church remaining true to God? Is our Mennonite Church? Or must it be said of us as of the Israelites of old, "They did evil continually in the sight of God." Oh, may God give us a great revival in our Mennonite churches and all others too.

We still enjoy wonderful, mild weather and good roads.—Corr.

JOTTINGS

—Rev. Willard K. Claassen, pastor of the Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota, is one of the main speakers at the Annual Bible conference that is being sponsored by the Mountain Lake Bible School. Missionary H. J. Brown, who is serving the Bethel Church of Mountain Lake for one month, is the other main speaker.

—No C.O. Clause in national service bill! By January 21 no C.O. clause had been included in the revised national war service act that was introduced in both houses after the president's plea for a civilian draft .However, the historic peace churches and other bodies are pressing for the insertion of such a clause. The suggested clause reads, "Persons who on grounds of conscience are opposed to participation in war and conscription for war service shall be listed on a register of conscientious objectors and shall not be required to perform work or services to which they are conscientiously opposed." The present bill exempts ordained ministers and students of recognized theological or divinity schools.

—The twenty-fifth anniversary for the C.O.'s of World War I fell on January 2, 1944. On that day twenty-five years ago 118 conscientious objectors were discharged from the disciplinary barracks at Leavenworth. Other C.O.'s at Leavenworth were discharged later in the same year.

—Mrs. Rodolphe Petter wrote recently: "Our most prominent citizen here in Lame Deer says he has been in Montana for fifty-six years and never knew a time when lilacs and cotton wood trees bud in January as they are doing now.... It has been a wonderful winter."

—Extra Copies of the Minutes of the last Western District Conference may be had by writing to Rev. Herbert Miller, Deer Creek, Oklahoma.

—The Lehigh, Kansas, Mennonite Church plans to put a basement under the entire meetinghouse this spring. Over $1,500.00 are available for this building project. Members will do the work.

—Ebenezer Mennonite Church, Bluffton, Ohio: On New Year's Eve the annual custom of serenading the aged and shut-ins was observed. A group of singers visited many homes and heralded the new year with the familiar "Stimmt Lieder An" and "Neujahrs Lied." Coffee at the parsonage at midnight warmed us physically as spiritually we were warmed in blessed fellowship.

We are completing our second year of Sunday radio broadcasting from Findlay, Ohio. This work, sponsored by the young people of the church, has been a source of blessing to many. May God continue to bless His Word as it goes forth in message and song. In addition to the Sunday program, the pastor, Rev. Arnold C. Schultz, has a studio sponsored program in the Living Today Series every Friday afternoon.

During the past year the church has been redecorated, an organ fund established, and the parsonage debt liquidated. Our Women's Society and the Girl's Missionary Band have been busily engaged in M.C.C. sewing.

—Church Correspondent

—Wayland Mennonite Church, Wayland, Iowa: "Our church treasurer reports that since the use of the weekly envelope system more money has come into the treasury than before. We hope more will use the system this year. It is a voluntary one."

—First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: "The annual meeting had the largest attendance of the past three years. Reports indicated a general upswing in finances."

—Brother Edwin Stucky, who is teaching at Goessel High School and serving the Goessel Mennonite Church part time, brought the message to the Second Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, on January 23.

—Brother R. C. Kauffman served the Pretty Prairie Mennonite Church on January 23 and the Bethel College Church on January 30.

—Brother Lester Hostetler is conducting services for the Bethesda Mennonite Church, Henderson, Nebraska.

—Apostolic Mennonite Church, Trenton, Ohio: On the morning of our annual meeting Rev. Amstutz gave an inspiring message on "The Church." At noon all enjoyed the covered dish dinner and the social period after it. In connection with the usual routine of the business meeting a short memorial service was observed in memory of those who had died during the year.

—The meetinghouse of the Walton Mennonite Church now stands with all the siding and shingles on and the windows installed. The basement floor is to be poured and the basement completed in February. The building is thirty-six feet by fifty-six feet with an eighteen by eighteen foot side wing for the entrance. The approximate cost will be $5,000 in materials and skilled labor. All unskilled labor is being donated by the members of this and neighboring churches. For five years this new church has been meeting in the Community Building. The group has fond hopes of worshiping in the new meetinghouse in March 5.

—The Reedley Mennonite Church regularly sends food to the C.P.S. camps in California. The last gift to the North Forks camp consisted of: 288 quarts of peaches, 14 quarts of jam, 4 lbs. of persimmons, 40 lbs. of sweet potatoes, 30 lbs. of Irish potatoes, and 45 lbs. of raisins.

—W. F. Unruh, pastor of the West Zion Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas prints his weekly visitation schedules in the church bulletin.

—Brother J. H. Langenwalter is now visiting the church at Shafter. In addition to bringing Bible messages, he seeks to give aid to all the church organizations by counselling with them sometime during the week.

—Whitewater, Kansas: John Harder, Sr., oldest member of the Emmaus Mennonite Church, had the rare privilege of celebrating his ninetieth birthday on January 11, surrounded by his family and friends. It was an offering of thanksgiving and praise to God who has so faithfully led him and Whom he trusts for the future. Mr. Harder and his young bride came to Kansas in 1876 and experienced all the joys and trials of pioneer life. They are charter members of the Emmaus church. His life of joyful service to the Lord is certainly a great inspiration and blessing to his descendants and friends. —Mrs. B. G. Harder —The West Zion Church, Moundridge, Kansas, has recently at its mid-week meetings featured slides on the birth of Christ, on Galilee, and on Judea. W. F. Unruh, former missionary to India, is pastor of the church.

—The Berne Witness, in commenting upon the Bible lectures recently held there by Rev. Walter Gering, states, "His theme for the week was Christian living and each of his messages was a high light in the experience of his listeners."

—The brethren H. A. Fast and R. C. Kauffman of Bethel College recently conducted a leadership training school in Halstead, Kansas. The meetings were held on Sundays and Wednesdays. A good attendance was reported.

—First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: Our library is supplied with sixteen new books from the Western District Loan Library: (1) Along the Highway of Prayer by Robertson: (2) Mennonites n the World War by Hartzler; (3) On the Trail of The Immigrant by Steiner; (4) The Prince of the House of David by Ingraham; (5) The Story of the Mennonites by Smith; (6) By an Unknown Disciple; (7) Storm in Her Heart by Young; (8) Spring Symphony by Painter; (9) John G. Paton by Byrum; (10) Charles H. Spurgeon by E. F. Adcock; (11) Dwight L. Moody by A. T. Rowe; (12) The Fine Art of Living Together by Beaven; (13) One in Seven by Slattery; (14) Understanding Youth by Burkhart; (15) Ideals for Earnest Youth by Rowe; (16) Henner's Lydia by De Angeli. These books will be available for two months. Let us take advantage of this opportunity by reading as many of these books as possible.

—The Zion Mennonite Church, Elbing, Kansas, with a membership of 114, gave a total of $1,501.23 for C.P.S. during 1943. It therefore exceeded its quota by $817.23 (quota is six dollars a member per year). Furthermore the Sewing Society of this church in its report for 1943 states, "We began the year by packing a large box of dish towels, pot holders, and scrub cloths for Denison, Iowa, C.P.S. Camp. Later closet curtains were sewed and sent to Fort Collins, Colorado. Twice during the year the boys in the service were remembered with boxes filled with cookies. Twelve boxes were packed. In November we packed 136 quarts of canned fruits and vegetables and chicken for our C.P.S. camps." This church has ten men in service.

—Dear Pastor: Is the bulletin of your church being sent regularly to the editor? If not, why not make arrangements for this today?

Kotare ("a" as in "tar")

Mr. Kotare, like Naaman, "was a great man" in the eyes of the Hindoos, because he belonged to the Brahman caste. This is the highest caste in Hindooism. But, also like Naaman, he was a leper. This at once ostracized him from his caste fellows. All of his former friends shunned him and avoided all contact with him. Fortunately he was not penniless and ence sought the best medical aid. When all his ossessions were gone and he was at his wits end, he ame to the Bethesda Leper Home. I distinctly reember that day. Said he, "I am a leper; I have onsulted a number of doctors and have spent all my oney. Will you admit me as a patient and give e medical treatment?" Although the Leper Home as crowded to capacity, as it always is, yet an inner oice seemed to say, "Admit him." I did.

Man marked with x is Kotare. Other man is Joel Asna, pastor of Leper Home Church.

From the time of his admittance I took a particular terest in him because he was in some ways interestg. For one thing, he had an arresting personality. or another, he was not proud and haughty as most rahmans are; on the contrary, he was willing to ve in a small room with lepers of lower castes. And stly, he appeared to be capable.

He received regular treatment. To his great joy, he showed signs of improvement; the white tell-tale patches turned to the normal color. His fingers, which were somewhat stiff and slightly deformed, began to function. Frequently, he would come to me and say, "See, Mr. Penner, how I can bend my fingers? Soon I will be able to play my organ again."

Gratitude shone out of his eyes. Was it because God was blessing the treatments, or was he, as a Brahman, religiously inclined? I don't know, but he very soon became a regular church attendant. He was present at all activities of the church, and when we, as our custom is, conducted a six-weeks' course of Bible study, he was present with his Bible and hymn book. During that year we studied James. When we came to James 5: 14 and 15, his attention was arrested. No wonder. Said he to me, "Kindly interpret these verses to me." I will confess that perhaps my interpretation did not fully satisfy him, but it made my heart rejoice to note that this inquirer was a genuine inquirer. Not only once but frequently, Kotare came to me with Bible in hand, requesting me to explain this or that passage of scripture. Is it any wonder that he found the way of salvation and accepted the Lord Jesus as his Saviour? He was one of the group of lepers whom I baptized shortly before our retirement.

Meanwhile his physical condition gradually im-

Young Boy Purchases Peace Certificate

The Mennonite:

A case of unusual interest comes to our attention in the Immanuel Mennonite Church (Los Angeles). Stanley Eitzen, the nine-year-old son of Dr. and Mrs. D. D. Eitzen, has recently purchased a Peace Certificate to the amount of $10.00, contributed to the work of the C.P.S. camps.

This amount was saved up over a period of time and was invested in Peace Stamps on small amounts until the $10.00 needed for the certificate was reached.

His younger brother Donald is also saving his money and investing it in a similar way.

We may draw two valuable lessons from this incident: First, that parents can teach children to save and be thrifty and invest their earnings in a worthy cause. Secondly, for adults it may be a valuable lesson in giving and a reminder of what we could do to carry on the work of our C.P.S. obligation.

proved. It must have been a happy day when he could be discharged as symtom-free.

A fine, erstwhile leper girl is now Mrs. Kotare. Together they, of their own initiative, have opened a school in a far-distant village, teaching and testifying for the Saviour who has physically and spiritually brought health and life to them.

An Excellent News Report

One of the finest pieces of news reporting to come to the editor's desk in recent months is the news article entitled "Young Boy Purchases Peace Certificate." This is news because it is unusual. Furthermore, it is "good news." It is of such a nature as to inspire others to worthwhile activity. As such it is greatly welcomed to this paper, for The Mennonite is a conference organ that is not primarily concerned with news as such, but its first concern is God's Kingdom and righteousness. We want news that edifies and educates to God's glory.

The one who reported this interesting happening could have passed over it without a word to the paper. He did not have to report it. But as a concerned worker in God's kingdom he saw the importance of it and by reporting it brought blessing to the work of his own church and to that of the whole conference. Let us have more reports of the unusual that edify and inspire.—rw.

Give Your Full Address

When sending new or renewal subscriptions for your church papers, please, give your full address. If you live on the farm, state your route and box number. If you live in town, give house and street number if you have any or your postoffice box number.

On several occasions postal authorities have objected to the Mennonite Publication Office that the information on some addresses was simply inadequate. It may be easy for you to remember where you live and who belongs to your family, but it is not so easy for your postal officials to have the same information readily available in regard to you and perhaps hundreds and thousands of other people. Experience seems to suggest that if you get your mail from a town larger than 1,000 population, you should give your full address. Even postal authorities in smaller places may desire the full address. Yes, you may get mail by just giving your name, town, and state, but you may be putting an unjust and unnecessary work load on your postal officials. Remember to give your full address.—rw.

Bible Week March 6 to 10

Bethel College Bible Week is scheduled for March 6 to 10 this year. Dr. W. O. Trueblood is to be the main speaker. Other speakers who have already promised are: Dr. A. E. Henry, a Methodist district superintendent, who will speak on "Parish Evangelism," and Prof. A. E. Janzen, who went to Paraguay last year in the interests of the M.C.C. Rev. Janzen will speak Monday evening and then show pictures of Paraguay after his talk.

The Ministers' Conference of the Western District will very likely be held on some of the forenoons during the same week.

First Mennonite Church Hutchinson, Kansas

It was my privilege to worship with the Hutchinson Church on January 30. This church had its beginning on April 20, 1913, when Rev. H. P. Krehbiel, assisted by P. J. Boehr, J. F. Moyer, Gerhard Friesen, and Abraham Lohrenz—all Bethel students—held the first Mennonite service in the city. For a long time thereafter meetings were held once a month. In 1917 the Western Conference turned the mission over to the Home Mission Board of the General Conference. A meetinghouse—the same as used today with the exception of an addition—was dedicated in 1920. J. R. Krehbiel, volunteer architect from Pretty Prairie erected this excellently constructed meetinghouse with the aid of much volunteer help. A parsonage was purchased in the same year. In 1922 the church was officially organized. In 1935 the General Conference granted the church its independence. The following men served the church up to 1936: H. P. Krehbiel, H. J. Dyck, H. T. Unruh, Alvin van der Smissen, P. J. Wiens, and J. J. Plenert. In 1936 Rev. C. H. Dirks, the present pastor, took up the work.

The church now has 129 members. Sunday School enrollment is 167. The average attendance the last two Sundays was 105. The pastor states that 382 persons should and could attend the services of this church. A great number of Mennonites now live in Hutchinson. The soul-nourishing services of this church are an invitation for others to come and fill the seats that are not being occupied. Home pastors should urge their members in Hutchinson to join this congregation so that the members in question will not be suspended in comparative inactivity between two church loyalties.

This church is probably the only one of our conference in the United States to have a Working Girl's Fellowship, which comes to the meetinghouse for an evening meal with a period of fellowship before and a period of fellowship and Bible study thereafter Many of the girls cannot get off on Sundays, so they appreciate this service during the week. The meetings are held on Thursday afternoons and evenings. The girls prepare their own meal. The average attendance is about eighteen.

Three of the young men from this congregation are in C.P.S., and probably two more will soon enter The church gave $422.00 for C.P.S. in 1943.

The meetinghouse and parsonage belong to th Home Mission Board of the General Conference, which pays $200.00 a year for the upkeep of the same However, the church in turn contributes substantiall to the work of this board.

ENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

RISTIAN BROTHERHOOD AND THE F S A very reader of this column has seen the letters A” in newspapers and magazines many times and ws that it stands for an agency in the Federal ernment and has something to do with farmers agriculture. Of the many new agencies created by present administration to help the farmer no r agency has succeeded in its job as well as the m Security Administration. I mention it in this mn because of the reflection its successful work is the Christian Church, especially the Mennonites, h claim to be a Christian brotherhood and a fel hip of believers. The assumption being that in otherhood of believers in Christ there is mutual ern for each others’ needs and welfare.

The Work of the F S A

many ways the F S A as a governmental agency put us to shame by having confidence in our y brothers and giving them the necessary assis e to make them self-respecting farmers, when efused to do so. The FSA was established to poor farmers become owners of their own pro and to secure better tenant conditions for those ers who were renting. The Government became ned because the rate of tenancy was growing to oint where 43 per cent of this country’s six mil farmers were tenants. With tenancy often goes ous indifference, lack of community concern, and moral and ethical levels. The FSA provided whereby worthy farmers all over the country borrow money to buy their own farms and se stock and equipment to operate them on a res ble level. The assistance was not in the form of ty from the public treasury. It was a strictly ess arrangement. Loans were made at 3 per cent st and to be repaid on an amortized plan over ty year period. To date 35,000 farmers have helped to buy their own farms and a low per ge have been delinquent on their payments.

Significance to the Church

e needy farmers who have been assisted were by eans all Southern sharecroppers. Many of them northern farmers who had once owned farms but luring the hard years had lost them. Some of farmers are your neighbors and a significant er of them are Mennonites. This illustrates that disavow responsibility for the economic welfare brothers and say it is none of our concern, the will take over our job and with it much of the y and allegiance that formerly was given to the h. We should not be forgetful that this trans resonsibility for the performance of important from Church to State has already gone too far. n see the consequences of it in the case of edu . The State is educating our children but not interest of the Church, rather to the interest of ate. The FSA offers a challenge. Regardless action of other churches, the Mennonites ought render this responsibility. They should not allow dy to become wards of the Government.

A Woman's Report on Internment Camp

(Rev. and Mrs. Abraham Albrecht, parents of Mrs. Marvin Dirks, were so kind as to submit for publication the following letter by their daughter.)

Camp Holmes Internment Camp
Baguio, Philippines
Date—August 22, 1943

Dear Folks:

We have been thinking so much of you that we are very glad for this opportunity to write to you through the courtesy of the Japanese Imperial Army. We received Martha's June letter in February and were glad to hear about all of you. Your prayers in our behalf are certainly being answered, because we are enjoying God's blessing in so many special ways.

Another little granddaughter has been added to you in the person of Anna Rae, who will be a year this September 1. She has reddish brown hair, brown eyes, rolly-polly weighing twenty-one pounds. Very much the Dirks in looks. She is still breast fed. Carole Kay is quite a little responsible lady, blond wavy hair, very light blue eyes, and light of feet. At two years had a vocabulary of 400 words. She goes to S. S. and knows “Jesus Loves Me” and other verses. She is now able to gain more weight, since we have been able to buy a goat, the best in camp, which gives 7 ounces of milk a day. Otherwise they receive food as nourishing as their digestion can stand.

Marvin Jr. has an excellent health record. He is full of pep. He has finished primary work where he started to learn reading, writing, and arithmetic, and is now ready for first grade work. The school's big asset is excellent teachers. He is now attending vacation Bible school.

The camp is about one-eighth of a mile square. On it are men's and women's barracks, nursery with hospital next door, and grade and high school buildings. Carole and Anna Rae and I live in the nursery with ten other mothers and their babies. We live in the bay window space of about thirty-two square feet. In it we have three beds, a tiny table, chair and shelves. Marvin Jr. sleeps with his daddy, in the men's barracks. They spend a lot of time together. Junior goes with Marvin Sr. on the logging crew to get lumber for the kitchen stoves. Senior also has been camp barber for eighteen months and church choir director and high school music teacher.

We have church services twice on Sunday, besides Lutheran, Episcopalian and Catholic services. We also have various kinds of religious and secular classes and prayer meetings.

We are doing nicely on the food now. The chief staple being rice two or three times a day. We have excellent doctors and specialists here. There are many missionaries, miners, business people, etc. Our company is varied and constant; we can study human nature at close range.

The mountain scenery is very beautiful and soul refreshing, and fresh air and sunshine is a boon.

Give our greetings to all our friends and relatives.

Sam Goering Writes from China

(Extracts taken from Mr. Goering's letters written to his family. According to latest reports Brother Goering is on the way home to report to the M. C. C.)

Kwei Yang
November 22, 1943

We came to Chungking on a F.A.U. truck and stayed at the Friends headquarters a few days. We left there on a British Military Mission Truck. On the fifteenth we spent the night at Annan Yunnan. We got in after dark. The guest house, run by the China travel bureau, was filled, so Joe and I slept in the back of the truck. We had a fairly good night. Because of the high altitude, it was rather cold. We started off at six the next morning and got here to Kwei Yang at 8:30 in the evening. Again we slept on the truck because at the British headquarters they have no rooms for other than their own few people. It rained at night, but fortunately the canvas over our truck did not leak. In the morning Captain Gauld, whose parents used to be missionaries in China with the British American Bible Society, had the truck take us to the F.A.U. hospital here. They gave us a room, but we furnished our own bedding. It is very interesting to live here with the boys. They are not all Friends, but all are here for the same reason. Dave Morris is temporarily in charge. He is a young fellow from Oxford University with a fine black beard. The only of the boys that does not shave. A gillette blade costs all the way from $30 to $50 each, and he saves that by letting the stubbles grow. I told Joe I was tempted to do the same.

We leave here on Wednesday, November, 24, as far as I know now on the back of the same truck on which we came. We have Chinese drivers and they go fast with heavy loads making hair pin turns. Up to India I was wishing you could have been along, but I am afraid that you could not have taken this overland trip from Kunming to Chungking on the truck. It will be a two-day trip from Kwei Yang to Chungking. If all goes well we will get there in the evening on Thanksgiving Day. Something to be truly thankful for. Yes, we are very thankful for a safe journey thus far and for good health.

Paul Bartel is near Chungking, and we are going to visit him.

Chungking, China

What a happy day this is for me. I received a letter from Mother, one from Roland, two from you, Bob, and another from Mother. This is the first mail from home since I left last July. Sometimes I went to bed wishing that in a dream I could see how you all were getting along.

Our stay with the Friends' Ambulance Unit boys was very interesting. They are making a real sacrifice. Some are driving large trucks with heavy loads over very dangerous mountain roads where they must make hair pin turns on steep grades. One boy was held up by bandits, and it is remarkable that the bullets that broke the glass in the truck doors did not hit him. Each driver carries a slip which says,"

The Conscientious Objector and the Law

By Julien Cornell.

The John Day Company, New York, 1943

Here indeed is a timely book. It is a book that needed to be written. It has the further merit of being written by a thoughtful, earnest, Quaker lawyer who understands and is sympathetic with the position of the religious objector, and who has frequently appeared in Federal courts as legal counsel for pacifist defendents, but modestly refrains from mentioning his own experiences. Let me quote from the foreward of the book, "Mr. Cornell presents in this book an authoritative statement on the legal treatment of conscientious objectors in the United States during the present war. As special counsel on behalf of conscientious objectors, representing the American Civil Liberties Union's Committee, he has had both the opportunity and the obligation to know the facts at first hand. His direct, plain, judicious report deserves thoughtful reading of all Americans who are concerned about the maintenance of democratic principles even amid the anti-democratic pressures of war."

Perhaps, the simplest way to indicate the nature of the contents of the book is by way of quoting some of the chapter headings; "How the Draft Law Was Written," "The Religious Test of Conscientious Objection," "Classification Procedure," "Presidential Appeals," "Court Procedure," "Judicial Review of Draft Boards," "Why C.O.'s Are Not Paid." These and similar chapter headings tell more plainly than a brief and hurried summary would or can, the type of material discussed. The style is simple and very readable; there is none of the usual legal phraseology. Yet the book is well documented, and for those who are interested in further study the numerous references to Federal judical decisions and opinions will prove very helpful.

Here is a book that should be in every pastor's study and in every church or Sunday School library. It is the sort of a book which will not be read and then dismissed. It will be kept near at hand, ready for use. Here too is a book for the layman who desires reliable information about the puzzling problems presented by conscientious objectors. Here is a book for Americans concerned about the rights of minor-

Byways of Mennonite History

By C. Henry Smith

The European Ancestral Home of the Pennsylvania Mennonites

The Pennsylvania Mennonites are almost exclusively of indirect, Swiss ancestry, having been driven out of Switzerland in the middle of the seventeenth century. They were invited into a little country in southwestern Germany, called the Palatinate. The Palatinate was one of the some three hundred odd little independent countries into which modern Germany was then divided. Its ruler was called a Count, and the country a County; since he was also designated as one of the seven electors among the German rulers to select the emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, the Count of the Palatinate was also spoken of as Elector of the Palatinate.

In accordance with the religious peace treaty of Augsburg of 1555, each ruler of a country in the Holy Roman Empire, which was almost exclusively German by this time, if he professed the faith of one of the three tolerated faiths—Catholic, Reformed, or Lutheran—he had the right to dictate the religion of all his subjects. But the Mennonites were excluded from this toleration and were regarded as outlaws under all the state religions. The Reformed Electors were usually more tolerant toward the outlawed religions than the Catholic rulers. It was under the Reformed Electors that the Swiss Mennonites were first invited to locate in the Palatinate. During the greater part of the eighteenth century, the period of Mennonite emigration to Pennsylvania, Catholic rulers were in control of the government, and Mennonites, consequently, were continually subjected to humiliating regulations and intolerable living conditions. The day of capital punishment for religious dissent to be sure was past, but they remained merely a tolerated people, likely at any time to be exiled, fined, subjected to special taxation, and at the mercy of the whims and caprices of their intolerant rulers.

Throughout the eighteenth century they were forced to pay special tribute money for such privileges as they were allowed to enjoy. They were denied residence in the cities; they could not engage in trade; nor were their children admitted to apprenticeship in the trade guilds. Even the Jews, then commonly despised throughout Europe, they complained, were held in higher esteem; Jews by paying a certain amount of tribute money could engage in trade publicly, a privilege granted the Mennonites under no condition.

Beginning with 1717, under Elector Karl Philip, a special effort was inaugurated to prevent the further growth of the Mennonite population in the Palatinate. First, it was ordered that the Mennonites must be limited to two hundred families, which evidently was thought to be the actual number prevailing at that time, though in reality there must have been many more. Numerous regulations were passed during the century to keep the population within this maximum. Exemption and protection money was doubled; the marriage of young people was made extremely difficult, being permitted only with the consent of the central government. Hans Burghalter, one of leading elders in the Palatine churches, writing to friend in Amsterdam, the celebrated preacher
Deknatel, complains that when the head of a fa dies it is difficult for a son to take the place of deceased, and the recognition of a new head of family is made possible only upon the payment substantial sum of money after considerable d
First the prospective candidate must obtain the mission of the local bailiff to fill the position, then his case is turned over from one official to other all the way up to the Elector himself and again to the church officials, all of whom must their consent, "all the time" Burkhalter says, " their hands in their pockets," which costs both and money. Often the greater part of a whole passes before permission is secured. He fears if matters can not be remedied there will be "a falling off in the congregations of the young pe just what the procedure was meant for, of co among the authorities.

At the same time too, the acquisition of land made difficult for the Mennonites by the revival ancient right, lying dormant for many years, c Ius Retractus. This stipulated that land that h one time been in the possession of a member of o the three tolerated religions and in the meantim been purchased by a Mennonite could at any later be reclaimed by the original owner upon pay of the first purchase price, no matter how muc in the meantime been spent upon it for improve Frequently, an industrious Mennonite who had b a worthless farm and then by years of toil had im ed it and brought it to a high state of productivit forced to turn it back at the first price to som vious neighbor of the established religion, with lit no reward for his years of effort. A Mennonite b name of Landis, in 1727, thus lost his farm an igrated to Pennsylvania, where no doubt in Lan county he got a better farm almost for the askin without fear of losing it through an unfair gover regulation.

Growth by propaganda, of course, was strict berg University, to whom the case had been referred for legal opinion, to be worthy of death for having left the Catholic church for the Mennonite. The Elector, however, commuted the sentence to one year of imprisonment and exile. As for the elder who had baptized them into the Amish church, Han Naffziger, of Essingen, his offence was declared to be even greater than that of the two girls. But his sentence was only five hundred florin, and exile.

As a climax to these religious restrictions upon the living, there was added this humiliating treatment of the dead—denial of burial rights in the public cemeteries. In the same year mentioned above, a Mennonite woman in Kaiserslautern had been burned in the common burial ground without the knowledge, seemingly, of the local priest who was absent from the town at the time. At any rate when the priest upon his return heard of the burial, he together with the local police officials dug up the body and buried it just outside the cemetery walls, in order to show the Mennonites, so one local chronicler of the event says, what the public thought of those not of the tolerated churches. All this, it will be noted, near the beginning of the nineteenth century. It is in these humiliating imitations upon their religious and civil rights, undoubtedly, that we must look for one of the chief sources of the continual migration of Mennonites throughout the eighteenth century from the Palatinate o the "Paradise of Pencelfania."

SWEET MEMORIES

By Ethel L. Ball

How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood
When fond recollections present them to view—
The old fashioned altar with Father now reading
Aloud from the Book with its stories so true.
The old fashioned altar where Jesus was welcome
With old fashioned Mother and Dad kneeling there,
The old fashioned Bible with pages all gilded
Were loved by the family who worshiped in prayer.

weet memory lingers around the old homestead
And ever compels me to do what is right
he old fashioned altar and old fashioned Bible
Are guiding me on into pathways of light.

hose scenes and those stories, how can we forget them?
Engraven so deep, they will live on for aye.
hose old fashioned altars are bulwarks of nations
Encourage them, Mother and Dad now—Today.

e true to your children and give them their birthright,
A home where the old fashioned altar is raised.
he old fashioned altar and old fashioned Bible
Will keep men from sin and our God will be praised.

Suggestions for Correspondents

1. Be alert to news. Not all church activities are "news." It is hardly anything new among Mennonite churches when a pastor begins a catechism class, when the annual business meeting is held, when a Christmas program is rendered. Those are usual happenings. Something unusual generally makes news. Report far ahead of time any special meetings or services to be held. However usual activities can often be made very newsy. So often we have eyes but see not. For example, a list of all the ministers that have served the church during its history is interesting. One or two striking thoughts from a minister's sermon might be good. How many of the total enrollment of the Sunday School were on time on a particular Sunday would be very interesting. Figures on young men in the service of the government are of great value. It may take a little time to gather figures about church work, but it is often of great value.

2. Send in the news very promptly. Do not wait till the end of the year or even the end of a quarter or a month. Send in news ahead of a scheduled event if possible. If not, report on the same or next day or it will tend to go stale.

3. Rather send frequent, short bits of news on postcards than long correspondence articles. Always give the full name of the church on the card or letter.

4. Type the material if you can. If you use paper instead of a card, then use typewriter size and write only on one side.

5. Seek to put the news in same form that it is presented in the paper. That saves a lot of rewriting.

6. (This should have come in the beginning.) Remember that what is interesting for the members of the local church may have no meaning whatever for those who do not know the members. For example, cases of sickness of lay members, etc.

7. Look upon your job as an opportunity to share good news with others.

FALSE CONVERSION

"There is false conversion. These are the people who simply go through the motions of religion without any inner result. The missionaries call these people Rice Christians. When the cloud of emotion is over, or when the gifts are withdrawn everything settles back to the old rut! Some of the Christian converts in Burma, for example, became pro-Japanese Buddhists when the Nipponese took over. When the Japanese depart they will go over to the next set of propagandists. Well, this doesn't cause us any outstanding worry. I Kings 19:11 reminds us that the Lord was not in the wind. And it is usually extremely easy to notice when the Lord is totally absent from these false conversions of wind."

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Rev. H. P. Fast, Orienta, Oklahoma

FEBRUARY 11—"Wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the Prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience." Eph. 2:2

The non-Christian walks in disobedience to God and his Word. The Bible declares that without faith it is impossible to please God. Without obedience it is equally impossible to please God. Martin Luther said that he would rather obey than work miracles. We are surrounded by laws which we must obey or suffer the consequences. There are laws of nature, laws of health, laws of nutrition, etc. There are also spiritual laws for the Christian that he must obey or experience spiritual decline, unhappiness, sorrow, and defeat. The fact is that we are always obeying, either God or satan, the flesh or the Holy Spirit. God cannot use a man until he can obey. God's blessings are found as we walk on the road of obedience. Even Christ learned obedience. May his followers learn to obey completely, instantly, willingly, gladly.

FEBRUARY 12—"For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." Eph. 2:10.

Good works can not be the means of salvation, but the Christian is created in Christ Jesus to walk in good works. A stove is made to give heat. A lamp is made to give light. A Christian is made for good works. A Christian is to walk in good works. That is, it is his occupation. He is continually doing good. It is natural to him. He does not think it is out of the ordinary. It is fruit of the inner life. It is a privilege, not a duty. It is a joy, not hardship. It is the path of his own choice.

FEBRUARY 13—"I . . . beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called."

More depends upon our walk than upon our talk. Moody said, "We talk cream and live skim-milk. We ought to live better than we talk." We are called with a very high calling-called to be sons and daughters of God. It is expected of a member of a king's family to live up to the standards of a royal household. King Edward failed to do so and was obliged to abdicate. Many Christains are not nearly living up to the standards which God has set for his children. Thus, the believer brings dishonor upon the name of Christ. The true Christain has the highest standards; lives the noblest life if he walks worthy of his calling.

FEBRUARY 14—". . . henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind."

There is a difference in the way of life between the saved and the unsaved. They walk in opposite directions. To be converted, means to be turned about. Whereas he walked the broad road, he now walks the narrow road, according to Christ's teaching. His interest has changed. His desires are different. His life is new. He is of a different mind. His associates are no more the same. He walks not as others (non-Christains) walk.

FEBRUARY 15—"And walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us. . ." Eph. 5:2

Jude says,"Keep yourselves in the love of God." According to 1 Corinthians 13 there is but one way to prove that we are Christains, and that is by our love. The scripture teaches that the love of God is shed abroad in the heart of the believer. Moody said that if the Christians would walk in love for thirty days their number would be doubled. The world can only be conquered by love. If we have not the spirit of love we do not have God's Spirit, for God is love. Love is the first fruit of the Spirit. It is as natural for a Christain to love as it is for a dove to be gentle. We ought to move into 1 Corinthians 13.

FEBRUARY 16—". . . walk as children of light." Eph. 5:8

A Christian has the light; he loves the light and he walks in the light. There is nothing in his life he must hide. He is an open book that all may read. Therefore he is unafraid. A consistent Christian knows no fear. He walks in the light when he walks before God. A man, eighty years of age, was asked why he walked so erect. His answer was, "I walk before God." Can it be said of us, "For ye were sometimes darkness, but now ye are light in the Lord:"?

FEBRUARY 17—"See that ye walk circumspectly . . . " Eph. 5:15

The Christian is watched by many eyes. Heaven watches him. The powers of darkness watch him. The world watches him. He cannot afford to become careless in his life. He must be careful because of the sinful nature within himself and because of the sin around him. All the warnings of scripture must be heeded, if he is not to be defeated. Many there are who seek his downfall. Yet, as he exercises care and trusts God, he is victorious.

Help Organize A Washington Fellowship

Periodically numbers of Mennonite families in Washington, D. C. have been meeting in various homes for a period of Christian fellowship. Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Duerkson of 3134 Monroe Avenue, N. E. and Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Shellenberg, formerly of Hillsboro, Kansas, have taken the initative in arranging these meetings. In these groups the desire has been to organize a Mennonite Fellowship similar to those organized in Chicago and New York. Newcomers to Washington of a Mennonite background find such fellowship a great source of interest and inspiration especially in the early days when they have no other acquaintances.

Any readers of the Mennonite who have friends o relatives in Washington and who might be interested in knowing about other Mennonites there, should send such names and addresses to J. A. Duerkson a the above address or should send Mr. Duerkson' address to these friends. —J. Winfield Fret

Non-resistance in Practice

C. Stanley Smith, a missionary, writes a thrilling account of the harrowing experiences which he underwent during the tragic disaster in Nanking, China, when on March 24, 1927, the Chinese National Army rifled and plundered that city. A few days before this date all the Americans had retired from the city upon orders from the American Consul. A few of the missionaries remained behind to do what they could to protect mission property and to stand by the students in the school buildings. Smith was alone in his house when the soldiers reached it in their search for plunder and for foreigners whom they had orders to kill. He took the wise precaution not to have any firearm on his person when his house was entered. Successive groups of brutal soldiers, whom he describes as inhuman looking beings with faces distorted by rage and hatred surrounded him with threats and demands. He gave them what money he had, felt strangely free from fear all the while, engaged in friendly conversation with leaders of the threatening mobs, and with calmness looked upon the carrying away of his earthly possessions, including a valuable personal library, feeling no bitterness, but only pity for the poor ignorant looters. One perfect demon of a soldier, insane with hatred, seemed bent on killing him. He received first a savage blow on the right cheek, thanked the soldier and told him to hit his left cheek also. The man looked rather non-plused, but he did not strike. Soon he was struck on the right side of his chest with the butt of a gun. He offered the left for another blow which was not given. The soldier next demanded that Smith be tied up and taken off to be shot. He found a strap himself, held his hands together and offered to be tied up, but nothing came of it. This is Smith's testimony in his own words; "I believe that in this incident and later my life was saved by putting into practice literally the teachings on non-resistance of the Sermon on the Mount. The fact that I also felt no fear of the soldiers contributed largely to my safety. I say this with no desire to boast; for I am not naturally overly brave, but simply to record a fact. I seemed to be lifted up in some strange way on a plane above the brutality of the soldiers and the ignorant greed of the mob."

FUNNY OR TRAGIC?

An examination of four comic sections recently revealed: 3 cases of untruthfulness, 2 cases of smoking, 1 case of drinking, 1 portrayal of army life, and two scenes of violence. These hardly constitute exemplary Christian living. One can hardly claim that these acts belong to the category of "Whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report." On what things are we to think, on those that Paul enumerates or on those the comic artists depict? Violence, drinking, lying, etc., are hardly funny. Condonation of such acts with a light attitude of mind and heart damages one's appreciation of that which is precious in the sight of God. Much that claims to be funny is tragic in the light of Christ.—rw.

"To Be or Not to Be" Farmers

A large number of us grew up on the farm before entering C.P.S. But the time is now ripe for us to evaluate farm life objectively to see the possibilities that lie before us if we should decide to go back to the land after the war. Let us take a look at what the farm has to offer.

Farming is no longer a place where anyone can go and make a good living when he has failed in all other jobs, but now, in order to succeed, one needs a "knack" of proper farm management and skill to compete with highly organized industry. In order to do this the farmer will need to be alert and gain through experience a certain knowledge of good farm practices and be able to work with his fellow farmers more cooperatively than he has done in the past. Of course, at the heart of his success, the farmer will find that hard toil, long working hours, and similar factors with which we are so well acquainted will be present.

There is already during this war the starting of a "land boom" with rapidly increasing land prices and legislation to control conditions so that there will not be similar disastrous results that were experienced after the last war. People evidently realize that "Land" is the most stable thing, and in time of stress it is a most desirable thing to possess. If it is a desirable possession in war time, why is it not a valuable possession in peace time?

Aside from a purely business proposition, farming holds a real challenge for youth from the historic peace churches—churches that are largely made up of rural people. The more urban we become the more, I feel, we will lose our heritage, and the weaker will our testimony become as a church.

Throughout the history of our country there has been a steady stream of people going from the country to the city. It is only through this large influx of people and immigration of peoples from other countries that our own cities have grown to their present size and are able to maintain themselves. There is a feeling, but largely an erroneous one, that the city has something the country cannot provide.

The great attraction of the city has been the higher wages and the regularity of shorter hours of labor but the last great depression put this advantage on a balancing scale and in many cases it was found very wanting.

Now actually, what does a future in farming hold? I do not want to make the farm appeal ideal,—it is far from that. It will continue to mean hard work. It will become more competitive and more subject to governmental controls. The problem of soil conservation will need to be met on each individual farm. We will continue to have wet weather when we want to plant crops and droughts when the crops are maturing. There will be crop failures and livestock losses. In short, there will be many times of discouragement and hard problems to face and solve.

Far outweighing all the disadvantages of farming is the way of life that farming holds. It is so closely connected with the religious life of the people. The farmer has a certain sense of security and independence, too, that not all people enjoy.

Our fathers were good farmers and our mothers good homemakers; our homelife was simple, but happy. We owe it to our posterity to have them say the same of us.

"I Am the Bread of Life"

Series: The "I AM'S" of Christ

"I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." John 6:35.

Bread is called the staff of life. In days when we are being reminded to distinguish between the essential and the non-essential, we would certainly consider bread as a necessity for life. We could scarcely think of a meal without thinking of bread.

For oriental peoples bread is an even more important part of the diet than it is for us. Bread is often their chief food. It is the center around which the meal is planned. The writer had the privilege of living for ten days in the home of an Arab in Jerusalem. It was indelibly impressed upon his mind that bread was considered the most essential food.

When Jesus applied to Himself the figure of "the bread of life" He was claiming that He was as important to their spiritual needs as physical bread was to their bodily needs. He claimed to be the living manna without which the souls of men would starve. He claimed to be the bread which was able to satisfy the hunger of the soul.

As bread must be eaten and digested in order to strengthen the body, so Christ as the bread of life must be received in faith in order to bring life to the soul. The mere presence of a piece of bread will not keep a person from starving. Only a fool, however, would let himself starve to death when the bread is present. How pathetic that while Christ is ready to supply our every spiritual need, so many go on without Him. —Erland Waltner

YOUTH JOTTINGS

—Rev. Gerald Stucky, who with Rev. W. C. Voth is touring South America for the purpose of locating a mission field, is expected back in the United States in the beginning of March.

The C.P.S. Smoke Jumper Unit will probably be enlarged to double its present camp strength of sixty men, if there are that many volunteers in C.P.S. Evidently the unit at Missoula, Montana, has proven to be quite successful and the Forestry Service is eager to have it enlarged for the coming fire season.

—The officers of the Eastern District Y. P. Organization are: President—Ted Moyer, Line Lexington, Pa.; Vice President—Grace Moyer, 612 S. 5th St., Allentown; Recording Secretary—Esther Geissinger, Zionsville; Corresponding Secretary—Mildred Frazee, E. 5th St., Lansdale; Mission Secretary—Shirley Ingalls, RD 2, Quakertown; Treasurer—Erwin Miller, Jr., Coopersburg, RD 1; Intermediate Superintendent—Huldah Myers, RFD 2, Quakertown; Junior Superintendent—Mrs. Harvey Kulp, 144 Penn, Souderton; Pastor Counselor—Rev. Russell Mast, Bedminster; Editor C. E. Witness—Grace Binder, 816 W. Second St., Lansdale.

—Dr. Herbert Schmidt showed his pictures on South America to the C. E. of the Buhler, Kansas, Mennonite Church on January 30.

—Victor Buller, member of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, undoubtedly still likes to play the violin and to write poetry. However, he now has additional interests, for he married Myrtle Molzen on December 5 and is now a member of the C.P.S. unit at the state hospital at Ypsilanti, Michigan.

—Erma Esau, a member of the Emmaus Mennonite Church, Whitewater, Kansas, is now the efficient assistant in the M.C.C. Clothing Depot at Akron, Pa. Mrs. M. C. Lehman is the director under whom she works.

Marvin Dyck

—Marvin Dyck, is a member of the Emmaus Mennonite Church, Whitewater, Kansas. He is a tall youth who enjoys playing the piano. He has had three years at Bethel College. Now he is one of thirteen C.P.S. men, in white coats with an identifying green diamond on the sleeve, who are assisting the Duke University (Durham, North Carolina) "Hospital medical staff in treatment aimed toward the rapid recovery of patients suffering from disorders of behaviour. Work on this ward, named for Adolf Meyer, dean of American psychiatrists, is vastly different from that of a state mental hospital. Here is a small group of patients—capacity is twenty—receive intensive treatment in the newest and fastest methods yet discovered for restoring sick people to mental health. Men and women patients mingle in the 'day room;' bars, locks, and restraints are concealed, and no patient stays longer than a month or two. Instead of the custodial care of hopeless incurables, the neuropsychiatrists at Duke expend their main efforts on helping patients who have had 'nervous breakdown,' but who are believed capable of recovery."

NOTE ABOUT FINANCIAL REPORT

Please, do not become impatient if you find errors in this report. To have such a complicated report entirely correct requires an amount of checking that we cannot afford financially. But, please, report all mistakes found in this and coming reports. Do so right away when you find them. An unnoticed mistake in a quarterly report breeds additional ones in the yearly summary. —rw.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Although the first corner stone of Bethel College was laid in 1888, the school was not ready for students until a few years later. On September 20, 1893, Bethel College opened its doors to its first students. Now, fifty years later, the College is observing its Golden Anniversary Year. The anniversary theme is being used in programs throughout the school year.

During this Golden Anniversary school year an attempt is being made to liquidate the debt of Bethel College. The goal is to reach every Mennonite in the College's constituency either by mail or through personal calls in behalf of the cause of Christian education at Bethel. It is hoped that every person contacted will either give suggestions for the improvement of the College or a gift or both.

THEATER IN JERUSALEM?

Dr. W. P. Breed has made the statement: "There was a theater in Jerusalem in the days of Jesus. Think you He ever attended it? Did the early disciples? So far were they from it that neither Jesus nor the apostles ever thought of forbidding their attendance at stage plays . . . When Herod introduced the theater, Josephus the Jewish historian—not a Christian—denounced it as corrupting the morals of the Jewish people."

"Expensive parties, dinners, etc., are only methods of self-advertising and display; and as such are twin sisters to Self Praise."

CORRESPONDENCE

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH WADSWORTH, OHIO

The Missionary Society held its annual mite box program November 27. An increase of 100 per-cent was realized from last year's mite box offering. The special feature of the evening program was a movie "A Story of Bambi," a convert of the Belgian Congo area in which Brother Vernon Sprunger and family serve. The Sprungers are members of our church.

The first experimental period of Rev. Smucker's radio broadcasts over WAKR 1590 on the dial—proved successful. A new contract has been signed for future programs. Printed copies of these radio sermons, and also the Sunday bulletins are being sent to soldiers, absentees, and shut-ins of the church.

THE FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Upland, California

As a New Year's Greeting I repeat our pastor's New Year's text, "Therefore if any man be in Christ he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." II Cor. 5:17

As we become new creatures in Christ, by the divine power of God, a change takes place. There are new views, new motives also new plans of life. Old things are passed away, prejudices, opinions, habits, and love of the world. With the mind centered on God, the spirit of Christ within, the problems of the New Year can be faced and the tasks that are before us accomplished.

Sunday morning Jan. 30, Mr. L. J. Horsch, the new deacon, was ordained and other officers installed by our pastor. The remainder of the morning service was held as a special tribute to the oldest member of the congregation, Rev. J. C. Mehl, who on January 28 celebrated his ninety-fourth birthday.

First Church to Contribute

At the last session of the Western District Conference it was decided to establish a revolving church building fund, this fund to be handled by the Board of Trustees. The conference also passed the resolution "That all the churches be encouraged to contribute a sum of 2 per cent of their annual budget into a revolving church building fund of the Western District Conference."

The Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, Wichita, Kansas, has been the first to carry out this resolution. It has contributed $37.40 to this fund. This is 2 per cent of its annual budget. It is hoped that a fund will be built up at least in part by this method. Some churches may want to give more than 2 per cent.

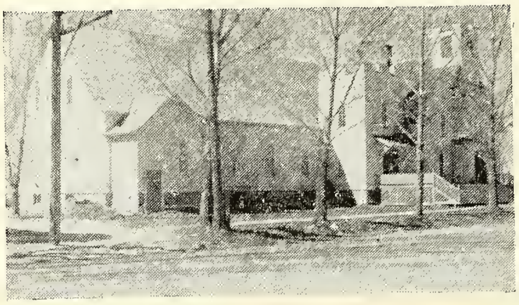
JOTTINGS

—Walton Mennonite Church, Walton, Kansas: Our membership is now 63. The church has the 100 percent church paper plan. Every family now receives The Mennonite and the Junior Messenger. At present our pastor is doing some substitute teaching in Moundridge High School. The pastor's wife is teaching a grade school. The average attendance in Sunday School the past year was seventy-three. The record attendance was 125. The average church offering per Sunday was $17.56. One of the main motions passed at the annual meeting was, "That $20 be taken out of the Sunday School Treasury and used to buy reference books for a library and the balance be used toward the purchasing of a piano for our church."

—The West Zion Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, has a period of sharing experiences in connection with the Sunday evening service. Four or five people are generally asked to testify. Subjects that have been used are: "How My Experience Leads Me To Believe That God Hears Prayer," "How to Overcome Temptations," "What My Baptism Meant to Me," Why I Believe I am in the Life Work God Wants Me To Be," and "Passages of Scripture That Have Meant a Great Deal to Me in My Life." Brother W. F. Unruh, pastor, says that they have had some mighty fine testimonies and that the experience unites the members more than often realized.



Meeting house of the First Mennonite Church, Aberdeen, Idaho

—Bethel College: Paul Rood, evangelist, Bible teacher, former president of the Los Angeles Bible Institute, and President of the World's Christian Fundamentalist Association, spoke to the students and faculty of Bethel College on February 1.

—First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: The pastor is preaching a series of sermons on the Book of Revelation. On the evening of February 6 the members enjoyed the outstanding, half-hour sound film, "The Book for the World of Tomorrow." This film was produced by the American Bible Society in cooperation with Warner Brothers, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and the Radio Corporation of Americo. The pastor says of it, "It has a wonderful religious message concerning the Bible and its role in American life."

Pastors, send your Year Books or annual reports to the editor. He will seek to use them and then file them in the Historical Library.

—Bethel Mennonite Church, Perkasie, Pa. While the Landis sisters were ill—they have been absent from church services since early in December—their brother became housekeeper and nurse for them, and various friends and neighbors helped occasionally and provided true holiday fare for them at Christmas. —F. E. Landis Corr.

—Church members you can help your pastor by reporting to him the name and birthdate of any newcomer in the family. Especially does this hold true for non-resident members.

—The First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California, sends its Sunday bulletin to all non-resident members. This is very much appreciated as recent letters indicate. The bulletin is sent off before Sunday. The editor also receives one regularly. The Aaron Rempel family is leaving this congregation to establish their home in far distant Alaska.

—Want to help your minister when he calls on you? You can do so by deciding beforehand upon the really important things that you would like to discuss with your pastor. The pastor's time is too precious to spend a lot of it upon the weather, which can't be changed anyhow. Use the time for getting help from the one charged with caring for your spiritual welfare. One pastor reports that one of his members had a list of matters written down for discussion when he came to visit him. The pastor appreciated this very much.

—Program of next General Conference is being planned: On January 15 the brethren J. S. Schultz and Walter Gering. Chairman and Secretary respectively of the Program Committee. met at Berne. Indiana. and outlined plans for the program. The other member. J. J. Thiessen of Canada, could not be present. The committee hopes to meet again in the latter part of April. In the meantime the committee is writing to the boards and committees relative to their parts on the program and possble speakers and subjects. This is a big job.

—Joseph Byler, former relief co-ordinator for the M.C.C. in France and at present Director of the C.P.S. Hospital Units in the United States spoke to the Frst Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas, on January 23.

—Rev. H. N. Harder, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Geary, Oklahoma, is scheduled for a series of meetings from February 6 to 24 in Waterloo, Beamsville and Leamington, Ontario.

—Hereford Mennonite Church, Bally, Pa. This church contributed $564.50 for C.P.S. and $215.30 for war Relief during 1943.

—First Mennonite Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: This church now has a membership of 384. Eleven of its young people serve as teachers, six as nurses, and six attend Bethel College, while some attend other schools The Boys' Club is an organization of high school boys who through different projects raise money for mission work. This congregation has a well balanced schedule of offerings. Although most of its young men are in the armed forces, this church gave $1,591.45 for C.P.S in 1943.

How to Train Ministers for Our Churches and How to Place Them

By H. A. Fast

Our topic confronts us with two big problems, mely: (1) how to train ministers for our churches;) how to place them. Either of these subjects big enough for separate discussion. It is obvious ıt this treatment cannot deal adequately with both them at this time.

[would like to approach this discussion by asking ee questions and then proposing to give some y brief answers to each of them.

What kind of ministers do our churches want?

Men of unquestioned Christian character, whose Christian profession has proven and continues to prove its validity in the Christ-like quality of their daily living and daily relations.

Men with a real spirit-filled message.
  (a) Based on a genuine experience of Christ within, a genuine experience of salvation.
  (b) Based on a genuine insight into the will and way of God.
  (c) Based on a real knowledge of the Bible and an ability to use it.
  (d) Based on a real sense of Divine call.

Ien who are able to preach effectively so that)thers are led to Christ and to a life of Christian levotion and service.

Ien who know how to work harmoniously and ffectively with people in the church and comnunity, especially young people.
  (a) Men of good balance and sound judgment.
  (b) Men of good tact, understanding the feelings and thinking of others.
  (c) Men who know how to cooperate with others.

Ien able to serve as leaders and pastor of the work f the church, including Sunday School, Christian ducation, young people's work.
  (a) Men who are not lazy.
  (b) Men who have administrative ability.
  (c) Men who truly understand the work of the church and clearly see the opportunities offered in Sunday School, the whole program of Christian education, of evangelism, and of young people's work, etc. Men who clearly see the problems of the church but do not quake before them and by the grace of God find resourceful answers to them.
  (d) Men who know life and its problems, personal, social, and community, and can give effective guidance to people in finding Christ-guided answers to them.

6. Men who know, understand, and appreciate our Mennonite people, heritage, and mission. This should include understanding and appreciation of our Conference work and mission.

II. How train young men so as to furnish our churches this type of leadership?

1. I am convinced that our own church schools and leaders are better able to train needed leaders for our own churches than non-Mennonite schools and leaders. This does not imply disparagement of other schools. However, our own leaders know our own people, needs, work, and genius better than others can. Our leaders are interested in sending young men back to our churches as usable and effective ministers. They have a sense of responsibility to our churches and people.
2. Our present facilities for training are:
   (a) Various Bible schools
   (b) A junior college

Dr. J. D. Unruh Continues Presidency

In The Mennonite of January 18, 1944, we read "Dr. J. D. Unruh, President of Freeman Junior College, has resigned to enter other teaching duties; so reports the Bundesbote." It is true that Dr. Unruh handed in his resignation to the Board of Trustees of Freeman Junior College on December 3, 1943, to take effect July 1, 1944. The cause of his resignation, however, was not to enter other teaching duties. The Board of Freeman Junior College was fully conscious of the fact, that the future progress and welfare of the school could more readily prosper under his able leadership, than under that of any one else. The Board therefore repeated its earnest appeal to Dr. Unruh to reconsider his resignation. After due deliberation he finally consented to continue to give his whole hearted services to Freeman Junior College as its president.

We commend him, as well as Freeman Junior College including the board of trustees and faculty to the intercessory prayers of the Believers.

By request of the Board of Trustees,
John C. Mueller, Sec.

His Blood, Sweat, and Tears

According to I John 1:7, the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin, that is, brings salvation to all who accept the sacrifice on Calvary. Accompanying this salvation is the gift of the Holy Spirit, Acts 2:38. And the fruit of the Holy Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance, Gal. 5:22,23. War bringeth neither salvation nor the Holy Spirit and its fruit. On November 11, 1918, ended the war that was "to end all wars" and "to make the world safe for democracy." The colossal amount of blood, sweat, and tears of that war failed to bring into the world peace and righteousness.

Today humanity is engaged in a great civil war. Though half a million English and Americans and a half a million on the other side should perish in the spring invasion, though all Christians should join the millions of non-Christians in taking gun and grenade to bring about peace and righteousness, though all preachers, Bible teachers, schools, and churches should give their blessing to participation in this carnal strife, the blood, sweat, and tears of this war and of no war will ever bring salvation and the fruits of the Spirit into the lives of human beings. War is a great social movement supposed to make this a better world. But it cannot make saved men and women. Salvation and its results cannot come with the bitterest human sacrifice to destroy. God does not save through the blood, sweat, and tears of war.

God provided for our salvation through the blood, sweat, and tears of Jesus Christ. God so loved every one of all nations that tears came to the eyes of His son as He looked upon sinful, stubborn Jerusalem, that His sweat fell to the ground like large drops of blood when He prayed in Gethsemane, and that He shed His precious blood upon the cross of Calvary. Love so amazing, so divine, has provided for our complete salvation. No other way is needed. Sinners plunged beneath that flood of blood lose all their guilty stains. The vilest German, Japanese, and American can be transformed into a child of God through that blood and in no other way. Nothing but the blood of Jesus can make the lives of human beings what they ought to be. His blood is the way to peace among men and righteousness in their dealings with one another. To try any other way is futile sin.

Those who experience the amazing grace of God as they ought to become gracious themselves and abundant with the fruits of the Spirit. As men and women permit themselves to be washed in the blood of the Lamb—and only then—do they become children of God and capable of doing the good works that should characterize his sons and daughters. Our great task as Christians is to bring men and women to experience the saving power of the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. Oh, what love God offered to mankind in the blood, sweat, and tears of His son! "Love so amazing, so divine, Demands my soul, my life, my all." —rw.

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

MAKING A PLACE FOR OUR BOYS IN THE LOCAL COMMUNITY

In studies of youth problems in various American rural areas it has been revealed that seven out of ten young men would prefer to spend their lives in thei home communities if they could find opportunities t earn a living. Rural girls have slightly less preferenc for rural communities than do rural boys. Inasmuch as these studies are accurate representations of rura young people's attitudes, they indicate that the fligh of youth to the cities is a secondary rather than a primary choice. Preliminary studies by the M.C.C. or C.P.S. men's post-war preferences substantiate thi opinion. Most of these men want to return to thei home community.

What Are Home Communities Doing?

In the light of these facts we need to ask what ou local communities and congregations are doing an planning to absorb their own and other intereste young men after demobilization? Do local congregations feel any responsibility to deal with the problem? Will they take the initiative in investigatin occupational needs and opportunities for returnin men? Or will this be left to the individual perso his family and friends or to a public or private employment agency?

Things to Remember

The General Conference has not made adherence t non-resistance a test of church membership and wil therefore, welcome back into Christian fellowship a former men now in national service whether in C.P.S non-combatant, or full military service. It should b remembered that C.P.S. men in contrast to no combatants and men in regular service, receive no pa during the period they are drafted. They will recei no muster out pay, no bonus, no pension, no allowan for dependent wife and children and will in many cas face discrimination in the search for jobs after th war because employers will generally give first pr ference to men with military service records.

Will the Churches Stand By?

What we wish to raise here is whether the Menn nite congregations are going to stand by the men w have sacrificed to give witness to the teachings Christ and his church? Are the churches going share the sacrifice or are they going to ask the bo to bear it alone? Are they going to make a place f the boys who want to come back and live in the ho community?

Vineland United Mennonite Church

Vineland, Ontario

By Rev. John Wichert

(Translated into English, by A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary, Home Mission Board.)

The name "Vineland United Mennonite Church" was adopted April 13, 1936, when the Vineland group became a self-supporting congregation.

In 1924 the first immigrant group that formed the nucleus of this church arrived from Russia. Immediately the desire for regular worship services was manifested. Ministers from Waterloo and Kitchener came to preach, but if no one appeared a sermon was read and worship conducted. Rev. J. B. Wiens (now in Vancouver) was elected as minister on August 16, 1925, but he soon moved to Waterloo. The hardships of winter caused many to move to other places, mainly to Kitchener and Waterloo in order to obtain more opportunity to earn money. In the spring of 1926 the group increased again, and regular worship services were started again. Visiting ministers came about one Sunday a month; on the other Sundays sermons were read and worship conducted.

Church Home in 1926

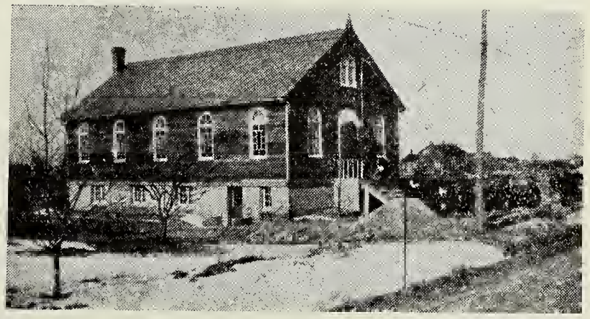
The members of the Vineland group at first belonged to the "Refugee Church" of Ontario, organized in June, 1925. This name was changed to United Mennonite Church of Ontario August 15, 1926, Headquarters for this congregation were in Waterloo with Rev. J. H. Janzen as leader.

The Vineland group elected their own minister May 1, 1927, from three candidates, John Wichert was selected, and the leadership was entrusted into his care. The Lord granted growth, so that the private home that had served as meeting-place was unable to accommodate the increasing number of worshipers, the new location, an abandoned saw-mill, was occupied, May 15, 1927.

On May 20, Elder Jacob H. Janzen, Waterloo, ordained and installed John Wichert as minister. On the same Sunday morning Brother Janzen baptized seven souls—two were young women and five were young men. These were the "first-fruits" of this group.

The constantly growing United Mennonite Church of Ontario, was divided into three congregations, January 20, 1929: The Reesor United Mennonite Church, The Essex County United Mennonite Church, and the Waterloo-Kitchener United Mennonite Church. The Vineland congregation remained in the last named Church.

The desire for more than one minister resulted in a further choice of ministers when in August 1929 the Brethren Cornelius and Neufeld were elected to assist in the ever growing group. In 1931 Rev. D. H. Koop, from Manitoba came to Vineland, and the following year he was elected as Elder of the Waterloo-Kitchener Church, succeeding Rev. Jacob H. Janzen who accepted work under the Home Mission Board. With Vineland as his home, he served all the groups belonging to the Waterloo-Kitchener United Mennonite Church.



The New Church, January, 1936

The Enlarged Church, 1942

Everyone felt that a new Church was greatly needed and in 1935 the Vineland congregation voted unanimously to build. Ground was broken October 30, and at Christmas time the building was ready for occupation, the labor having been donated almost entirely and the work done under the direction of the contractor. The dedication and the Christmas program by the Sunday School on December 24 were woven together into a day of joyous thanksgiving.

As it often happens, so here, the cost exceeded the expectation, and the group asked the Home Mission Board for a loan. This was granted. Five hundred dollars were loaned for three years without interest. This aid gave the members courage and in November, 1938, the entire loan was repaid.

The conviction manifested itself that the Vineland group was able to be self sustaining. On April 12, 1936 appropriate action was taken to bring about an independent organization. At the congregational business meeting a call was given to Rev. D. H. Koop to become the leader of this newly organized congregation. The call was accepted, but for a time he continued to serve the Waterloo-Kitchener Church until Rev. Jacob J. Janzen returned from Vancouver. In November, 1937, he assumed the Eldership of the Vineland United Mennonite Church.

From within and from without the church so arranged its program that energetic work might be done. The Sunday School, which was organized in 1926, faithfully ministered to the needs of the little ones from the Word of God. At the time we moved into the new church, Abraham Rempel was a faithful worker in our growing Sunday School. In the young people's meeting he distinguished himself as a leader, but all this promising usefulness came to a sudden end with his unexpected death, May 6, 1939. At that time the enrollment in Sunday School had reached 129.

A new leader in Sunday School work was necessary, and the congregation made such a choice. As a result of Mennonite families from other places moving here, the number of our Sunday School scholars increased until there are now 250 on the roll.

The congregation is fortunate to have a large well trained choir which is constantly ready to give leadership in congregational singing and also to render special selections and anthems. Under the able direction of Brother Gerhard Harder this choir of about fifty voices has brought many blessings to the church.

The total number of baptized members today stands very near the three hundred mark. When the children and the whole related constituency is counted, the number reaches almost six hundred! Praise God from whom all blessings flow!"

The constantly growing number of attendants at the worship and other services crowded our building to such an extent that it was decided to build an addition to the church. In September, 1942, the necessary action was taken and by November 1 the work was completed. This furnishes sufficient room for the time being for worshippers and for Sunday School pupils.

DASRATHI

Dasrathi lives out in the far corner of our mission area, where the world is walled in with jungle trees and bamboo. The sun does not rise so early because of the hills to the east, and it sets an hour earlier, due to the high mountains west of his home. During the rainy season he can hear the waters rushing over the cataracts high up in the mountains. In the jungle are bear, panther, deer, and other jungle animals. One day while going with his father to get wood from the jungle, Dasrathi fell from the cart. The result was a gash in his scalp over four inches long. He was brought to the hospital some days later. Although only six years old, he was very brave. He tried very hard not to cry when the gaping wound was treated twice a day. As most children do, he soon learned to trust the doctors and compounders, even though the treatment was painful. After a month's treatment he was well enough to go home.

At the hospital his parents and grandmother often listened as we told the gospel stories to the patients. There are many Christians being added to the church where Dasrathi lives. We trust that he and his parents will also learn to know our Savior.

STUDYING THE BIBLE WITH OUR BRETHERN IN INDIA

It is an annual affair with us to have a four to six week's Bible course. This year we studied Hosea and Hebrews. It was my joy to gather twenty-four of our teachers and medical workers around me every day for this study. Hosea was a real challenge to the married brethern, and nearly all in the class were married. The relationship between husband and wife should be mutual and unbreakable. God wants the relationship between Him and His people to be the same. The prophet Hosea can be called a real forerunner of Christ in his interpretation of God as being one who loves at all costs.

Then we came to Hebrews, a book so variously interpreted. Our class found the book a challenge in seeing the writer address a church which was slipping in faith and warmth toward Christ. This church was assailed by doubts whether the old Jewish system had perhaps been better than what the Christian faith offered. The old seemed so definite and tested through the centuries. How often new Christians have a tendency to look back to the old faith, which appears to be firmly established. Yes, looking back at the old fleshpots of Egypt! Then this author of Hebrews lifts Christ so high that any doubt of His greatness, or any question as to His sufficiency must flee. Yes, we twenty-five had a blessed time together studying these two books.

(c) Two four-year colleges.

These schools offer a variety of courses whose purpose is to give young people a sound and thorough knowledge and understanding along lines indicated above. However, the training offered needs to be made more all-sided and far-reaching. There should be cultivated in these schools a genuine appreciation of the rural church and the rural community, because as yet our Mennonite people are overwhelmingly a rural people.

It is possible to set our educational standards for the ministry too high just as it is possible to set them too low. In order to provide the all-sided and far-reaching training needed for our own churches, it is important that we have our own Seminary and Bible School.

There is tremendous value in having young men attend our own Mennonite schools before attending non-Mennonite institutions. They learn to understand and appreciate our own Mennonite heritage and mission and the work which God has entrusted to us as a people. If young men have attended non-Mennonite schools first, they should be required to attend some Mennonite institution before being entrusted with the responsibility of a church in order that they might learn to know our people and learn to understand and appreciate our method of work.

3. There is a far-reaching importance in a training program that provides practical experience in preaching and in church work under supervision. Bethel College has included such a program of preaching and church work as part of its training program. A program of internship during the summer months, as has been sponsored by the Reedley Church for several years and is being carried on through the school year through the courtesy of the Halstead Church, is another very valuable part of the training of young ministers. There should also be offered a follow-up training program that would include reading courses that would require serious study and would provide a balanced reading diet. It would also be very helpful if there were regular provisions for ministers' institutes or retreats where young ministers and older ministers would gather for a week of serious study and conference under stimulating leadership.

III. How to place young ministers

1. An important factor in placing them is in knowing them.
   - (a) The present supervised practical church work conducted by our colleges helps home mission committees and other Conference and church leaders to know and appreciate them.
   - (b) The program of internship also helps to know them.
   - (c) Young ministers have found places of labor and opportunity through their student pastorates.
2. The Conference Placement Committee has helped many churches and pastors.

A. It has, however, certain serious weaknesses:

- (a) Churches and pastors often are not well enough informed where to write. The Committee has not succeeded in building up a large enough reservoir of confidence so that churches write to them for help and give their recommendations the serious consideration they deserve.
- (b) The Committee members are too widely scattered for most effective help.
- (c) The present method of election does not always secure for this work the men best qualified to serve in this capacity.

B. Suggestions for improving the effectiveness of the service of this committee.

- (a) Each District Conference should have one or two representatives who together with the General Conference member would constitute a district committee on service to ministers, giving help as desired or needed. Who is on the General Conference Committee now? Very few churches and pastors know.
- (b) Home and foreign mission boards and committees and likewise college and Bible school committees should give wholehearted cooperation in this service of wisely placing ministers.
- (c) The committee should have a complete file of pertinent information regarding every minister of the Conference and of young ministers especially.

3. For an effective program of ministerial placements there needs to be developed a plan for the education of the churches on the problem of securing ministers and making a change when the best interests of the church or of the pastor appear to demand it.

Such a program of education would help to prevent the piracy of larger churches grabbing ministers away from congregations less able financially and would help to develop an intelligent and an ethically sound and Christian way of securing or changing pastors.

(The above is the substance of a message given by Brother Fast at the last session of the Western District Conference.)

Bethel Deaconess Home and Hospital Society Holds Annual Meeting

The fortieth annual meeting of the Bethel Deaconess Home and Hospital Society of Newton, Kansas, was held February 8. The Rev. J. E. Entz, president of the society, gave the invocation, and after an inspiring address by the Rev. H. J. Dyck of Elbing, declared the annual business meeting in session.

The report on the Bethel deaconess sisterhood, among other things, indicated that Sister Frieda, due to health reasons, resigned her office as sister-in-charge of the Bethel sisterhood on June 23, 1943, after thirty-five years of service in this capacity. Sister Lena Mae was chosen by the sisters as her successor to this office, and their choice has been confirmed by the board of directors.

Sister Helena reported on the Bethel Home for Aged. Her report indicated that the home had been filled to capacity throughout the year. One of the greatest problems of the home for aged is the many who apply for entrance but must be placed on the waiting list for lack of room. The home at present accommodates thirty-four residents.

The report of the Bethel Deaconess Hospital was given by H. J. Andres administrator of the hospital. This report gave evidence of much activity during the past year. The average daily occupancy of the hospital and of the clinical work done showed an increase of 14 per cent over 1942, and the facilities of the hospital were often taxed beyond capacity.

Upon recommendation of the board of directors, it was resolved to begin soliciting funds immediately for the completion of the third floor of the new hospital addition, for the purchase of new X-ray equipment, and for the liquidation of the balance of the indebtedness. Because of the comparitively few critical materials involved, it is believed that the War Production Board will grant the necessary permission to complete the third floor of the hospital addition, and work is to be started as soon as the finances will warrant.

Mrs. J. H. Enns reported on the activities of the women's auxiliary which included the purchase of a new Phillips obstetrical table for the hospital.

The report of the junior auxiliary, given by Mrs. H. R. Schmidt, showed that this group had had two special projects for the year. One was the purchase of a gas anesthesia machine for the delivery room and the other was the purchase of an infant incubator for the nursery.

Dr. H. A. Fast gave an address during the afternoon session on the responsibility of the church to its charities.

Canned Foods Arrive At Camp

By Myrtle Kolb

Early in November our business manager received a letter from the Akron office informing him that we might expect two shipments of canned goods from eastern Ohio. And we began to wonder. Would it come by truck?—or by freight? And just what would we do if a carload should come in on a Saturday, and during a below zero spell? But that was crossing bridges before we reached them, so we settled down to wait for further information. Finally, it came in these words, "One truck load will arrive Tuesday evening; three on Thursday evening, and a fifth on Saturday." So that was that!

The first truck load arrived, and a seemingly endess stream of boxes flowed into the south part of he dining hall. All of them were crated in such a way that they could have traveled to California or Alaska without any casualties. It seemed like an normous amount of food. But when three trucks rrived on Thursday evening we knew that we hadn't een anything! By the time those three had been unoaded, old dorm "G" looked as if it might pop open t the seams, and the floor, in spite of its reinforcements, seemed almost ready to give up. And Saturay's load was still to be added!

Up to this point it had taken very little effort n our part— although the men who helped unload might question such a statement. But now came the eed for checking, jar by jar, and making a record f the entire shipment with how many of this, and ow much of that, and "would you say these are weet or sour pickles?" We discovered that there ere 13,750 quarts of canned goods, including 3,075 peaches, 1,804 of tomatoes, 1,567 of beans, 1,375 tomato juice, 1,100 of pickles, 1,040 of applesauce, eside many quarts of other foods. Even some pickled auliflower! And dried corn—485 pounds of it, and ried apples and beans. One could go on and on.

The most fun was finding on the labels the names people one had known in school or had met at me time or other; and the different church groups; nd various familiar and unfamiliar congregations. l these things joined to give us the warm feeling at everyone back home in the churches is personally terested in this program. And that means a lot, r sometimes we grow tired, and our vision is dimmed, d we wonder whether after all we aren't a sort of "forgotten generation."

So our thanks go out to the people who canned the od; to those who spent hours—and days—packing d crating it; to those who made the long, tiresome p by truck to bring it to us; and to anyone else ho in any way contributed to the success of this eat undertaking.

Surprise for Voth and Stucky

A recent letter from Brother W. C. Voth states that he and Brother Gerald Stucky arrived in Buenos Aires January 15. "We had a new experience," he writes, "in that it was the first time on our journey that someone met us at the airport. I had written to Rev. Louis Webber (missionary for Old Mennonites) that we were coming, and he was there to meet us. We were indeed happy to see him, and in a few minutes he also informed us of a surprise. That was that the Ferdinand Isaacs and Miss Schrag were in the city. He took us to the same hotel, and it happened that we got a room adjoining that of the Isaacs. When we got to our room he called them in and was it a surprise also for them!

We have had a fine time together since. Sunday we were in church together, and in the afternoon we went to tea to the Webbers, on their invitation. Had a nice visit there. After this we went to their 6 o'clock service where we were introduced to the congregation and each said a few words. Mr. Webber had asked us the day before to speak and we elected Ferdinand to give the main talk."

January 19, when the letter was written, all five Mennonites were on the train enroute to Tranque-Lauquin, one of the stations of the old Mennonite Mission. The annual Conference of that Mission was to be held there that week. On the train were also some of the old Mennonite missionaries and some of the national workers of the Mission.

The Isaacs and Miss Schrag had at the time still no further prospect of leaving for India, the letter states.

C. P. S. Men Appreciate Canned Goods

The following quotation has been taken from a letter to the M.C.C. from the business manager of the Terry, Montana, C.P.S. Camp:

"I wish there were some way in which we could express our appreciation and thanks to the many thousand mothers, daughters and fathers for the fine, good-looking and tasty canned fruits and vegetables they prepared for us and the other camps . . . I wish you could have seen the interest many of our campers took as they were helping to sort and check the canned goods. They watched the labels closely. All at once someone would say, 'Look at this quart of beans, it comes from my neighbors!!,' or someone with a smiling face would say, 'Why, here is a two-quart jar of peaches that my own mother canned. I am sure they'll taste good.' "

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Rev. H. P. Fast, Orienta, Oklahoma

FEBRUARY 16—". . . ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world:" Eph. 2:12

Here the Christian is reminded that there was a time when he had no hope. Since we could claim no promise apart from Christ, we had no hope until we accepted Christ. To be hopeless in this world is sad indeed; to be hopeless beyond the grave is something most people try to dismiss from their thinking. The Christian needs to think back when he was in just that situation. He needs to do this to renew his gratitude to Christ. He also needs this in order to reach out and try to win those who are still without hope.

FEBRUARY 17—"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten (or born) us again unto a lively (or living) hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." I Pet. 1:3

Here we are told how we emerged out of our hopelessness into a living hope. It was not that we became more hopeful by social reform, education, or trying to imitate Christ. God, in his abundant mercy, reached out in Christ and raised us from the dead. We are born unto a living hope. This hope is not an impulse or wishful thinking; it is a hope that lives within us; it is a part of the Christian. It is the new life within him. It is the Christ-life within the believer.

FEBRUARY 18—". . . Christ in you, the hope of glory." Col. 1:27

Here we have clearly stated what we began to say in yesterday's message. The indwelling Christ is our hope. One author sings, "You ask me how I know he lives, he lives within my heart." If this is true then our hope is based on an experience with Christ. Not only a one-time experience, but a continual experience of fellowship with the living Christ. When this fellowship is broken through sin, our hope becomes dimmed. On the other hand, the believer's hope becomes clearer and brighter as he yields more and more to Christ. As he communes with the indwelling Christ his desire and assurance grow to see him face to face.

FEBRUARY 19—"Rejoicing in hope; . . ." Rom. 12:12

The scriptures repeatedly call upon the Christian to rejoice. We are even told to do this alway. If he were to rejoice in circumstances or conditions in which he sometimes finds himself, this would be quite impossible. However, the Christian is asked to rejoice in the Lord and the hope he has in Christ. These are days in which we need to rejoice in hope. I am writing this on my way to Canada to conduct a funeral for a dear brother. He leaves a wife and seven children. How dark the future for that widow and her children would be if they could not rejoice in the hope of glory. If we could not bring that message to them we should have chosen to stay at home. It has been the experience of the consecrated Christian, that the darker the night through which he passes, the brighter shines the star of hope.

FEBRUARY 20—". . . be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of th hope that is in you . . ." I Pet. 3:15

Some who call themselves Christians, do not lik to be asked how it is with them or why they make certain claims. It would seem that any Christian shoul consider it an opportunity to witness. If such is no the case, maybe his claim is unfounded. Generally people have reasons for their statements. Should thi not be especially true when making eternal claims. I our hope has any foundation, we should count it pleasure to testify to that fact. Personally I woul give a two-fold answer: The evidence of scripture an personal experience. Someone was asked how h knew he was born again. His answer was, "I was ther when it happened."

FEBRUARY 21—". . .we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon th hope set before us: which hope we have as an ancho of the soul, both sure and steadfast . ." Heb. 6:18, 1

We are often tossed to and fro in the storms of lif We are endangered on every side. We need to fle for refuge. That place of refuge is Christ. All wh have fled to him have found a strong consolatio Their soul is anchored in the Rock of ages. Tha anchor is called hope. They have laid hold upon tha anchor with the hand of faith. That is the reason th believer is calm in the midst of life's storms. He sure and steadfast.

FEBRUARY 22—". . . that ye sorrow not, even others which have no hope." I Thess. 4:13

One of the darkest experiences in life is when lo ed ones are called away through death. This is common experience to men. All have this exper ence, but the reaction to it is not alike. Some sorro without hope, others with hope. We have notice the difference. It is heartbreaking to see people so row hopelessly. For the Christian it is only a ter porary separation. A father lay on his death be Calling his two sons to his side he bade them farewell. To the saved son he said, "Good-night." T the unsaved he said, "Good-bye." What a differen it makes in times of sorrow whether we, and tho who parted, believe that Christ will come again receive his own.

How Can We Tell as to the Kinds of Company a Young Person Should Keep?

By Mildred Graber

Since this question is far above me, and I feel I can't discuss that in the spirit it was asked, I'll take the liberty to wander off the subject to some extent. Just briefly, I'd like to throw out some personal opinions concerning friends and associates.

In this interdependent world barely a day passes but what we are thrown together with other people in our daily occupations. We don't necessarily choose to meet these people. They don't choose to meet us; yet, there we are. Some writer has said that we are a part of all we meet. That being true that we are to become a part of all we meet, won't we have to become more conscious and particular in what we choose to meet? I don't believe we can always specify and choose to meet the people and associates we do. Often I think we just drift together without any thought of what is taking place. In fact, I don't believe that true friendships find their beginning with one person's deciding to become a friend of another. Certainly, that decision doesn't make them friends. They just unconsciously grow together, which is quite natural, as birds of a feather flock together. So to be perfectly frank, I think we acquire friends rather than choose them. How then, can we acquire the right friends?

"Be a friend to have friends," we are told. I'd like to say, be the kind of a friend and company you'd like to have. That is, be an example. Have some definite principles and let your friends know you have them; uphold them. That doesn't mean we should expect everyone to agree with and yield to us. We must be open-minded to other's views, but don't swallow their opinions whole without chewing. We needn't be stubborn, narrow-minded, and self-righteous, but we should have ideals and know why we have them. Why do we believe as we do? Many times we lose our point because all we can give for an explanation of our principle, is "I don't know why, but that's what mother taught me." If we have definite grounds for our principles we will have more courage to uphold them. Bad company is perhaps one of the most common reasons for young people going wrong. Just bemoaning the fact doesn't bring us anywhere. If we analyze the situation, I think we would find that in many cases the reason for having bad company is the lack of principles and the courage to uphold them. May times—perhaps always—it's a slow steady downward path with the victim unconscious of the destination at first.

Of course it's easier said than done—"Stand up for what you believe." Especially, is this true in a crowd. It sometimes takes a lot of courage to say you disagree. Yet you and I know that people admire us for taking a stand for our convictions rather than drifting with the crowd. For after all we've proved that we are staunch and reliable. We have a foundation—not only a fancy roof. So often we're afraid we'll lose a friend by doing differently than the crowd. If we do lose a fair weather friend by following our principles rather than drifting with the tide, have we lost anything? Proverbs 25:19 says, "Confidence in an unfaithful man in time of trouble is like a broken tooth and a foot out of joint." A true friend won't let a difference of opinion mar the friendship.

So to answer the question—"How can we tell the kind of company to keep," I'd say—study the Perfect Example who chose you for a friend before you chose Him. Choose principles to follow His example and stand firm upon them. Don't expect to have everyone agree with you, but at the same time don't feel you must yield your principles. Your closest friend may differ in opinion, but that needn't mar the friendship. In time he may see your point by the way you've lived your principle. In short, be the kind of company you'd like to have, and disagreeable company won't bother you. They won't choose you!

NON-RESISTANCE IN PRACTICE

Some time during the early part of the seventeenth century a Mennonite minister, Peter Adrians Houttuyn, of Hoorn, was one night awakened by a disturbance made by a burglar whom he noticed in the second story of his house. Going to the foot of the stairs he called to the thief above: "Friend, come down, you will not be harmed." The thief came down and Houttuyn said to him, "Call on me tomorrow morning and I shall talk further with you." The man who had broken into his house was in great need. He was on the following day engaged as a worker in the warehouse of the one he had been attempting to rob, and served his employer faithfully for about twenty-five years.

Athletics in Our Schools

By E. P. Graber

It appears to be second nature for children and young people to play. Today we see the need of it much more clearly than our forefathers did. It was but a few generations ago when play was looked upon as an almost unmixed evil, a waste of time and useless, necessary at times to be sure, but by no means to be encouraged. A preacher's son who took part in the most innocent of games was at times asked to come into the house and sing "My God My Heart I Bring to Thee."

At present the pendulum may have swung too far to the other extreme. The wise teacher, or parent, can do much to help regulate or stabilize the matter.

Public opinion has changed considerably. We all realize that in order to develop a strong and healthy body, proper exercise, food and plenty of sleep is necessary. Students sitting at their desks or in the classroom all day long, need something to stir up their blood, develop muscles, clear the mind, and have the appetite stimulated.

Group games may also help to overcome some undesirable traits of character—such as laziness, timidity, conceit, selfishness, lack of consideration, and others. An individual may well learn honesty, cooperation, and team work while playing with a group of students.

You may say "My boy can get all the exercise he wants at home on Saturday. There are barns to be cleaned and hay to be hauled. The pitch fork is awaiting him." A boy usually is not satisfied with that kind of exercise alone, he wants more. This work may be physically beneficial but still not recreate.

It is doubtful if any kind of exercise taken under compulsion is of great benefit to a boy or girl. The mental factor is of vital importance. When a pupil does a thing he enjoys, the whole system works in harmony and every organ is benefitted.

Now the problem is, how can we best administer athletics or recreation in our schools. What would be a well balanced program for our students to follow?

In the system as it now functions in most of our high schools and colleges, I see a great number of deficiencies. I find that in most cases the girls are neglected, and only the few boys "making the team" are featured. These few are usually the physically fit. The ones who need it the least are benefited, whereas those who need it most sit on the sidelines. We realize, however, that the boy or girl that has a frail body, undeveloped chest and muscles, or perhaps some deformity or poor posture needs special training and extra supervision. Under our present setup the help they receive from our athletic departments is almost nil.

Only a small percentage of the students receive hygienic, corrective, educative, or recreative benefit from our present system. What is true of our high schools is also true of the colleges and recreation in general. There are too many spectators and too few participants.

In some schools, the only road to distinction lies through athletic contests. Pupils are disheartened if they can not "make the team," and often drop out of school on account of it. Friendly competition among schools may be wholesome, but there is also the danger of developing an enmity between schools if rivalry and jealously go unchecked.

School spirit may be developed in various other ways than inter-scholastic games. We often forget that schools have been "put on the map" because of special emphasis on music, debate, dramatics, public speaking, research, agriculture, farm mechanics, and the like. Some of these subjects will be more useful in later life than participation in inter-scholastic games. We need to exalt superiority in work on the school paper, sketching, designing, decorating, and intellectual work in general.

A program of more equal participation will lesson the danger of over-indulgence, which is as harmful in any field of activity as intemperance is in eating and drinking. It is up to our schools to strike a sensible medium in which all faculties are properly developed.

Some of our denominational schools are trying to meet the problem by finding an alternative for the unsatisfactory interscholastic games. A program of intramural games will take care of part of the problem. In playing intramural games every student is asked to take part, thus getting the benefit of actual participation. Freeman Junior College has for the past few years been experimenting with such a program.

In order to carry out an efficient recreational program it would be necessary to have a full time supervisor, this not being the case at Freeman. The normal training students are made responsible for the supervision of some of the gym classes. These students will some day be asked to supervise playground activities, and thus it affords them an excellent opportunity to get some experience in that field. The supervisors themselves are instructed by the athletic director in separate classes, teaching them the art of conducting recreational activities. Library material is also available for them on that subject. All students are required to attend these physical education classes at various periods of the day.

Outside competition is not entirely eliminated. We do have some interscholastic contests. These contests, however, have to be carried on at the expense of weaker teams, being that not as much time is available for varsity training. It is my observation that students in general favor universal participation. School spirit has not suffered but actually improved because more students get the enjoyment and benefit of actual participation in recreational activities.

E. P. Graber is principal of the academy at Freeman Junior College and professor of physical education.

A Few Hours in Paradise

By Hiram Hilty

Holguin, Cuba, June 8, 1943

I spent a couple of hours in paradise yesterday. It was an ancient dream come true, a page out of a storybook come alive, a little corner of heaven on earth.

It came about in this manner. I knew that the church in Banes had work in several rural centers and I had asked for the opportunity to see some of those places and become acquainted with the people. Up to now we have really known only city people and while we have had a keen academic awareness of rural Cuba, its people and problems—the awareness has been chiefly academic. But yesterday rural Cuba came alive. At two o'clock in the afternoon Juan Guzman, the Cuban missionary-pastor who was my host, and I mounted the two horses which the church keeps for such work. It was the first time I had been on a horse for several years and I was afraid that I would be a bit soft—which I did indeed prove to be. But really I'm an old horseman so I got something of a kick out of being in the saddle again. Our trip was to be five kilometers one way, but it must have been fifteen before we got back.

Now the south side of Banes is a paradise in itself. It has the most gorgeous palm trees, tropical shrubs and flowers, neatly trimmed hedges, immacuate streets, comfortable houses, nice people. But soon we lost the paved streets and the "civilization" of Banes. We were headed for "Mulas" and Mulas is in another world. As we cantered along on what might with considerable generosity be called a dirt road we began to pass the familiar huts made of the bark of the Royal Palm and covered with a roof of thatch. Gone were the trees and shrubs, the well-fed and well-dressed people of Banes. Instead there was dust and dirt, weeds, bare feet, naked, pot-bellied babies, rags, dirt floors with pigs and chickens sharing alike with the human inhabitants. Along the road we met an occasional peasant on his miserable pony which without his weight was already loaded far beyond ts capacity with plantains, or bananas, or pineapples, r coconuts. We also met a couple of huge carts oaded to the brim with a kind of cactus which is sed for fences—drawn by three yoke of oxen each. Going down hill they poked a stick through the wheels to lock them so the cart wouldn't get out of and. Some places we saw Monday's wash out on he "line"—that is hanging on the lower branches f trees and shrubs, on cacti, and on the ground. We aw some kids carrying water in an old five-gallon il-container—on a pole between the two of them. Others were throwing rocks into fruit trees to shake own their afternoon snack.

But soon the world began to change again. Nature egan to take the upper hand and the people were ust "natives" in a fantastic movie of the tropics. he magnificent Royal Palm was everywhere with ts long, straight concrete-like trunk reaching, it eemed, to the sky, with the shorter coconut palm, equally as beautiful, filling in the gap here and there between earth and sky. Down on terra firma was a heavy growth of tropical underbrush, interrupted here and there by a patch of plantains, bananas, oranges, or some other cultivated crop. Against such a background the thatched roof hut, miserable as it may seem to us as a dwelling place, suddenly became the beautiful and romantic thing which most northerners assume them all to be. What a magnificent world in which to live!—food crops growing the year round, no bleak winter to fear and provide for, no coal bill—just eat, sleep, enjoy your family, the magnificent scenery, and the most pleasant climate in the world.

Shortly we were in Mulas, which is nothing more than a string of huts stretching for a mile or two along "Main Street"—a scar, a row of boils on the face of Paradise. First we were to see "Don Daniel," patriarch of the town, a man of means, a highly respected citizen, and weekly host of the worshippers who gather when Guzman is in town. Daniel lives on a little knoll some distance back from Main Street in a house which would not be considered first class in Westchester County. It is a frame house with some evidence of an ancient coat of yellow paint, a rusty tin roof, a wood floor, and a pleasant veranda in front overlooking the village. The kitchen and what is apparently the dining room have dirt floors. Upon being presented to the patriarch I was confronted with the formula which I was to encounter everywhere in the village. The best I could make of it with my untrained Spanish ear was this: "Don Daniel, a friend, a colonist, and one who takes great pleasure in your acquaintance. This house is your house and this farm is your farm." Every place we went I was greeted with a similar formula and each time it left me quite speechless.

Well, after chatting a bit on the front porch Daniel suggested some refreshments and our rather half-hearted protests did no good. To be honest I was curious to see what they would serve and I think he knew it. He drew his long, sword-like knife from the sheath at his side and handed it to his wife who had been watching us silently from the other side of the door. "Here," he said, "cut us some of that fresh pineapple." She did, and it was more than delicious.

We had been talking about the farm. It seems that Don Daniel returned to this valley after having fought in the war of liberation and settled down to a life of peaceful industry. He said that while he was an old warrior he now had nothing against anybody and had no desire to fight in anybody's war. He started out with the little tract of land which is now his home and little by little bought additional land which he cleared and planted. We went out to see this fruit of a lifetime of labor. Strolling across a pasture we came upon a tree literally loaded with a little nut about the size of a peanut. I was told that it tasted like a peanut when roasted and was used for food. A step farther was a tree with huge, green watermelons hanging all over it. Some of the melons were so heavy that someone had tied them up to the branches to keep them from dropping. Of course they were not really watermelons although they fit the description better than our north American fruit. While the fruit is edible when cooked it is more often used as a water jug for workers in the field. The worker takes a melon off the tree and takes it to the field with him, cuts a hole in it, and helps himself to a drink of cool, pure water whenever he is thirsty.

Everywhere there were coconut palms—and I had never known what marvelous trees they are. They bear fruit the year round. There is a perpetual cluster of green coconuts up under the branches of the tree and day by day the ripe ones drop to the ground. Then the royal palm has a fruit too. Humans don't eat this fruit, but as the long pouch drops to the ground it bursts open and scatters about a gallon of nuts that look like coffee beans. These are good for fattening hogs and they drop right into the hog pasture. They asked me if I had ever seen coffee growing and when I confessed my ignorance they pointed to a coffee bush right under a tree—coffee has to grow in the shade. There were plenty of beans on that coffee bush, too.

No. 3 in Series on Youth Problems

LOVE AND COURTSHIP

Among the choice gifts that come to any youth is the gift of the friendship of a noble person. Such friendship is a gift. It means mutual understanding, common interests, willingness to share one's thoughts, appreciation of each others viewpoint, trust in the loyalty of the other, joy and satisfaction in being together, even willingness to forgive and forbear. A deepening friendship between a young man and a young woman may result in courtship.

There is something beautiful about the love between a man and a maid. Each regards the other as ideal, as fine and noble. Courtship should strengthen the spiritual life and should develop character. It is therefore worthy of the greatest carefulness of both the man and the maid to keep this time of growing love free from anything that would cast a shadow upon its beauty. Each will respect the other more if there is self-control and fine regard of all that is pure and good. Love does not suffer because of such self-control but is enhanced and beautified by it. Love will draw out the best and challenge each to richer, better living.

A few quotations from the booklet, Love in Courtship, published by the Herald Press, Scottdale, Pa. as one of six booklets by John R. Mumaw) follow: "Courtship is an adventure in which one seeks to find a life companion. Engage in it honorably. Courtship is primarily a preparation for marriage. There ought to be in courtship a frankness in telling each other what ideals you hold and the opinions you carry. Love needs to be honest.— Love needs common sense to be beautiful. Even when love is becoming specialized between two people, it does not necessarily need to exclude all other friends. . . . Courtship can make a distinct contribution to life happiness."

Topics for Short Talks:

1. "The Home as a Background for Worthy Friendships," II Tim. 1:5.
2. "The Church as a Place to Meet the Best Type of Friends," Col. 3:12.
3. "Asking God's Guidance in All Phases of Life," Psa. 37:5.

For Discussion:

1. What qualities of character make a good friend? See I Sam. 20: 1-43.
2. Make a list of the traits of character that would make a man an ideal life companion. See I Tim. 4:8.
3. Make a similar list for a woman. See II Peter 1:5-7.

YOUTH JOTTINGS

—Montevideo, Uruguay: Large numbers of Uruguayan youth have failed to obey the government's conscription order. The government has tightened the regulations, but the opposition to conscription has been so great that the government seems to be puzzled as to what to do.

—The young people of the First Mennonite Church, Shafter, California, are putting out an interesting, little paper called YPCE NEWS. The editor hopes to receive more copies of it.

—Delmar Wedel, a member of the First Mennonite Church, Aberdeen, Idaho, is preparing for relief work. He is attending the Pacific School of Religion at Berkeley, California. There with others he is getting training that should enable him to help ease the suffering of people in Europe or the Orient after the war is over. People from all walks of life are in the group—clergymen, former missionaries teachers, social service workers, and refugees from Nazi rule. About twenty are in the group. These have agreed to work abroad merely for maintenance.

Delmar Wedel

—The Y.P.C.E. is the name of the paper put out by the young people's C.E. group of the Aberdeen, Idaho, Mennonite Church. The editor will be happy to get all future copies.

—Suggestions for young people's prayer meeting: Have a C.O. from World War I speak to the group and then have a prayer period for the young men now serving the government.

—"The simple life is part of the Mennonite practice. We believe that since we are Christians we must follow Christ in the simple life. We are told to live 'soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world.' Instead of encouraging hard work, honesty, and temperance, movies promote frivolity, deceit, and extravagance. In fact, the movie portrays conduct patterns that run counter to practically every conduct pattern upheld by the Bible."—By a group of young people in one of our Mennonite colleges.

—Healing sick minds and bodies with the help of music is the work of the National Foundation of Musical Therapy. Heading this organization as president is Harriet Ayer Seymour, now in her seventies, who abandoned her professional musical career in 1918 to devote herself to musical healing. Hundreds of shell-shocked American troops are regaining mental poise in hospitals where music from Beethoven, Schubert, Mozart and other artists is employed. Jazz, generally speaking, has no place in Mrs. Seymour's medicine chest."

—One of the peace churches has conducted a school of co-operative living in one of its C.P.S. camps. Now many of the assignees who participated in the school have dispersed to other camps and units. One group, that is planning to live together (call themselves the co-operative community group) after the war, has gone to Trenton, North Dakota, where Missouri River bottom-land is being reclaimed and irrigated for resettlement. There the group hopes to learn building skills and help in the establishment of co-operative patterns in the new community.

—The son of Chiang Kai-shek has some good qualities

In Kanhsien, leading city of southern Kiangsi, China, a model government has been set up by Chiang Ching-kwo, oldest son of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. Young Chiang "displays none of the wealth and ostentation ormerly associated with power, but goes about the city on foot, largely unattended, seeing for himself what is oing on. He is a strict disciplinarian and tolerates no ices. The city looks clean, and actually is clean."

AN APPRECIATION AND A CORRECTION

The English and German 1944 year books lie be- re me on my desk. Each of these year books is rim full of valuable historical material. The bi- graphical sketches of such who have "laid their ar- ior down" give anyone who reads a picture of alwart and humble Christian faith. The stories anniversaries of several of our congregations pro- des food for thought and praise to anyone interested the onward march of the church. The statistical ports in the English year book are very helpful. raise and credit go to the hard-working editors.

CORRECTION

The picture of the interior of the Mennonite Bible ission on the Year Book cover makes a deep im- ession because of its simplicity, beauty, and dignity. If every reader will change the 1 in the address that it will read 4215 South Rockwell Street, the dress of the pastor, Rev. John T. Neufeld, will be rrect.

After the material had been sent in to the editors, e new Girls' Home in Winnipeg was purchased. both year books the address should therefore read: Miss Lena Epp, Matron, 605 Bannatyne Avenue. ote two "n's")

The present address of Rev. and Mrs. Arnold A. st is 15 Laws Street, Toronto, Ontario.

Recently on a letter regarding home mission work, e letter was omitted in the name of the place ad- essed. That letter was lost for almost four months, d important decisions were thus delayed.

STEINBACH CHURCH MAKES PROGRESS

Steinbach, Manitoba
December 10, 1943

ar Brother David Toews:

'our letter, dated November 24, was duly re- 'ed. On December 5, the letter was read to the gregation, and after the reading, in a short busi- s meeting, it was decided to reduce our obligation he Conference by $100.00.

'e are grateful to God that our small group has onstrated their trust in the Lord and devotion esus Christ by making the needed efforts to give amount in offerings. The congregation is growing, for which we praise the Lord, and there is a definite consciousness that the entire obligation is to be repaid as quickly as possible. We have grown in numbers, but more than that we have also increased in grace and spiritual power. There is a wholehearted participation in the different phases of church work; such as choir work, prayer and Bible study hours, Christian Endeavor societies, and women's missionary societies. Recently some instruction has been given in the German language.

With the repayment of the amount named above, we wish to express our sincere thanks and appreciation to the Home Mission Board and all who contributed to this fund. Grace and peace be unto you from Him, that is and was and is to be into all eternity.

P. J. Reimer, Leader of the Steinbach Mennonite Church (Translated from German by A. J. Neuenschwander)

THE CHURCH

"According to New Testament teaching, precept, and example, a Christian church is not a promiscuous multitude, comprising the entire population of a given state or country, without regard to their life and personal attitude. The Church, in the Scriptural sense, consists of those who personally believe in and surrender themselves to Christ, taking upon themselves voluntarily the obligations of the Christian profession."—John Horsch

MUSICAL PROGRAM

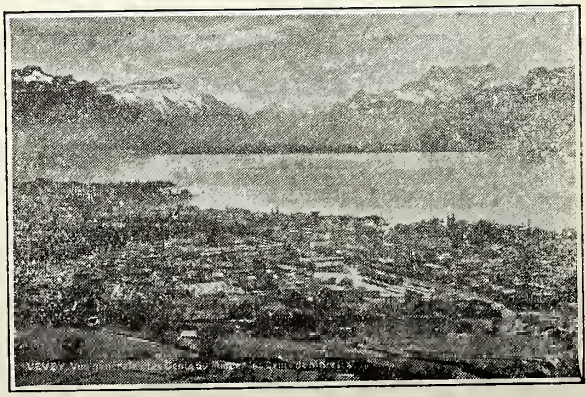
The Mennonite Bible Academy invites the public to a program, consisting largely of musical numbers, to be given in the Bethel College Chapel at eight o'clock on Sunday night, February 27. Mr. Gerber from the College, who is our director, has been practicing faithfully with the students, and has a number of selections ready for presentation.

JOTTINGS

—Rev. William Stauffer, field worker of the Home Mission Board, is to visit the Bethesda Mennonite Church, Henderson, Nebraska, on February 19 and 20 and to show slides of C.P.S. camps and hospital units and to discuss the past, present, and future of Mennonites. Rev. A. W. Friesen is scheduled to visit the C.P.S. camps and side camps in Colorado and the Hill City, South Dakota, C.P.S. camp in the latter part of February.

—The First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California, has regular quarterly offerings for the Boards of Publication and Education. A recent offering for these two boards totalled $98.75. Dr. J. H. Langenwalter began a week of services on February 6. On that day the pastor, Rev. P. K. Regier brought messages to the men of the Three Rivers C.P.S. Camps.

—First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: Some of the main motions passed at the annual business meeting are: “That we continue with both the summer Bible schools and the Mennonite Bible Academy as heretofore,” “That the Trustees arrange for a series of meetings at which the scriptural basis of our peace convictions be studied,” “That a reserve fund be raised for members of our church who have been, are now, and will be serving as draftees in Civilian Public Service, to be given them upon their release from such service at the rate of $25 per month to be spent in service beginning January 1, 1944, plus $10 per month for service prior to January 1, 1944,” “That the cost of supplying a church paper for each home be taken from the general Sunday School treasury,” “In view of the fact that the General Conference is making a study of needs of young men who will be returning from C.P.S. camps to civilian life, and whereas definite recommendations may be made at the General Conference this coming summer, we agree that the plan adopted under (previous motion about men in C.P.S.) be only for the coming year,” “That we assess male members $10, plus 11 cents per acre and continue the free-will offerings.” Rev. Walter Dyck, pastor of this church, is conducting Sunday morning services for the inmates of the Nebraska Institution for Feebleminded (large institution near Beatrice) during February.



Vevey, Switzerland, the birthplace of Dr. Rodolphe Petter

—Inman Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas: The Inman grade school faculty rendered a splendid program on January 30 on the theme “The Abundant Life.” After the service the teachers met at the pastor's home for a social hour. The Inman Y.P.C.E. is sponsoring a series of programs on the beginning and development of the early church. Various speakers that are invited present the characteristics of different denominations. This is fostered with the idea of developing mutual understanding and brotherly love. The concluding program will be given on February 20, when Brother R. Weinbrenner will speak on the “History and Growth of the Mennonite Church.” Orlando Goering delivered an inspirational message on November 28 in the absence of the Rev. J. E. Kaufman, who was the guest speaker at the Bethel Deaconess Hospital. —Corr.

—Butterfield Mennonite Church, Butterfield, Minn.: Brother B. J. Nickel was installed as our pastor on January 23. Rev. August Ewert, Rev. D. P. Eitzen of the Bergfeld Church, and Rev. Cornelius Wall were in charge of the very solemn and heart-rending service. Rev. Daniel Hubn, who was almost ninety, passed away on January 25. We are having a very unusual winter. We have no snow, and it never gets very cold. —Church Secretary —Bethesda Mennonite Church, Henderson: The meetings held by Brother Lester Hostetler were interesting and well attended. Each evening he devoted some time to talking about some of the hymns in the Mennonite Hymnary. Our C.E. service committee sees to it that each man in the service from our church gets a letter once a month from some C.E. member. Names and addresses are written on slips of paper folded, and put into hats. As the group leaves the church building each one draws a name. To this individual he must then write. The plan works well. Fifty-two of our men are in service.

—Wilbur Friesen, Corr

—Deep Run (Pa.) Mennonite Church: The pastor is conducting a training course for Sunday School teachers. Topics to be discussed include: “The Aim of Teaching,” “Method in Teaching,” “Leading a Discussion,” “Holding the Interest,” and “The Teacher as an Evangelist.”

—While we think of Sunday School—Have you read the article on Sunday Schools in the Christian Century o February 9?

—Changes of address should be sent to Mennonite Publication Office, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

—Plans are being made to hold the California Convention in Shafter in April. A large delegation is not expected.

—Springfield (Pa.) Mennonite Church: Nestled amon the hills of Bucks County is the little old Mennonit meetinghouse, which has stood as a landmark for th past one hundred twenty years. An outstanding even the first wedding ever held in this ancient house c worship, took place on February 5 when two of th active, young members, Le Roy Meyer and Betty Krine were united in marriage. The ceremony, which was performed by the young pastor, Rev. Ward W. Shelly, wa the second in his ministry. This ancient meetinghous is unique as the only Mennonite church in the countr and perhaps in the world, where two branches of th church use the same building on alternate Sundays. Th community surrounding the church was settled more tha two hundred years ago by Mennonites with the names Moyer, Landis, Schimmel, and Schleiffer. However, th many family farms surrounding it have now passed int other hands, and the two congregations are now comparatively small. However, the congregation belongin to the Eastern District Conference is very active under the leadership of Rev. Shelly, and the young folks are adding much to the church music with their chorus work. —Ely R. Fretz

—The Western District Loan Library, located in the Science Hall on the Bethel Campus, was visited one recent afternoon by the Library Committee of the Eden Mennonite Church. The members, Orlando Goering, Richard Schrag, and Rev. Walter Gering, selected a goodly number of books for use in their church.

—Bulletin, Fairfield, (Pa.) Mennonite Church: "On the table by the door: Copies of the 1944 General Conference Year Book. Each family should have one. It will help you to become more familiar with the leaders, institutions, work, and churches of the conference to which we belong." "The native worker whom our church is supporting in India is an agricultural and industrial worker. Under Sampson Walters' direction the orange grove yielded one of the best crops ever reaped. The grain was also real good."

—Homer Leisy Gets Unanimous Call: The members of the Grace Mennonite Church, Dallas, Oregon, met Sunday and extended a call to their pastor, Homer Leisy, to continue for another five years. The vote was unanimous.

It was decided to allow him four Sundays off duty per year in order that he may do evangelistic work in answer to the many calls that come for this service. Fourteen such calls have already been received from all over the United States for this year. Mr. Leisy is president of the Dallas Ministerial Association, a member of the executive committee of the board of directors of the Deaconess Hospital, Salem, and is on the evangelization committee of the Pacific District Conference.

The Leisys came to Dallas in June, 1939. The church has been completed since then and was dedicated October 15, 1939. It has grown in membership from 52 members to 245 at present and really needs more room. It is truly a "friendly, growing church" as their motto indicates.

Although still a young man Mr. Leisy is the oldest minister in Dallas, in years of service locally.

—Harry Albrecht of Pretty Prairie, Kansas, brought the evening message to the First Mennonite Church, Hutchinson, Kansas, not so long ago. Harry is a brother of Erwin Albrecht, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Chicago. He has also been active in the young people's work of the Pacific District where he formerly lived.

—The First Mennonite Church, Newton, Kansas, is enjoying some valuable messages on Mennonite history at some of its Sunday evening services. Dr. Cornelius Krahn is the speaker.

—Rev. Walter Gering after a visit to the C.P.S. units in Michigan State Hospitals says, "It is impossible really to appreciate the problems and hardships which those working in these and similar institutions face without a personal visit. A trip through the various wards was made at both institutions and an evening was spent in visiting with the group at Kalamazoo and Ypsilanti. The work is not easy and often brings with it moments of discouragement. But it is work which brings with it also rewards and is appreciated by those in charge of the work. Repeatedly the patients themselves stated in glowing terms their appreciation of the work which the boys are doing in the institution. We have reason to feel grateful for the testimony these young people are making. They are receiving a training and a storehouse of experiences which shall be cherished for many years."

—Bulletin, Second Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: Elbert Koontz, ministerial student from Bonebrake Theological Seminary, is to bring the message on February 2. (Brother Koontz is a former student of Bethel College.)

—Mistake in Year Book. The First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, contributed $2031.00 for C.P.S. in 1943 and not $231.00.

—The heading for Donovan Smucker's recent article should have been "Twentieth Century Godlessness" and not "Twentieth Century Godliness."

—Improvements on properties of Berne Church: A complete city-water system is to be installed in the meetinghouse and parsonage. A new sidewalk is to be built in front of the parsonage, and one is also to be constructed on the west side of the church property. The wide driveway between the meetinghouse and the parsonage and the alley on the side of the meetinghouse is to be surfaced with blacktop. Extensive plantings of selected evergreens will be made. Many smaller improvements will also be made.

—Rev. Solomon Mouttet recently brought the Sunday morning message for the First Mennonite Church, Berne. He also spoke at a program of the Women's Missionary Society.

—Bulletin, Buhler, Kansas, Mennonite Church: This church has elected a committee to lead in giving help to the dependents of C.O.'s in their midst. The Peace Committee has purchased copies of the booklet, Must Christians Fight.

—Dr. J. E. Hartzler was the guest speaker at the brotherhood meeting and the sixteenth anniversary of the Ladies' Aid on January 28.

First Church, Allentown—Rev. Erwin Wedel of Jasper, Alabama, and Miss Elizabeth Foth of New York, gave illustrated lectures of the work of their respective fields on Wednesday evening, January 26. Through the cooperation of Dr. Hoffman of the Allentown State Hospital and Mr. Miller, one of the boys in the C. O. unit at the institution, arrangements have been made for the pastor, Rev. Howard G. Nyce, to visit and conduct services for the boys the third Thursday evening of each month. The church contributed $259.03 to Jewish mission work during the year through gifts of interested members, the Sunday School, and the prayer meeting group.

—A C.O. Clause has been added to the Austin-Wadsworth bill, which provides for the drafting of civilians for war work. The clause provides that those who have religious convictions against war work will not have to participate in such work.

EASTERN DISTRICT CONFERENCE NOTES

Flatland Church—Rev. and Mrs. Erwin R. Wedel from Jasper, Alabama, workers among the negroes, and Miss Elizabeth Foth, mission worker in the slum district in New York, were with us on Jan. 24. Slides were shown of work done in both places. The meeting was enjoyed by all who attended.—Eleanore Frei, Corr.

Deep Run—At the meeting of the church council a motion was passed to change the fiscal year of the congregation to end November 1, instead of December 31. The Church has an organ fund and while pledges amount to $125.00, there is a balance in the treasury of $380.00. (We are glad to note that this church is planning to have an organ. It adds so much to the devotional program of the Church. N.) The pastor, the Rev. Russell L. Mast, will start a course for Sunday School Teachers.

First, Philadelphia—Rev. J. J. Plenert, delivered the address at the meeting of the Adult Federated Organized Bible Classes held in Calvary Evangelical Church, January 17.

Fairfield—The budget for last year amounted to $6845.21 which included $4,500.00 for a parsonage. Balance in the treasury amounted to $146.26. The budget for 1944 is set at $3,260. Brother Geigley, Pastor Emeritus, and the pastor, the Rev. George S. Stoneback, visited the clothing depot at Ephrata and the Mennonite Central Committee office in Akron, on their return trip from the Third Quarterly Conference.

Second Church, Philadelphia—The Second Quarterly Conference was well attended on January 24. In the afternoon, the Rev. Harold D. Burkholder delivered a very interesting paper on "The Philippian Epistle," and in the evening the Rev. George S. Stoneback gave an illustrated lecture on "Church Architecture."

Upper Milford, Zionsville—At the annual Sunday School business meeting, it was decided to contribute $50.00 to the Bluffton College Debt Liquidation Fund and to contribute $12.50 quarterly with the quarterly contributions of the Church to the College for current expenses. The Treasurer of the Berean Bible Class reported that $250 was contributed to the Mennonite Central Committee during the year. The School also voted to give $25 for India Famine Relief. The Church Treasurer recently sent $200 to the Eastern District Conference Treasurer. $75 had been sent previously. This makes our total $275. or $38.75 more than our quota.

Grace, Lansdale—In a recent church bulletin, attention was called to the importance of a reverent and devotional spirit between Sunday School and church services. Probably all churches need this reminder. N.)

This is College Hall at Bluffton College. A. C. Ramseyer, member of the Board of Trustees, has given $8,000 for the remodelling of it. This gift came shortly before Christmas. It was given with the stipulation that an equal amount be raised from other sources for other school purposes. This gift from Mr. Ramseyer, who is a prominent potato farmer from Smithville, Ohio, is to be used for putting a new roof on the building, reconstructing and redecorating the art rooms on the third floor, the building of a concrete vault from the ground up through the first floor for safe storage of valuable records, and for moving the present offices downstairs. Built in 1900, College Hall has not undergone any extensive improvements since that time. In it are classrooms, the chapel, and offices. Previous to the construction of Musselman Library, it also held the library. Out to raise $50,000 improvement fund, the school received a second large gift when Mrs. C. H. Musselman of Biglerville, Pennsylvania, contributed $5,000. She hopes to add $3,000 to this in the next year.

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ."

VOLUME LIX NORTH NEWTON, KANSAS, FEBRUARY 22, 1944 NUMBER 8

The Next Session of General Conference

Since inquiries are being made, it may be stated that the conference officers and the local committee of inviting churches near Newton, Kansas, have agreed, God willing, that the triennial conference session begin on the morning of Thursday, August 17, 1944, preceded by welcoming meeting on the evening of August 16.

The meetings likely will be held in the Memorial Hall at Bethel College, North Newton.

The General Committee chosen by members of inviting churches is: Chairman Rev. Lester Hostetler, North Newton, Kansas;

Secretary - Rev. D. C. Wedel, Halstead, Kansas;

Treasurer - Rev. J. F. Moyer, North Newton, Kansas;

A number of subsidiary committees have been named, whose names will be published later.

Suggestions as to matters for consideration are being received. They indicate a deep interest in the welfare of the Church. The members of the Business Committee are:

Chairman - Prof. J. S. Schultz, Bluffton, Ohio;

Secretary - Rev. Walter Gering, Moundridge, Kansas.

Member - Rev. J. J. Thiessen, 443-3rd Ave. N. Saskatoon, Saskatchewan.

To prospective delegates and visitors one word: The attitude of heart and mind which we bring to the session will be the measure, in God's economy, of the blessing we shall be able to receive. Therefore let us—one and all who love the Church—be oft in prayer to God for the forgiveness of our sins and divine enlightenment, and that the Spirit of Christ, the Head of the Church and the Prince of Peace, may be our ever present Guide and be able to bless all we think or do for the cause for which He gave His life.

Loan Library Service

The librarian of the Western District Conference Loan Library reported that during the last quarter of 1943, the Western District Conference Loan Library checked out 223 books. Fifty-one books were checked out by two Civilian Public Service Camps, 108 books by seven churches, and 63 books by 23 individuals.

C. P. S. Rehabilitation

Winfield Fretz, who has been appointed by M.C.C. to study in the field of colonization and rehabilitation, has completed his study of Mennonite migration and colonization. This study has been prepared in the form of a small booklet and will be available for distribution in the near future.

At the present time, Brother Fretz is in the second stage of his study in which he is endeavoring to determine the number of men in M.C.C., C.P.S. camps who need and desire financial and vocational assistance from their home churches, conferences, or other interested groups, upon their release from camp. A preliminary questionnaire was sent to all the camps, and at the present time results are being tabulated for further study and planning.

H. B. Schmidt To Be Ordained

The Lord willing, our evangelist, Brother H. B. Schmidt, will be ordained to the full ministry on Sunday forenoon, February 27, in the Tabor church. Since I am serving our church not on full time (a large part of my time belonging to the Mission Board) we are very thankful for the willingness of this brother to give to the church a large part of his time, besides his services as deacon and visiting churches as he is invited. Since he will serve us only part time as minister, he continues to serve as deacon until the church decides otherwise.

We solicit herewith the intercessory prayer of those who read this invitation, that the Lord may bless the ordination service to all concerned.

P. H. Richert, Pastor

A Chinese preacher, speaking of robbing God, used this illustration: "It came to pass that a man went to market with a string of seven coins. Seeing a beggar that asked for alms, he gave the poor man six coins and kept one for himself. The beggar, instead of being thankful, followed the good man and stole the seventh coin also. What an abominable wretch! Yes, and would you, to whom God has given six days, steal the seventh also?"—Christian Readers Digest.

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

THE COUNTRY TOWN

To a great many people the country town is a drab and dreary place in which to live. To such people it is at best a stepping stone or a stopping place on the way from the farm to the larger city. To spend one's life in a small town is to many people sheer tragedy; it is looked upon as inability to escape from monotony, from small people, small talk, and small things. It is all to common an experience to hear city desk-sitters jokingly comment about the small "berg" or "hick" town from which they came condescendingly imply that it would be ridiculous ever to return except for periodic visits.

What Is the Country Town?

The country town is the service center of the community. Its citizens are concerned chiefly with serving the whole community, town and country alike. The town is the place to which come the farmers from outlying areas to buy their groceries, service their cars, grind their grain, market their produce, and in general meet their weekly needs. The town merchant, mechanic, electrician, blacksmith, miller, shoemaker and all the rest of the business and service people in a country town are doing specialized services that once were done by the farmer at home. The tradesman and service men of the towns represent the division of labor in modern society. The farmer needs the townsman and the townsman needs the farmer. Under present conditions neither one can get along well without the other.

But the country town is more than a service center. It is more than a place to do business. It is a place to meet people. It provides an opportunity to exchange ideas, to catch up on the latest news, and in turn distribute it. One needs only to go to any country town on a Saturday evening to discover the function of a country town. And to be made aware of the interdependence of town and country one needs only imagine what would happen if all farmers were suddenly prevented or forbidden to come to town for six months or a year.

The Town Church

Not the least important of all country town institutions is the local church. Here too people congregate, not merely to buy and sell or to visit but for something vastly more important. Here gather the most useful and active of the people from town and country alike, reverently, purposefully, eagerly to fellowship with one another in the presence of God, to search for His truth, His beauty and His holiness that they may be strengthened to discharge their tasks in the days ahead. The extent to which they find what they came for reflects on the whole community. Towns like persons reflect the source of their power, the origin of their ideals, the basis on which day by day decisions are made. Merchants, mechanics, and farmers who sit shoulder to shoulder seeking God on Sunday will want to cleanse, purify, and beautify their towns as well as their own lives on Monday. Whether country towns are drab and ugly places from which to flee or clean, active and attractive places in which to spend one's whole life can in part be determined by the outlook, the message, and programs of the local church.

Thy Will Be Done

The attitude of "Thy will be done" should shape all of our prayers. Jesus emphasized these words near the beginning of the prayer that He taught His disciples. He spoke them in the agony of Gethsemane. They represent the attitude that God wants us to have at all times.

A man of deep Christian experience says that "prayer is fundamentally and essentially self-surrender." It is much more essential that God tell us rather than that we tell God. It is not for us to assert ourselves; we must let God assert Himself in our lives if we would live abundantly in fellowship with Him. An attitude of "My will be done" leads to disaster. When we utter with our whole being the prayer "Thy will be done" we can expect definite guidance for a holy life and the deep joy that such a life brings.—rw.

Winning the Peace

Recently I heard a speaker express these thoughts: We won the first World War, but we all but lost it through the peace treaty that followed it. That war, however, was not entirely lost because we have learned from it and the peace treaty that followed it, that no war is won until the peace is won. Catholics, Protestants, and Jews must see to it that the peace is won after this war or the war will be lost regardless of the thoroughness of any military conquest. So ran his thoughts.

Maybe mankind has learned a valuable lesson about making a fairly just peace. But it may take another world war for these same people to learn that no lasting peace can be established by the method of war. To do evil that good may come from it can hardly be God's way. Certainly, a just peace is less likely to engender a new war than an unjust one, and as such should have our acclaim. But no peace treaty after any war can be made as just and loving as it should be because of the simple fact that hating and killing has preceded it rather than loving and serving.—rw.

Youth Uninformed

One of our pastors, who has traveled widely through our conference churches reports an appalling lack of information about conference activities on the part of most of our young people.

What can the pastor do to get his young people interested in conference work? Here is one thing that he can do. He can at least once a year during his Sunday announcements urge his young people to read the young people's section and other parts of The Mennonite. Our church papers are one of the best means for getting our young people interested in our conference activities.—rw.

"PRAYER CHANGES THINGS"

These three words as wall mottoes are seen in hundreds of homes. In my travels in America I have seen this motto oftener than any other one. Yet one sometimes wonders how many people can point to specific experiences or observations where this motto has been found true.

I wish to share one observation with our readers. Brother Joseph (our deacon) and I came to a certain village to which one young Christian couple had moved some weeks previously. We came to the home of the young woman. The husband was away in another village, and the wife had just gone to the water pond for water. The parents of the young woman were in the house. We knew the parents were not Christians. So we asked them if there were any Christians in the village. They said they did not know of any. Meanwhile a noisy crowd gathered, and the young wife came too. We asked her whether she was not a Christian. She tried to evade us by not giving a direct answer. It was clear that this young Christian couple had not let their light shine much, if they had any light. The noise all around increased. I asked the woman whether she and her husband had been baptized. Then she answered quietly, "yes." I asked her further whether they loved our Lord ad Savior. Again she very quietly said, "yes." Then I asked her further if she wished us to pray with and for them. Again a quiet affirmative answer.

But the hubbub was so great, I could not get inspiration to pray. So I turned to Joseph and said, "I can't pray in this disorder, can you?" He said he would try. So he started to pray. As he prayed the motley crowd began to quiet down. It got quieter and quieter, and when he was through it seemed as though we were in a prayer meeting in one of our orderly churches. And further, as soon as our brother had said "Amen" two men stepped out of the crowd and said, "We too want to be Christians." Yes, prayer changed things. —John Thiessen

ACADEMY CHARGES NO TUITION

In connection with the Mennonite Bible Academy we are conscious of the leading of the Lord. Many friends have shown their interest by prayer and financial support. For all this we are very grateful. Our budget for the year is $4500. About three-fourths of this must come from gifts since no tuition is charged. At present we are still more than half way from the goal. If our people believe in the academy are we correct in the assumption that then they will also support it? Should any of the readers be led to contribute toward the support of the school, you may send your contributions either to the Mennonite Bible Academy, North Newton, or to the Business Office, Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas, which handles the financial part of the school.

KEEPING VIGIL (ALL NIGHT SINGING)

One of our Christian brethren and I had cycled all day long in order to attend a Christmas program in one of our distant churches. The program was very well presented. Not only did the school children take part, but many adults of the church also contributed. It was a very joyful occasion.

After the program a few pieces of candy were given to the children. The way their faces beamed, I concluded that this filled the cup of joy and that it was now the proper time to wish each other further, "Big Day Greeting" (Merry Christmas) and go to sleep. But one of the leading church members came to me and said, "Now the real celebration is to start." I was somewhat startled and said, "Well, didn't we have a very fine blessed program just now?" "Oh yes," I was told, "but that was only the introduction. Now we are going to sing our Lord's praise all night."

I was very tired and told the brethren that I did wish them well and encouraged them to sing our Lord's praises; but if they would excuse me then I would go to sleep. Oriental politeness was of course ready at once to comply with my desire. My cot was put in a nearby cow stable, and I soon was sound asleep. Yet I woke up several times when the praises in Church got to a rather high pitch.

At dawn I got up. The little church was still full of brothers and sisters and boys and girls. Their throats were so hoarse and tired that there was no melody in the singing anymore. But their faces beamed for joy. They kept it up until sunrise. Then they melted away, one by one, seeking a little nook or corner for sleep. The shepherds of old went by night to see baby Jesus. Our brethren sang His praises without interruption all night long. Thus does religious joy express itself in the Orient.

IN MEMORIAM

KATHARINA DALKE PENNER, daughter of Cornelius and Anna Duerksen Dalke, was born August 11, 1864, in Steinfeld, South Russia, and died at Newton, Kansas, January 16, 1944. When ten years old she came to America with her parents. At eighteen she was baptized by Elder Jacob Buller of the Alexanderwohl Church. She was united in marriage to H. D. Penner in 1884. To this union were born fourteen children, eleven of whom are living. One son Ernest passed away at the age of forty-two. "Being the mother of many children, the wife of a teacher and minister of the gospel, her duties were many, but she performed them with exactness, faithfulness, and unselfishness." Ten years ago she experienced the loss of her devoted husband. She is survived by the following children: Mrs. E. R. Riesen, Tucson, Ariz.; Sister Anna Gertrude Penner, Newton, Kan.; D. D. Penner, Trenton, Neb.; Mrs. J. J. R. Claassen, Beatrice, Neb.; Mrs. H. J. Nickel, Wichita, Kan.; A. H. Penner, Hillsboro, Kan.; Mrs. Walter E. Niles, Sedgwick, Kan.; Mrs. J. K. Dirks, Wichita, Kan.; W. H. Penner, Arkansas City, Kan.; Mrs. E. W. Haury, Tucson, Ariz., and Mrs. A. L. Miller, Partridge, Kan. She also leaves one sister, Mrs. Helena Balzer, Dallas, Ore., and one brother, F. C. Dalke, Fairview, Okla.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Rev. H. P. Fast, Orienta, Oklahoma

FEBRUARY 25 "And if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again. John 14:3a.

He did go. He will come again. No other truth is clearer stated in Scripture. It is difficult to understand how anyone can claim to believe the Scriptures and at the same time doubt, or even deny, the second coming of Christ. One verse out of every twenty-five verses of the New Testament speaks of Christ's return. The Bible has more to say about his second coming than about his first coming in the flesh. All who take the Bible at face value hold this truth precious. It is the blessed hope of the believer.

FEBRUARY 26—". . . this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1:11b. Angels announced his first coming. Angels predict his second coming. The statement here is very clear and emphatic. First, it will be "this same Jesus." Secondly, it is to be "in like manner." We need not speculate. It will be a personal, bodily return. "We shall see him as he is," and then, "We shall be like him." What a prospect! The bridegroom is not going to send for his bride; he is coming to get her. He blessed his own as he went. For his own he is coming with blessing. He took the scars of the cross with him. He will come with those same scars, and we shall know him by those same nail prints by which we were redeemed.

FEBRUARY 27—"But ye brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." I Thess. 5:4.

For the unbelieving world Christ's coming will be as a thief, but not for the Christian. No one knows the day of his return, as Christ clearly stated, but the believer expects him. We believe in the imminent coming of Christ. That is, he may come at any time. It would be difficult to give any scriptural reason why Christ could not come today. Supposing he did, would he find us ready and occupying?

FEBRUARY 28—". . . Tell us, . . what shall be the sign of thy coming . . ." Matt. 24:3.

The disciples were greatly interested in their Master's return. If they could not know the day and hour, could they have some signs? Christ gave them such signs. These should interest us. These are, wars, earthquakes, famines, and pestilences. Spiritually there will be false teachings and apostacy. Others could be mentioned, but these are some of the outstanding signs given by Christ. The world is trembling in anticipation. The believer is rejoicing that his redemption is drawing nigh.

FEBRUARY 29—"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven . . . and the dead in Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." I Thess. 4:16, 17.

As we follow the bier of our loved ones, what is to comfort the believer? The fact that it is but a temporary separation. (Therefore the death of believers is called sleep.) If they were saved and we are likewise, then we shall meet when Christ comes. That is our hope. We sorrow, but not as others which have no hope. Death has lost its sting. The grave has lost its victory. Christ will claim his own when he comes.

MARCH 1—"Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing." Matt. 24:46.

In our meditations on Christ's return thus far we have stated the fact, manner, time, signs, and purpose of his coming. In view of the fact that our Lord is returning what should we (his servants) do? First, we are told to be ready. This we can only be if we have experienced the cleansing power of the blood. Secondly, we are to occupy. That is, we are to win others for Christ. Thirdly, we are to watch and wait. As we go about our common duties of life we do so being mindful that he may appear at any moment. Yes, where we are and what we do is guided by the thought that our lord may come and find us at the right place doing the right thing.

MARCH 2—"And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God . . ." Rom. 8:28

Life is like a jig-saw puzzle. One experience taken by itself is often hard to understand. Every piece in a jig-saw puzzle is needed to complete the picture. All the pieces work together. Just so, our text says, all things work together for good. Once the last experience is added, and we know as we are known, then we shall see that each one was needed. This, however, is true only of those who love God. They let God have his way with them. Self-chosen paths do not work for our good. We know that all things work together for our good because God says so. It is a matter of faith.

MILK STATION STARTED IN PUERTO RICO

"On January 13, the milk station began functioning. 114 children made their appearance on the initial day. The enrollment has since increased, reaching a high of 161. The average attendance is approximately 140.

"The children are given as much milk as they wish to drink. Little Francisco Cintron holds the record with six glasses; his ambition is to drink 'lots of milk so I can go to the States some day.' On 'special' days the children receive chocolate milk. As soon as some essential equipment can be secured, the milk diet will be supplemented with prunes, eggs, sausages, corn mush, and oatmeal. As reported previously, the food is furnished by the Child Feeding Program of the OCD, with Mrs. Grace Tugwell heading it."

LOIS GUNDEN WRITES FROM BADEN BADEN

The following excerpts are taken from a letter, dated December 4, received from Lois Gunden who has been interned at Baden Baden, Germany since the occupation of France:

"Our mixed quartet gave a very successful program on Saturday evening after Thanksgiving. It consisted of songs from a variety of countries, of which the American negro spirituals were the climaxing group. . .

"We had hoped a bit earlier that we might have left here before Christmas. Things would have to move rapidly for that to happen, so we are busy making all sorts of plans for programs and entertainments for young and old during the holiday season. . . ."

Gerald Stucky Finds Paraquay Hot

Puerto Casada, Paraquay,
January 30, 1944

Before coming on this trip I used to wonder just where in Paraquay the Mennonites are to be found. Now that I am in Paraquay—I find that they are a very long way from the civilization of Asuncion. Puerto Casada is about two days up the river from Asuncion. In order to reach the Mennonites in the Chaco one must still take a day's ride on a train (to K145) and then twenty hours by horse drawn cart. It is really a long trip into the interior. Out of the three weeks that we shall be here in Paraquay, we will spend about five days with the colonists—and the rest will be needed to come and go.

Puerto Casada is at present a very hot place—in fact, the heat is almost impossible. It is so hot that the thought of freezing in a snow storm takes on aspects of pleasantness. In about three more days we will arrive in the heart of the Chaco. The Chaco, we are told, will be even hotter, and the trip to it very disagreeable. When one is there he is said to be near the "jumping off place" of the world. I am anxious to see the Mennonites who live there—for they must be people of real calibre to not only exist but progress in climate like this.

We left Asuncion on Tuesday evening and arrived by boat at Rosario about fourteen hours later. Rosario isn't very much to write home about—a place n which I think it would take a lot of grace to live. My most pleasant memory of the place is the fact hat I went swimming in the river there at the conclusion of a very hot day. It is said to be very dangerous to swim in the river because of a certain water creature which has a tendency to fasten itself on swimmers. However, others went swimming, and I oo found the swim to be most refreshing. The river is apparently a great boon to the countryside, or in Concepcion for example, it is used not only for swimming, but also for the daily bath, for bathing he horses, for washing cars, for the sewer, and for drinking water.

There is a Mennonite colony about fifty kilomeers from Rosario. In the States fifty kilometers s about thirty-two miles—and was a matter of thirty o forty-five minutes (before the national speed aw!) Here it is a matter of ten hours of travel—f the conditions are favorable. We traveled to Friesland, the Mennonite colony, by horse and buggy. Now I have a very high respect for this kind of travel—for I remember as a child how our neighbor used o do us a great favor by taking us to the country in a very fine horse-drawn carriage. But after eight hours riding on a springless cart, drawn over an ex-cow path of a road, through dust and heat—one's respect for that type of travel becomes very great indeed. The concluding feeling after having completed such a trip is very much like I suppose one feels after having been very thoroughly spanked. Only to have been spanked like that, one must have been very bad indeed—which we weren't.

The land between Rosario and Friesland is a combination of wilderness, jungle, and prairie. The climate being tropical, oranges, grapefruit, bananas, etc. grow willingly. The territory up to Friesland is composed of a sandy soil—and as a whole the undeveloped condition makes it all very unattractive. Friesland, however, is an example of what can be done if people have ingenuity and a willingness to work. The Mennonite colonists apparently have both—for they have made the desert to blossom. Besides having orchards of tropical fruit, they grow cotton, corn, etc. Most of these people are very poor because they lost practically all material possessions in the flight from Siberia—yet in spite of this poverty they have not succumbed to the low living standards of their neighbors. We had a meeting with them on Thursday night. It was wonderful to see a whole large colony turn out in a response to a call to worship. As Mr. Voth addressed them, I had the opportunity to study their faces. How intently they all listened, and how sincere was the expression on their faces. Their lives carried the marks of suffering. It was thrilling therefore to hear their testimony in song as they sang praises to God in the midst of the wilderness of Paraguay. Certainly the blessing of God is upon them.

From Paraquay we go to Brazil, then to Puerto Rico. We are grateful for your continual prayers.

—Gerald Stucky

YOUTH JOTTINGS

—Ashamed to be a Mennonite? "... there are far too many young people who belong to the Mennonite Church and feel like apologizing for it. They have not thought through reasons for our faith, but have listened to the world's arguments against it. My dear fellow believers, until a vital experience and a serious study of God's Word and of the facts in life about us turn us from such an attitude to a feeling that the present attitude of our beloved Church is the most logical and practical position that we could hold, we shall get but little satisfaction from our fellowship and do the Church little good." —Paul Erb in What It Means To Be a Mennonite.

—Delvin Kirchhofer, relief worker for the M.C.C., is now aiding in reassembling Greek families which were separated in the evacuation from the Balkans. His address is: American Consulate, in care of Mr. Harry Hill, Cairo, Egypt.

—Barbara Zuercher, a member of the Salem Mennonite Church, Dalton, Ohio, is attending the School of Religious Education, at Hartford Theological Seminary, 55 Elizabeth Street, Hartford, Connecticut.

Verney Unruh

—Verney Unruh, member of the Bethlehem Mennonite Church, Bloomfield, Montana, is a ministerial student at Bethel College. Verney has in the past two years served various churches under the auspices of the Home Mission Committee of the Western District and Bethel College. He also is active as a member of the deputation team of the Student Volunteers. Recently he was elected President of the Student Christian Movement at Bethel. After serving the Mennonite Church at Colby, Kansas, not long ago he reported that this was a very active group and that they have a beautiful house of worship. Verney's brother Willard is educational director of the Belton, Montana, C.P.S. camp.

—"Per capita consumption of alocholic beverages in the U.S.A. increased from 1.69 gallons in 1933 to 14.18 gallons in 1941. In 1933 expenditures for alcoholic beverages in the nation totaled $350,000,000 or $2.78 per capita. In 1941 liquor expenditures reached $4,500,000,000 or $34.02 per capita."

C.P.S. LIFE AT MENTAL HOSPITAL UNITS

The number and type of activities in C.P.S. units at mental hospitals are seen in a summary prepared from reports received from the leaders of the hospital units. The summary was prepared by the educational secretary at the Akron Office:

Religious Life—A number of the units have a weekday religious service along with services on Sunday. Campers are asked quite frequently to participate in local church activities. The Ypsilanti unit has assisted in the opening of a Sunday School at a small country school about four miles from the hospital.

Education—At many units the hospital authorities have offered classes on Mental Hygiene and Abnormal Psychology for the purpose of orienting the men in their work. Music occupies a large place in the leisure-time activities of the campers. Several units have organized quartets that have done some outstanding work. The units at Howard, R. I., and Ypsilanti, Michigan have organized choruses. Visits from church leaders supplement the educational and religious program of the units.

Recreation—Campers are encouraged to spend their off time away from their work to preserve their mental and spiritual poise. Active sports in the units are tennis, ping pong, basketball and football.

Problems—The hospital atmosphere is not conducive to mental and spiritual growth. Long, fatiguing hours of work discourage attempts at class work on off hours. Facilities for religious, educational, and recreational life are limited. Unity of the group is difficult to maintain.

—Do You Love The Men?: Dr. George F. Pentecost was conducting meetings in Scotland, when in conversation with Dr. Horatius Bonar he said: "Dr. Bonar, I do love to preach Christ to men." "I am very glad to hear that," was the reply, "but Dr. Pentecost, do you love the men you preach Jesus Christ to?" —Selected

WOODLAND MENNONITE CHURCH

Warroad, Minnesota

Brother and Sister Abe P. Harder were pleasantly surprised when their son Abe arrived home on furlough. On his last Sunday at home friends and relatives gathered at the Harder home for farewell services. The choir rendered a selection of songs, and Rev. Arthur Ortman gave a brief message.

The women's sewing club has been holding its semi-monthly meetings. A box of clothing is being gathered to be sent to Akron, Pa. Some sewing for relief has also been done. More curtain material has been ordered, so that another space may be partitioned off in church. One of the Sunday School classes needs to be divided. From the small start of one adult class and one children's class, the Sunday School has now grown to two adult classes, three children's classes, and a Bible class for the young folks, conducted by Rev. Arthur Ortman.

The C. E. program was held the last Sunday in the month, as usual. As we listen to the recitations, topics, and songs, it seems that one sentence stands out in our minds just a little clearer than the rest. So I keep thinking of the words of one song that were "The Savior keeps loving us still." And when I think of my past trespasses against him, when I was weak when I should have let Him be my Strength, then it seems hard to believe that the "Savior keeps loving us still," but He does. Not for just a short while but for all eternity. Since the new year is still young, I'll close with this New Year's prayer:

Dear Lord, in this new year
That Thou hast given me to see,
Guide Thou my thoughts.
Unto Thee, may I consecrated be.

Help me to say the words
That Thou wouldst have me say.
Those words that lift and cheer
And help some soul on Heavn's way.

Help me to do the little tasks,
The little deed to cheer some life.
And in doing this, forget of self,
And only follow Thee.

Help me to show Thy love
Where Thy love has ne'er been known.
Help me to pray for those outside the fold
Till for Thy Kingdom, they've been won.

ZION MENNONITE CHURCH

Elbing, Kansas

We too must say that the Lord has been very goo to us. As He has been with us in the past, so wil He also be with us in the future.

When we look back as members of our church, w must say that it seems as though God has been more real to us than ever before. We feel it is not only the minister that has a great opportunity to serve the Lord, but it is also ours, in that we can daily bear our minister on praying hands, so that great things can be accomplished through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Why is it that so often the church fails to have the power that it should have? Is it not because the prayer book is lost and the church members do not pray enough? May God help us to be more faithful!

We again have a catechism class. Here too we as members have a duty, or as I should say a privilege to stand by in prayer so that the youth of today will see their need of a Saviour, and have a desire and longing to follow Him wherever He leads them and be willing to stand up for their Master, whatever it costs.

Last Sunday a group of academy students of North Newton, who call themselves "Ambassadors for Christ," gave an interesting program in our C. E. Their principal, Ted Schmidt, also made a few remarks about what it meant to be a true ambassador for Christ. May the Lord bless this school, and may He help us to do our part in praying and giving.

May God grant that all the leaders in the church and also every member, not only of our church, but of every church may be filled, with power from on high, so that many souls will be won for Christ and great things be done for Him. Agatha C. Andres, Corr.

EASTERN DISTRICT CONFERENCE NOTES

Upper Milford, Zionsville—In the last article we stated that the Sunday School decided to contribute $50.00 to the Bluffton College Debt Liquidation Fund, but we overlooked the fact that the congregation at its annual meeting also decided to send $100.00 for the same cause. We hope many other organizations will do likewise, so that our college will be debt free in the very near future.

Philadelphia, First—A farewell fellowship was held February 1, in behalf of Mrs. Horace (Edith) DuBois and family. Rev. DuBois has accepted a call from a Baptist Church in Maryland. The Rev. Erland Waltner, former pastor of the Second Mennonite Church and now pastor of Bethel Mennonite Church, Mt. Lake, Minnesota, delivered the sermon on Sunday evening, February 6.

Fairfield—Dr. J. C. Meyer, professor at Western Reserve University, Cleveland, Ohio, was the guest preacher February 6. He was visiting several C.P.S. camps in the western part of Pennsylvania.

Bethany, Quakertown—The Swamp Charge Brotherhood held its regular monthly meeting February 8. Dr. Harvey R. Bauman gave a very interesting address on the theme, "Punishment in This Life as a Result of Sin." The Lansdale Chapter was the guest of the local brotherhood. The Chapter includes West Swamp, Bethany, Flatland, and Springfield.

First, Allentown—The pastor, Rev. Howard G. Nyce conducted a service for the C.O. unit at the Allentown State Hospital, on February 3, and agreed to conduct a service regularly the third Thursday of the month. The C. E. Societies celebrated the sixty-third Anniversary of Christian Endeavor on February 6. The Intermediate Society presented a Biblical play entitled, "As the Twig Is Bent."

JOTTINGS

—Salem Mennonite Church, Dalton, Ohio: Brother J. N. Smucker of Bluffton, Ohio, is to begin a week of meetings here on March 12. The Women's Missionary and Sewing Society has sent the book "Strength for God and Country to those out of the country. To help a bit financially, a gift of $5.00 was sent to those in C.P.S. service.

—Brother Arthur Wenger, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Shafter, California, used the subject "Unconditional Surrender," based on Luke 9:57-62, as his topic for a recent evening service.

—Johannestal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: We are indeed glad to report that Mrs. J. M. Regier, wife of our pastor, is well on the way to recovery from her recent operation, and we are looking forward to the time when she again will be able to join us in our services.—Corr.

—Brother William Stauffer, field worker for the Home Mission Board, hopes to make the following itinerary: (Schedule is tentative and not definite) March 6, Mennonite Fellowship, Chicago; March 7-11, Fort Collins, Colorado Springs, and Mancos; March 12, Aberdeen, Idaho; March 13-18, Downey, Idaho, and California camps; March 19, Upland, California; March 20-25, California and Oregon; March 26, Colfax, Washington; March 27-April 1, Belton, Montana, Mountain Lake, Minnesota.

—The Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas, more than met its C.P.S. quota for 1943. The 202 members contributed $1302.92 for this important cause.

—The Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, Wichita, should have been credited with $25.00 for Home Missions in the last financial report of this paper.

—Brother Menno Kliewer, pastor of the Sichar Mennonite Church at Bessie, Oklahoma, is at present on a leave of absence from his church and is attending Bethel College. On February 13, he brought the message to the Walton Mennonite Church, while Ronald von Riesen, pastor, was serving the Elbing Church with a message.

—The fourth edition of the Mennonite Hymnary is being printed. The third edition is exhausted. So soon 5,000 more copies will be available. Also the first 6,000 copies of the German Hymnary have been sold out. The second edition is to be printed as soon as possible.

—The Kansas Mennonite Sunday School Convention is to meet in the Alexanderwohl Mennonite Church on the afternoon and evening of April 30, states Elfriede Regier, Secretary.

—Brother Adam Ratzlaff, Orienta, Oklahoma, died February 4. He was an active worker for church and school.

—The Mennonite Church in Old Mexico has sent in $50.00 for the foreign mission work of our conference. This is, perhaps, the first gift for such a cause to come from this church. The Elder of this church is Brother Jacob Janzen.

—"About 178,000 quarts of vegetables and fruit were gathered under the M.C.C. Canning Project. This amounts to about seventy-five quarts for every man in Mennonite base camps." —Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska.

—The budget of the Menno Mennonite Sunday School, Lind, Washington, is: Foreign Missions, $50; Home Missions, $25; Publication Board, $30; Education Board, $30; American Bible Society, $35; Sunday School and Church Library, $50; Peace and Missions Chair Bethel College, $10; Current Expenses, $145.

—Officers of the Kansas State Sunday School Convention are: President, Clyde Dirks; Vice President, Albert B. Graber; Secretary-Treasurer, Elfriede Regier.

—First and Second Mennonite Churches, Beatrice, Nebraska: Brother William H. Stauffer served both churches recently. He showed pictures of C.P.S. one night and talked on "The Past, Present, and Future of Mennonites" on the next night. The two churches have agreed to share the services of Rev. J. J. Esau who has accepted an invitation to serve them between Palm Sunday and Easter. Both churches are planning to hold offerings for the construction of the meetinghouse of the Walton Mennonite Church. Ronald von Riesen, pastor of this church, is a son of the First Church, Beatrice.

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: "On Tuesday (February 15) the pastor (Donovan Smucker) leaves for a ten day tour of Quaker and Brethren Civilian Public Service camps and affiliated agencies, a trip to assist in interpreting the complex life of the Mennonite churches.... Next Sunday morning the pulpit will be occupied by Brother A. S. Rosenberger, former President of Bluffton College and now pastor of the Dalton Church."

Freeman Junior College To Be Debt Free, August 31 '44

Brother J. D. Unruh, President of Freeman Junior College, in speaking of the money that has come in o pay the debt of the school says, "Considerable has come in in the form of Civilian Bonds, and as soon as these are cashable the last creditor will be paid—before the end of the summer. This means hat by the end of the fiscal year on August 31, 1944, he college will be debt free. For this happy turn ve are most grateful to our heavenly Father who has o graciously enabled us to reach this long sought objective."

The peak of the debt was $63,212.27 in 1935. In 943 it had come down to $41,651.18. Since 1942 nough money and more has come in to cover that whole amount, minus concessions by some of the reditors. After the community canvass in the fall f 1942 only $17,000 of the debt remained. "Last all representatives from the surrounding churches were called into council relative to the possibility of quidating the remaining portion of the debt . . . . Most of the churches in the community set 'goals' for themselves and then set out to reach these." The results did away with the debt.

Most of the debt was incurred in the construction of Memorial Hall shown below. "The original cost of the building, as reported in October of 1927, amounted to $63,827.92." When interest payments made on the debt from July 1, 1927, to January 1, 1944, are added to the original amount a grand total of $89,593.92 is reached!

Freeman Junior College now faces the future debt-free. On February 27, churches of the Northern District Conference observed Prayer and Gift Day for the school. Stressing payment of the debt, the general treasury has suffered, so there is still real need though the debt has been met.

The President of the school says, "Let prayers . . . ascend to His throne in behalf of the future course of the institution. Only through His divine help can we lay our plans for the days to come."

This is Memorial Hall at Freeman, Junior College. Through its construction most of the debt was incurred. It and the other buildings are now virtually debt free.

Our C. P. S. Contributions

The monthly C.P.S. quota for our conference is $13,421. In December our conference contributed $15,576.23. Thus we exceeded our quota. But in January we sank considerably below our quota. We contributed only $8,170.82. Thus when we average the two months we find that we owe a balance of $3,094.95. We might state here that the M.C.C. very graciously wiped out the arrearage of our conference for the past year and let us begin anew on December 1, 1943.

A leader of the M.C.C. says, "It is clear that the full 50c per church member monthly quota will be required for C.P.S. as far ahead as we can see . . ." While 1,220 Mennonite men are on maintenance projects, the M.C.C. is maintaining 1,741 men. But our camps are below summer strength, and selective service policy is to use new inductees to build the camps up to summer strength. A total of 129 are expected to come to camp between February 1 and March 8.

Before us Christians is a big opportunity to show brotherly love to the men in camp by giving of our material sustenance. They need our help. In the spirit of our forefathers, let us be brotherly. Harold Bender relates the following: "A Protestant of Strasburg, visitor at a Swiss Brethren baptismal services in that city in 1557, reported that a question addressed to applicants for baptism was: 'Whether they, if necessity required it, would devote all their possessions to the service of the brotherhood, and would not fail any member that is in need, if they were able to render aid." Let us be true to the faith of our fathers.—rw.

Race Relations

Although a Christian could pin all the sins in the universe upon the members of a certain race (we don't admit for a moment that any race can be so singled out), as a Christian he would still have no right at all to persecute such a race. For the Christian is to forgive those who do evil unto him. "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us" when prayed honestly should wipe away or prevent all ill-feeling and action towards another race. Once when James and John felt very hateful towards some Samaritans, Jesus rebuked them and said, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." Luke 9:55,56. The Christian ought not to hate but love the meanest man or men on earth. Furthermore, the word race is a very wide and loose term.—rw.

God So Loved, He Gave

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Salvation is God's gift to us. We cannot earn or purchase salvation. It is ours to accept. Man can not accept a material gift very well as long as he keeps his hands tightly clenched. He must open them to receive. Man must yield to God if He would receive His unmistakable Gift, Jesus Christ.

God's gift once accepted, we must still face the question of our attitude towards His gift. Do we love Jesus Christ so much that we permit him to cleanse us from all self-will and self-righteousness based upon self-love? Do we really love Him so much that we let Him have his way with us instead of trying to promote our way and making it appear as His will and way? God so loved, He gave. What do we with His gift? —rw.

Who Loves Christ?

John 14:21 gives us the answer: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him and manifest myself to him." How very important it is that we love Him who first loved us! Therefore, let us pay heed to what Jesus says. He points out that we must first have His commandments and then must keep them. We cannot keep them without having them. But we ought not to have them without keeping them. We are to learn and do. True love for Christ manifests itself in knowing and keeping His commandments. When his commandments are not known and not kept, then we can be certain that there is something tragically wrong with the individual's love for Christ.—rw.

"Unadulterated Original Christianity

In connection with the above it is enheartening to notice what Professor Johann Loserth of Austria said of the faith of our fathers. He said, "More radically than any other movement for reform, the Anabaptists (Brethren) strove to follow the footsteps of the church of the first centuries and to renew unadulterated original Christianity."—Quotation is taken from Mennonites in Europe by John Horsch—rw.

WHAT OF C. P. S.?

By William H. Stauffer

Our Civilian Public Service program is one of the biggest projects ever undertaken by our people. It has received a great deal of interest and support, and naturally also a lot of questions. Therefore, as one who has been privileged to have a rather intimate association with both our boys and the Mennonite Central Committee I would like o set forth a few impressions for the readers of The Mennonite.

A familiar question is, "Are you fully satisfied with the C.P.S. program?" The answer, of course, is "No!" I feel certain that the M.C.C. is not totally satisfied with the program. However, I am certain that those who first conceived of this type of alternate service and those who are now intimately working with it strongly feel that it still is by far the best we know to date. Could one begin over again some alterations would very likely be attempted That is to be expected. But, the main lines would be kept.

There are some who suggest that the whole program is a mistake. They feel that nothing should have been done at the outset. We should have waited and allowed the boys to go through the same type of experiences endured in the last war. That would really test the boys and separate the sincere from the insincere. This type of attitude, no doubt, has some merit. It is quite likely that this would have brought out some great heroism. However, this type of attitude is all too easy for us as ministers with our exemption from military service. I wonder whether we would take this attitude if we had to face the music?

Undoubtedly, to follow the practice of the first war would have been much less costly, financially. But, is that to be the determining factor? Are we conscientiously opposed to war only when it doesn't cost us anything? Are we suggesting that our boys pay the whole price for themselves and for us as well?

Furthermore, we ministers have to recognize that our boys are perhaps even less prepared this time than at the outbreak of the first war. I feel certain that much of that responsibility rests upon our shoulders. Had we followed the practice of the first war our historic tradition of non-resistance would have almost completely collapsed—not because it is no longer valid and true, but because of our neglect. Had we been unwilling to do our part, it is reasonably safe to say that the "faith of our fathers" would soon be only a noble tradition of the past.

As the war continues and fathers are drafted this question becomes all the more acute. It has been comparatively easy for our single boys to go to C.P.S. The married men and fathers face a more difficult problem. Some have gone to the army straight or non-combatant because they needed support for their wives and families. This is a very serious problem. However, it can hardly be used to discredit C.P.S. The M.C.C. has tried to urge that no husband or father need go to the army for this reason. If the family or the church are not able or willing to assist, the M.C.C. is willing and ready. It is perhaps true that some of these men don't want to accept this extra help. One can readily understand this. However, dare we say that that discredits the C.P.S. program?

To be sure, the C.P.S. program is far from perfect. But, it is the best we have or know to date. Furthermore, this very important fact dare not be overlooked. We are too close to C.P.S. to fully and justly criticise or evaluate. Its real significance will shine forth in, say, ten years from now. Then it will be a part of the record. In the midst of all of the folly of war and famine and disease the record of our boys will be indisputably there. Then we will truly say as I have said before, "The men who conceived and mapped this program were really mightily led of God." We dn't fully realize now, we may then, what God has in mind with this small minority who stands out against the world and war for the way of truth and God.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

"AFTERALL, I WANT PEACE OF MIND"

It was twelve o'clock noon on Sunday, May 16, when I had to go the two miles to the Naila railway depot from our Janjgir mission station. The heat was blazing, but I had to catch the twelve-thirty train in order to get home to Jagdeeshpore by Monday night. When I arrived at the depot, I was told that the train was three hours late. My heart sank. Now to spend three hours in that furnace of a depot, just waiting. The depot agent kindly gave me a stool to sit on. There are no benches, let alone easy chairs. So I sat on that stool wiping perspiration and resigned to the condition.

All of a sudden a young Indian came to me and began to talk. I was very drowsy and hot; and did not feel like talking. He soon let me know that he was an Arya Samajist (Arya Samaj is an organization within Hinduism which is especially hostile to Christianity.) He wanted to argue. Well I surely did not feel like arguing in that furnice heat. And we have also learned that arguing does not get us very far spiritually. We may win our argument, but lose our man. So I tried to avoid all controversy I could. I either did not answer at all, or just said, "mmm". When he seemed to know quite a bit about the New Testament, though what he quoted was exceedingly perverted, I asked him whether he had a New Testament. He said yes.

But he was so talkative that I did not have a chance to say what I wanted to say. After he had exercised his tongue for about an half an hour, he all of a sudden got very quiet. My first thought was that he thought me too glum to make it worth while for him to talk to me. I too was quiet and just looked at him. Then all of a sudden he bent over towards me and said, "After all, I want peace of mind." Then I told him very quietly and serenely that he was entitled to receive that peace, and I told him where to find it, and that the book (the New Testament) he had, showed him the way. He should only read it with a devoted heart and mind. A conversation which had seemed to bid only to be a fruitless arguing turned almost into holy communion. My train came and I wished him "God speed" and the train took me away. —John Thiessen

Mrs. Malcolm Wenger to be Ordained

Several months ago we were glad to announce the ordination of Brother Malcolm Wenger as missionary to the Cheyenne Indians. We are now glad to announce also the ordination of Mrs. Esther Baehr Wenger, his wife, as missionary to go with him to Montana.

The Lord willing, this ordination is to take place on March 5, in her home church, Wisner, Nebraska, by Rev. A. P. Waltner, member of the Board.

We solicit the intercessory prayer of all mission friends for this ordination and also for the study of the difficult Cheyenne language. And may we also not forget to thank the Lord for giving us these new workers.

While the doors on foreign fields are partly closed now, we should double our efforts on the fields that are still open. Let us also pray for the three missionaries that are now waiting in Argentina for a ship to take them to India, that they may not have to wait too long. India needs them badly. The harvest there is ripe. Last year 395 souls could be added to the church there. Thank the Lord. P. H. Richert

C. P. S. Facts and Figures

At the present time M.C.C. administers twenty-one C.P.S. mental hospital units with a total of 736 men on duty. A year ago it administered six units with a total of 103 men.

The M.C.C. Treasurer's Report shows that from December 1, 1942, to November 30, 1943, C.P.S. men in M.C.C. camps contributed $5,092.09 to War Sufferers' Relief.

A total of 150 men in Mennonite camps have registered a primary interest to engage in relief work now or after the war. Of this number, about 90 are in Relief Training Units where they receive basic training for foreign relief service.

As of January 31, 1944, 2,880 men were under M.C.C. administration in C.P.S. camps and units. The government agencies under which these men are distributed to work are as follows:

Soil Conservation Service	770
Mental Hospitals	736
Forestry Service	357
National Park Service	351
Dairy Farm Service	279
Farm Security Administration	134
Bureau of Reclamation	96
Dairy Herd Testers	69
Agriculture Experiment Stations	35
Public Health Service	33
Puerto Rico Reconstruction Adm.	13
Scientific Research	7
TOTAL	2880

These figures do not include 88 men who are detached for administrative work or who are in the cooperative camp at Bowie, Maryland, bringing the total of men under M.C.C. up to 2968.

Report on C. P. S. Soil Conservation Work

A report from the Department of Agriculture lists in detail the amount of work C.P.S. men have done under Soil Conservation Service from May 1941 to June 30, 1943. Below is a partial list containing a number of the items listed:

Built 191,790 rods of fence.
Built 12,475 cubic yards of levees, dykes, jetties, and groins.
Dug 90,825 linear feet of open ditches.
Built 34,367 linear feet of tile line and pipe.
Constructed 174 miles of truck trails or minor roads.
Built 603,963 square yards of bank sloping.
Constructed 4,143 check dams.
Planted 1,977,354 square yards of trees in gullies.
Quarried 951 tons of limestone for soil improvement.
Built 611 miles of contour furrows and ridges.
Constructed 9 large diversion dams.
Sodded 374 acres of pasture.
Conducted tree and plant disease control work on 6,446 acres.
Built 386 water control structures for irrigation.
Cleared and cleaned 2,017,095 square yards in channels and levees.

The Worst Read Book

By Mary Becker

The Bible still ranks as the world's best seller. As Christians we are proud to take note of, and call attention to, this fact. But do we ever think beyond it? We seem to feel that the fact that it is the best seller indicates a desire in the hearts of the people to own a Bible, to read it, to study it. But we must be interested in it further than merely to experience a feeling of satisfaction and joy at seeing it leave the bookstand. What is done with it after it has passed out of the hands of the bookman into the hands of a private owner should be our concern.

Yes, the Bible is the world's best seller, but it is perhaps also the worst read book. Someone may stop to wonder, "Doesn't she mean the least read?" No, the worst read book. It is a sad fact that many who own a Bible do not read it; but it is perhaps just as pathetic if not more so, that many who read it do not read it intelligently to themselves or intelligibly to others. And saddest of all is that many who love the One of whom this book teaches and love the Book, ministers and Christian leaders included, are guilty of reading this Book of books as they would read no other book.

In all too many churches the Bible reading has been accorded a very minor place in the worship service; it is designed to serve in a subordinate place to the sermon or other part of the service instead of occupying the most important place. And not only that, but often the reading itself is inferior to the delivery of the sermon. A minister would not think of stepping into the pulpit without due preparation and practice on his message to the people, but does he dare to step into the pulpit without preparation and practice on God's message? The best preparation in the delivery of God's Word is none too good, for this great message is mankind's greatest treasure.

Why Should the Bible be Read?

To the above question one might answer, "As a Christian I feel it my duty to read the Bible." It is your duty, but is reading the Bible from a sense of duty the best reason you have for reading it? Parents would not be very happy if their children told them that they loved them from a sense of duty. The Bible must be read with a desire to know its message and a love for the One of whom it teaches.

A number of years ago the Friend of Truth had the following in answer to the question, "Why Study the Bible?"

"Every young person should make the Bible central in his reading and studying:

1. Because it is the most alive and studied book in the world today.
2. Because the English Bible is the greatest Classic in modern literature.
3. Because its study enlarges one's horizon and brings one in touch with the most earnest and self-sacrificing spirits of this age.
4. Because to know it helps one to appreciate all else that is best in literature.
5. Because it touches and crowns all other branches of knowledge.
6. Because it is God's appointed means for development of noble Christian character.
7. Because it is God's only revelation and message of grace and power for full salvation of every soul, and satisfies the longing of every heart in the time that now is and that which is to come."

We are all searchers after Truth; "we search the world for Truth," as the poet has said; but we must of necessity leave our quest

"To find that all the sages said
Is in the Book our mothers read."

That is true; but there is more in this Book than all the sages said, for these cannot tell us how to become "wise unto salvation" or how to become "furnished for every good work." Therefore, we must study the Bible.

When should the Bible be read?

Aye, there's the rub for most of us. When is there a quiet time when, undisturbed by the mad rush of present-day living, we can sit down for a study of the Word of God? Because of this situation many of us are inclined to neglect our Bible study or to read the Bible hurriedly, superficially, and perhaps very irregularly.

This is not as it should be. We have time for everything else, things of less importance; we must have time for this which is of supreme importance. The most productive and rewarding reading requires a definite, regular time. Whether this be an early morning hour before the round of dutues begins, a quiet evening hour before one lays himself down to sleep, or a quiet hour in the mid-morning or mid-afternoon lull of household duties does not matter; but it should be a regular time, a time when there is the least likelihood for interruption. Form a "time-study" habit as well as a "place-study" habit, and read the Bible to study it at this time.

How should the Bible be read?

First of all let me say, the Bible should be read. Often devotional books are substituted for the reading of the Bible. Although these are good and may be used as supplementary material, they should never be substituted for the Bible. Know what the Bible itself says, not what has been said about it.

There are various methods of Bible reading and study. The name "Sunday School" method might be applied to that used by those laymen whose contact with the Bible is a one-day-a-week affair when they attend Sunday School. They come to Sunday School without preparation perhaps, and together with many others like them they "pool their ignorance." That is what it amounts to if there is no definite study behind the discussion. In a less extreme sense the title, "Sunday School" method, might also refer to that used by those who study only selected passages, with or without commentaries, but who follow no definite plan, skipping here and there.

A second method is one often used in reading devotions—turning to familiar passages or Psalms, but again following no definite plan of study. We might term this the "Devotional" method. This is like reading only the quotable passages in Shakespeare's plays, thus missing the purpose behind the whole. Both of the above methods are too fragmentary. Pieces of stained glass have none of the beauty of the stained glass window when the fragments are put into place.

A third method, and perhaps the method followed by most folks who do systematic reading of the Bible at all, is beginning at the beginning and reading to the end. Even though we should get acquainted with the whole Bible, we should take into account that certain passages are not as rewarding as others and therefore do not require as thorough studying as those more applicable to our lives.

Our methods could be mentioned, some of which have their good points, such as choosing a certain idea or word and following it through in a thorough study, or choosing a certain character for study. However, the weakness in all of these methods is that they leave out of account the fact that each book of the Bible is a unit in itself, fitting into the larger unit of the Bible as a whole. For the most effective study of the Bible, therefore, one must study it by books, employing the "Book Study" method. This will be touched upon briefly.

As has been said, each book is a unit, an entity in itself; and the author of it was used of God to develop a particular idea. By studying it as a whole, one can arrive at the purpose behind that particular book.

The first thing to do then would be to read the book as a whole, at one sitting, if at all possible. This enables one to get the general contents, to get at the outline, and to feel the purpose behind the book. For only one example, in reading the book of Matthew, it will be noticed that in 4:17 the expression is used, "From that time began Jesus to preach." Up to this verse we have the preparation for His ministry. In 16:20 the same expression is used, "From that time began Jesus to show unto his disciples that he must . . . suffer." Between 4:17 and 16:20 the proclamation of His message was the important thing; after 16:20 the shadow of the cross, the Passion teaching and the Passion itself play the leading role. By observing this we have arrived at a workable outline.

If we now apply the law of proportion to it, we notice that three and one-half out of the twenty-eight chapters deal with the preparation (30 years of Jesus' life), 13 with the proclamation (2½years of His life), and 12½ with the Passion (6 months of His life. And carrying this a bit further, we notice that the Triumphal Entry is recorded in chapter 21, the last 8 chapters dealing with the last week of His life. From these observations we can see the general purpose. By observing further what Matthew tells and what he omits, how he tells what he includes, etc., we can see the more specific purpose.

After the book as a whole has been read, it should be studied thoroughly, taking small sections at a time, making observations, interpreting these in the light of the context, and applying the truths learned to the heart. The following of this method will lead to a thorough knowledge of the book studied.

How should the Bible be read? Miles Coverdale wrote the following advice in his preface to the famous Coverdale version (1535): "It shall greatly help thee to understand Scripture if thou wilt mark not only what is spoken or written, but of whom and unto whom, with what words, at what time, where, to what intent, with what circumstances, considering what goeth before and what followeth after." Other helpful suggestions are: Use the best version of the language in which the study is carried on; compare with other versions, both modern and old; compare with translations in other languages if you read another language; read a passage aloud to get the full beauty and significance of it.

The above discussion has, as was intended, dealt mostly with the actual study, the outward conditions. This does not exclude or in any way minimize the preparation of the heart, the inner condition; for no study of the Word of God can be carried on effectively without diligently seeking through prayer the guidance of the Holy Spirit who inspired its writing.

The challenge comes to us as Christians to study God's Word diligently and prayerfully, to read it effectively and reverently, and to let it influence our lives and through us the lives of others. Let us meet this challenge that it may cease to be, as far as we are concerned, the "worst read" book.

(Many of the above thoughts, particularly those in regard to the book-study method, were derived from courses taken at the Biblical Seminary in New York, where this method of Bible study is used and where the writer learned to appreciate and see the value of it.—MB)

THE WORLD'S NEED OF SALVATION

The world needs to be saved from war.
The world needs to be saved from hatred.
The world needs to be saved from greed.
The world needs to be saved from a sense of race superiority.
The world needs to be saved from economic insecurity.
The world needs to be saved from exploitation.
The world needs to be saved from selfishness.
The world needs to be saved from tyrannical rulers.
The world needs to be saved from fear and distrust.
The world needs to be saved from ignorance.
The world needs to be saved from disease.
The world needs to be saved from sin and evil.

Where can it turn for such saving power? There is only one such power available to man, and it is through union with Christ. It is only as men can say with St. Paul "I have been crucified with Christ, and it is no longer I that live, but Christ lives in me." (Gal. 2:20). Only in such atonement with Christ can the world or an individual be saved from the forces that enslave man, of which sin and evil are the inclusive terms. The world needs to go through a conversion experience with Paul and come to the realization that it cannot save itself. Salvation comes by grace through faith in Christ as our Lord, Master, and Saviour.—Orlo Kaufman

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

FACIAL EXPRESSIONS AND HONESTY

A well known Mennonite leader has frequently claimed that a Mennonite could be picked out of a mixed crowd by his distinctive facial expression. By facial expression he did not mean characteristic physical features such as a high forehead, a long nose, a heavy jaw, or a bearded face. He meant rather a typical expression that reflected humility and radated honesty, an expression of gentleness, quietness, nd reserve to the point of timidity, shyness, and ven inferiority, whatever the merits of our friend's laim, the fact remains that rural people do have cerain physiological, psychological, and social characterstics that are readily distinguishable from those of rban people.

Desire for Urbanity

One of the first goals of country boys and girls going o the cities is to learn the ways, manners, and cusoms of the city and drop their own rural characterisics. They want to act and talk in such a way that no ne can tell they are from the country; in brief, they vant to acquire urban "polish." Incidentally, our colges have served them admirably toward that end, so dmirably that we would challenge our friend to test is theory by trying to pick a Mennonite college gradate out of a crowd of mixed denominations and naonalities.

The Point At Issue

The point we wish to raise is whether the country oy or girl who goes to the city and acquires city anners, customs, and habits or so-called social grace "polish" does not lose more than his or her country yness, self-consciousness, and timid bearing? Does e urban "polish" not also serve as a thin veneer to ver up certain ethical and religious sensitivities hich most Christian young people from the country ice possessed? Does the urban, impersonal atmosere and crass materialism not encourage individualn to the point of selfishness? Does it gradually ake them indifferent to the wrongs about them which re once shocking and disturbing? Does it tend to velop a passive attitude of accepting as inevitable injustices, the immoralities, and the indecencies large city life? If urban "polish" means blunted ical sensitivity to wrong we prefer the rural chareristics and facial expressions of humility, timidity, d genuine honesty that stand out in the crowd. A mond in the rough is worth more than a cheap that sparkles much on the surface.

NOT LOST

'If you know all the wisdom of the world and are tranger to Christ, you are ignorant. On the other d, if you do know Christ without the wisdom of world you are still a wise man. Paul Scherer s the story of an old farmer up in New England ing on a fence next to the road· Soon a smooth ng fellow from New York rolled up in a shiny Cadillac and asked the way to a half-dozen erent towns and cities in that area. To all of these questions the farmer had nothing but a monotonous almost stupid reply: 'I don't know.' Finally, the fellow in the Cadillac, let in his clutch and started his car. He paused just long enough to shout, 'You don't know much do you?' Whereupon the farmer unfolded himself with a twinkle in his eye and drawled back, 'I ain't lost.' And so it is with Jesus Christ. Those who know and love Him may not know all the answers. But they are not lost."

RELIEF NEEDS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

China—"As far as eye can see the fields are bare of grain. It is thought that the famine this winter will be tenfold worse than last winter. What are the poor people going to do for a living and how are we going to help them effectively? Wang Tean Chen says that of the 370 population of his village, 260 died before the wheat harvest. Nor is this an isolated case."

Poland—"The death rate in Warsaw, attributed to starvation, was in February, 1940: 114. By May, 1941, it had risen to 1,464. There are no figures for more recent periods, but that they must have been steadily rising may easily be imagined from the following figures of the calonfic value of Polish food rations: 1940-736 calories; 1941—669 calories; 1942—564 calories in the first few month but only 401 in the second quarter." (English and American authorities on rehabilitation have estimated that the minimum level to sustain life, not to say anythng about work, is about 2,000 calories per day.)

Belgium—"All children from 1 to 14 years were either losing weight or making subnormal progress and that the present situation was infinitely worse than a year ago, and that the state of Belgium would soon be as bad as that of Greece." (Swedish Comm. for the Relief of Belgian Children.) "One third of the 2,300,000 children under 18 years of age in Belgium are tubercular." (U.S. Board of Economic Warfare.)

Netherlands—"As a result of this lack of hygenic precaution (the complete lack of soap) the greatest epidemic of diptheria on record along with increasing prevalence of other infectious diseases, was reported on November 20, 1943."

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

Willard W. Wiebe, Aberdeen, Idaho

MARCH 1—"Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." John 8:31, 32

Today I shall seek the truth. I yearn after truth in all that I do, say, or think. Christ has promised me the truth. But HOW can I know the truth? Is it through diligent and intensified years of study? What did Christ say? "If ye continue in my word . . ." And to whom did He say it? ". . . to those Jews which believed on him." There it is. If I believe on Him and obey His word, then I can claim His promise.

MARCH 2—"I have sinned . . ." Luke 15:21

To acknowledge my sin to God is not easy. To acknowledge my sin to man is sometimes easier, in fact, there is a danger of boasting therein. But to tell God I am sinful and wicked by nature—to call SIN by its real name—is difficult. To Him I can not boast. Why should I hide that thing which lies deep down in my heart? Is it not making me miserable? Then do not wait another day, but take it to Jesus and tell Him that it is there. "The blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin."

MARCH 3—"Behold the fire and the wood: but where is the lamb for a burnt offering?" Genesis 22:7

Abraham is about to carry out God's order and offer Isaac as a sacrifice to God. His son asked this question which teaches us two things. First, the fire of God's righteousness, plus the wood of man's sinfulness, MINUS the blood of a sacrifice, results in Hell. Second, the fire of God's righteousness, plus the wood of man's sinfulness, PLUS the blood of a sacrifice, results in Heaven. Am I, today, depending upon that perfect sacrifice provided for me on Calvary?

MARCH 4—"Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, wherby we must be saved." Acts 4:12

Could my tears forever flow,
    Could my zeal no languor know,
These for sin could not atone;
    Thou must save, and Thou alone:
In my hand no price I bring,
    Simply to Thy cross I cling.

The simplicity of the gospel goes beyond my comprehension!

MARCH 5—" . . . without me ye can do nothing." John 15:5

My weakness and insufficiency overwhelmed me as an onrushing sea. Each wave of wickedness drove my restless soul harshly against the chafing sand of despair. The sea of sin neither washed me beyond its reach nor swallowed me up into its cold grave. I remained helpless and unhappy upon the shiftless sand of uselessness. But there is a Rock which was broken for me in whose cleft I soon found security. Here the waves of sin have turned into a spray as they continue beating helplessly against this Rock—and I am sheltered!

MARCH 6—"And he came out, and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives;" Luke 22:39

Christ had a place of prayer. 'Twas a place where "He was wont" to go. The Revised Version puts it, "as his custom was." Oh, Christian! Do you have a place where you can go to Him in prayer. Your Saviour used such a place in calm as well as in crisis. Prayer in a crisis of life will mean more if it is the continuation of a habit which prevailed during the calm of life.

MARCH 7—"Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."

The promise of God's presence gives peace. The promise of God's presence gives power. How do I know this? Because a promise is only as good as its promiser. As you and I labor from day to day let us think upon His promises which we find in His Word, and let us strengthen our faith by saying "This promise is as good as the Promiser!"

MARCH 8—"And being found in fashion as a man he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death even the death of the cross." Philippians 2:8

Christ's obedience led Him from the highest plac in Heaven to the lowest place on earth. It extende from the glory which He had with His Father to th Cross from which His Father hid His face. Thi included His obedience to earthly parents. If th Heavenly Son of the Heavenly Father was willing t be obedient to Joseph and Mary of Nazareth, Hi earthly parents, how much more should we as earthl children be willing to be obedient to our Heavenl Father!

MARCH 9—"And every man that hath this hope i him purifieth himself." I John 3:3

The word "hope" in the New Testament is alway used in the good sense—to anticipate with pleasur Here it refers to Christ's return to this earth. Thi word in the original never carries with it the sam meaning of uncertainty that we often give it. It ex presses, rather, a confidence and surety that the thin will come to pass. If I have this hope—this joyfu anticipation of a certainty—of Christ's return, the it will purify me in my living to-day.

Shipments to England and Paraguay

Six boxes of shoes and clothing have been sent t England. The shipment had a gross weight of 1,26 pounds and a value of $1,432.35. A shipment com prising five boxes of school books, Bibles and relig ious books, all in German, was sent to Paraguay f use in the colony school and library.

1944 SUMMER SCHOOL ANNOUNCEMENT

Bethel College again plans on a special Summer Scho Session this year. The Summer Session consists of tw terms of five weeks each. The first term begins Ma 22 and ends June 23. The second term begins June and ends July 28.

All the subjects required for the 30-hr. and 60-h teaching certificates will be taught if there is a deman for them. Other subjects will be taught as usual, pr vided enough students enroll for the subjects.

Rosthern Experimental Farm

In a recent letter received from J. C. Schmidt, he states the following:

"We are glad to inform you that our project is progressing very favorably. Donations are coming in every week . . . We praise God for undertaking for us in this way.

"We are living on the Farm since the latter part of October. Besides teaching in the Bible School, I supervise our work on the Farm at present. We purchased over 200 chickens and 175 sheep. The sheep cost about $1700, of which half has been paid in cash, the remainder on terms. Several people in town are buying cows for the Farm, receiving milk in return until the cows are paid for. We have thus started a dairy which is already showing favorable results.

"Machinery to work the Farm, including a tractor and six-horse outfit, has been donated for use on the Farm for one year. So the field work can be done with a minimum of expenses.

"We expect to get started with the Old People's Home in Spring. We need much guidance from the Lord in this undertaking, so please continue to remember us before the throne of Grace.

"At first we were desirous of paying the Farm in cash by January 1. However, according to the agreement papers, there is no direct advantage in paying for the Farm in one cash payment. We still receive our discount of 5 per cent as long as we meet our annual payment before the date specified (October 1). Thus we deemed it advisable to prolong the time in which to receive donations." —Dorothy Dietz, Secretary-Treasurer

Matter of Opinion

Francis Grover Cleveland, youngest son of the ex-President, early last year answered a critic of conscientious objectors in the Manchester (N.H.) Union. After stating that he was not a C.O., the writer pointed out that pacifists struggle with their own consciences and that it takes courage to "resist the pomp and circumstance of war, mass psychology, hysteria, and all the accoutrements which drive us into what you quite properly call the HELL of war, against a lifetime of better judgment. No, I think that to be a conscientious objector you must have courage of soul tenfold deeper than the courage of fighting. For you are answering a still small voice. All your young life, quietly and without ballyhoo, you have lived according to a certain theory—a theory which puts love of your fellow man, and love of God above any other love which may be thrust upon you. There is no furlough from this conscience, nor are there any exceptions to its application. Truly, these young men cannot fight for their freedom within your meaning of the word fight. For what is their freedom, if they lose their soul to keep it?" —American Friend

TREASURER'S REPORT

As a treasurer's report has not been published since that as of January 1, 1943, the following includes all entries since that time.

GENERAL FUND

Receipts
Balance Jan. 1, 1943	$101.10
Western District	32.00
Eastern District	12.00
Northern District	10.00
Pacific District	15.00
TOTAL RECEIPTS	170.10
Payments
Editor, Menn. Youth Pages	48.00

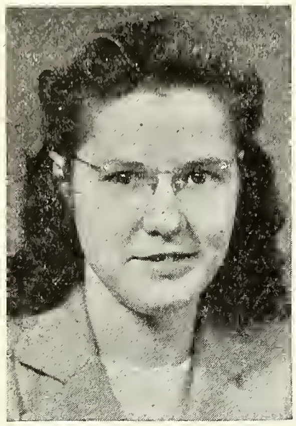
YOUTH JOTTINGS

—Reedley, California: Christian Endeavor Week, commemorating the sixty-third birthday of the founding of Christian Endeavor, was fittingly observed by the several societies of our church. On January 30 the Endeavor hour and the worship service hour were used for a joint program of all the societies. A lengthy, but, very interesting and challenging program was presented. A large audience had come to enjoy the program.

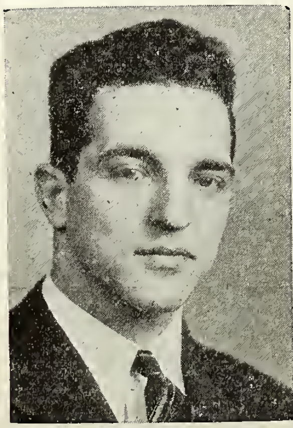
On Thursday evening more than two hundred attended the birthday banquet of Christian Endeavor. because the committees had all worked with enthusiasm and a fine spirit of cooperation the banquet was a splendid success. Not only was a delicious meal served, but the toasts tactfully mingled jest with seriousness to the edification and entertainment of all present. The spirit of Christian fellowship brought about a unity of feeling in Christian Endeavor, and a resolve to work with greater consecration in the various areas of our societies.



Ruth Neuenschwander

—Ruth Neuenschwander, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. A. J. Neuenschwander, graduated from Bluffton College in 1943. She was a highly esteemed student. Her major was economics. She completed her studies the first week in September and on September 7 she started her work as teacher of home economics in the Chester High School, near Wooster, Ohio. Chester is a rural consolidated school. She is living with a Mennonite family in Wooster and with them attends the Oak Grove Mennonite Church in Smithville, Ohio. She is a member of a large young women's class. Oak Grove belongs to the Old or American Mennonite branch.

—Willard Linscheid has transferred from the Fort Collins C.P.S. camp to the mental hospital at Norristown, Pa. Willard, who is the son of Mrs. J. E. Linscheid, the postmaster at the North Newton office, used to handle the heavy mail sacks containing The Mennonite when he was still at home. Willard must have been impressed by the weighty reading material many a time.



Herbert Fretz

—Herbert Fretz, a grandson of the late Allen M. Fretz, graduated from Bluffton College last year and is now pursuing a theological course at Westminister Seminary in Philadelphia, Pa. While a student at Bluffton he served as student pastor of various churches. Now he is serving the Mennonite Church at Perkasie, Pa.

—From the First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California: "The Sunshine Girls are meeting every other Saturday at 3:00 p.m. Any girl who is interested in "Scattering Sunshine" who is in grades six to eight may consider herself invited to meet with us. We are spending the time in a worth-while manner and enjoying it, too. Handkerchiefs in attractive Valentine holders were sent to children of missionaries and native workers. Now we are hemming dish towels for C.P.S. camps and are using thread of our favorite color to do it. Our next meeting is March 4."

—Report on Rural Life and Community School: Thirty young men from various branches of the Mennonite Church and other denominations have been selected from C.P.S. camps throughout the United States to take part in a Rural Life and Community School to be held at Unit 4, C.P.S. Camp, Hagertown, Maryland. The purpose of the school is to study agricultural methods and to digest community problems. Experts in the field of agriculture and men of experience in working in the rural community will be brought in to share their experience with the men.

The school bgean on January 22 with a "get acquainted" fellowship gathering at which time each member spoke concerning the things he hoped to achieve at the school. Everyone was interested in improving methods of farming and also acquiring knowledge concerning the building of Christian communities. Dr. Wilbur Stevenson, Chairman of Soil Conversaton work in Washington District, will supervise the classes in agriculture and speakers will be brought in to share ideas on the nature of a Christian community.

Services at Institution for Feeble-Minded

Rev. Walter H. Dyck is in charge of Sunday Morning Worship Services at the Nebraska Institution for Feeble-Minded near Beatrice during this month of February.

These services are being held between 8:55 and 9:30 a.m. About 850 out of the 1,600 are taking part in the singing of hymns and praying the "Lord's Prayer." Scripture lesson, prayer, and message are given by the pastor.

Mennonite young people's music groups are assisting in these services by rendering special music.

The attendants at these services file into the chapel in an orderly manner. One can see them lining up in front of their various dormitories long before it is actually time for the services to begin. The groups must await their turn to enter the chapel. A robed girl's choir does its share in leading the singing of the hymns.

Those who are sharing the experiences of these services realize with grateful hearts the many opportunities and blessings that God has bestowed upon them. May He be able to bless what is done "in His name."

"In the days ahead . . . Pigment is going to count for less and less. The white race boiled out of Europe following the fifteenth century and got considerable hold on the rest of the world. But even yet it does not numerically dominate the world. If we call the people of India brown, instead of members of the white race which they really are, then the Mongoloids with about 800 millions and the Indians with nearly 400 millions will considerably outnumber the whites who have about 500 million in Europe and 300 million elsewhere in the world (Ogburn and Nimkoff)."

A Woman "Looks In" on C. P. S.

By Mrs. Willis E. Rich

Mrs. Rich visited a number of C.P.S. camps not ago. Upon the request of the editor she was so l as to write of her experience. We are happy to ent a woman's "look-in" on C.P.S. —Editor) short time ago it was my privilege to visit several our C. P. S. camps. I knew when I responded to r kind invitation to be their guest for a few days, it would be a very enriching experience for me. as a woman who has lived all her life in a city ld not understand many of the farm problems n her first visit to a farm, so a plain housewife not understand or comprehend all the problems pportunities of a C. P. S. camp after a few days' . However, the things to be learned are sort of whelming.

Vhile making a tour of the camp, one notices, for ance, the bareness of the barracks. Each man onalizes his own small area of abode with pics, a few books, perhaps a radio,—there isn't much n. Some boys have curtains in front of their hes compartments. So, womanlike, I began to alize our women's Sunday School classes, or our nen's missionary societies, sewing uniform curtains all clothes closets and windows and little rufflies he same materials on shelves. This would give the acks a more home-like appearance. So I made iries. Well, the boys were very friendly and pathetic, (yes, sympathetic with me). But a understanding has began to dawn on me. These are not worried about the bareness of their acks, or about curtains or no curtains; they are erned about us at home in the churches. They don't want curtains, they want understanding; they want to know that the church at home is wholeheartedly back of them. They feel it and know it if there is lukewarmness or indifference or opposition.

And our boys don't want pity. They want to feel a spirit of unity with us,—a we-are-in-this-together sort of feeling. The hardest work our boys in C. P. S. have been doing is not digging ditches, or building dams, or fighting fires. It is thinking. They have been barraged with the necessity to think things out. They are learning that God's family is bigger than our own churches, that truth, beauty, and goodness are found in other patterns of thought from their own. They have worshiped with "other" children of God.

The thought occurred to me that perhaps our leaders of tomorrow, and those with the greatest contribution to make to our church, the world, and the Kingdom of God, will come from C. P. S. rather than from our ministerial training schools. Many of the boys are beginning to see that there is quite a step from accepting the cross of Christ to taking up one's own cross and following Him.

One campee was busy writing an article on the subject, "I Love God As Much As I Love the Man I Love Least." Is not this a profound thought? What a hard test for our love of God, for our Christianity. It might be a very profitable and soul-searching exercise for every church member to be required to write an essay on that subject.

Our C. P. S. men don't want curtains, or pity. They want understanding. They want us to do some real thinking. They want to face a difficult future with courage and faith and joy, together with us.

A Few Hours in Paradise

By Hiram Hilty

s story of a visit in Cuba, continued from Feb. 15)

e were getting deeper into the farm. On one lemons were growing, and a little farther were ges. Oranges, too, have that amazing quality he coconut—on the same tree are blossoms, halfn green fruit, and ripe oranges. It goes on that the year round. Near the base of an orange they called my attention to a plant which I from the city market—malanga. It grows a which vaguely resembles a sweet potato but when ed tastes like and fills the place of Irish potatoes. eed it to the baby. Of course there would be sea- of planting and seasons of digging malanga— no! When you have pulled up the malanga plant cut off the root for your daily bread you simply the de-rooted plant back into the ground and ows another root! Here were rows of banana- lantains, the staff of life of the Cuban household. fried, baked, boiled, made into flour. Next rows of Johnson bananas, the kind we eat in tates. Between the rows were pineapples, now ason. My host pointed to a tree loaded with of a fluffy, tan-colored substance resembling cotton. He picked up a tuft from the ground and said that they used it to stuff pillows, but that it produced a good quality thread for weaving and is used commercially. Now we were passing by sugarcane, nice cane, which will unfortunately not be cut this year because of lack of transportation due to the war. I thought that was about enough for one farm when my attention was called to just one more type of tree—a cacao tree. Now I was sure that my mother, at least, would agree with me that this was Paradise, for here she would be able to pick a handful of cacao beans off the tree, grind them up, and make her beloved cup of cocoa at will. There were a couple of cows running in the pasture, which would have provided the milk, too. Don Daniel apologized for not being able to take us over to see his patches of beans and corn. He is quite old and he felt that he had walked about far enough.

God and man had built this paradise together, but compared to the severe struggle of the farmer in the north it seemed that God was doing the greater part. But unfortunately God does not build houses for people, nor does he tell them what to eat or how to live a sanitary, healthful life. We happened upon one of Don Daniel's sons rebuilding a "bohio". The old house had gotten so badly out of shape that it seemed best to him to just start over again. He was planting two slender poles in the ground to form two corners of the new house and he was trying to get their tops level by means of a string stretched from one to the other. He had no level so Senor Guzman and I stood back and argued as to which side was higher until we finally struck a compromise. If that house is not level he has us to blame. The old house had had a dirt floor and the evidence was that the new one would be built of the same material. The palms had shed plenty of bark so that there was no dearth of materials. Everything needed to build that house was within a stone's throw and none of it was either rationed or high in price.

We wandered back over the "estate" toward the house and on the way made a few calls. Don Daniel's children (of which there are many) have by and large settled on Dad's farm, each building his own home. At one of the houses we were greeted by an attractive girl of perhaps 18 or 20 who was lady of the house, daughter-in-law of Don Daniel. Her eyes had that sparkle which one comes to expect in a Spanish senorita and her charm almost made one forget the filthy rags which she wore for clothing. Senor Guzman asked to see the son, whom, he said, was about a year old. Mother disappeared into the other room (the house had two rooms) to wash up the little shaver before presenting him to us in his Garden-of-Eden clothing. His little body gave no evidence of robust health. Then this little mother asked if we wanted to see the baby. The baby! Senor Guzman was as amazed as I was. Was there a new one? Yes—eleven days ago. "But Chica!"exclaimed her pastor, "be careful. You ought not to be doing your own work so soon!" The little mother shrugged her shoulders and smiled while she went back into the other room to bring the baby. Through the open door I saw her pick it up out of a hammock made apparently from a scarf stretched accross one corner of the room. To a man it was simply another eleven-day-old baby, red faced with pitch-black hair. As we left, the pastor repeated his admonition to the little mother to be careful. She threw up her hands in a helpless gesture and said that she knew—yes, she knew—but the yearling needed constant attention and there were the meals and things, and there was no one to help. I had first-hand information to confirm the fact that a year-old-baby needs constant attention. In our household it seems to take most of the time of three of us.

Another of the homes was middle-class, I should say. Guzman told me that previously the family had lived in the worst type of one-room Bohio but since they had given their lives to Christian living they had built even their dwelling anew. It was still a bohio, of bark and thatch, but it had a floor, which, while the workmanship was abominable, was of concrete, and the furniture was really amazingly good. All round the house was a really rather nice stone fence and there were some flowers and shrubs in the enclosure. The people were very nice and hospitable.

Most miserable of all was the home of one of t Don's daughters and her family. The outward mise of the bohio was more than matched by what found inside. Some dirt floors are tightly pack so that they are really not too bad, but this one w something like a recently cultivated cornfield. T very little bit of furniture in the house was of t most miserable type. The mother was sad-looki with a face that never changed expression, the ch dren were shy, thin, dirty. The little 2-year-old g was the most unfortunate of all. Her limbs we slender, her stomach sagged, her body was cover with sores. Her mother said that she had been eati fresh pineapple every night before she went to b and that she was throwing it up every night. S begged the minister to tell her what to do. He ma certain suggestions, which I did not understand ve well, with the air of an experienced doctor. For t family, apparently, he was the only doctor that exist To me it seemed that the only medicine that cou possibly help very much was sanitation and prop diet.

Thus do people live in Paradise. Small won that God drove the First Pair out of the Garden.

We visited many other homes down on Ma Street—some better, some worse. Those with wood floors are mostly ancient frame buildings whi while they are perhaps a bit more "civilized" th the bohio wholly lack its tropical charm and rus beauty. The people are brave, friendly, and h pitable. Those who have a few acres of land outsi the village always have enough to eat—that is enou of sorts. Those who have no land and must, li Don Daniel's son-in-law, depend upon day lab during the short cane season, work on the fruit far now and then, and on peddling another's things Banes—those are they who live in deepest misery.

We turned our horses back toward Banes. Goi down Main Street we passed again the homes of t people whom we had visited and they waved a called friendly greetings. We passed again the lit shack where we had found a courageous young m who had studied in Santiago teaching two little ch dren "readin', 'ritin', and 'rithmetic." We passed t little tumbled-down-woodshed-shoemaker's-shop wh we had talked to the broad-shouldered young m makes heavy work-shoes for his neighbors. We the village druggist and his wife coming home n work on horseback. The drug store resembles one he very poorest types of chicken coups in the ted States—and a small chicken coup at that. We past the grocery store which had reminded me he huts in which we used to play store when I was d—with empty tin cans. Night life was beginning ollect in the village saloon—the saloon resembled ell, I guess it vaguely resembled some of the st dives in the U. S. ight was falling and people were passing to and in a very leisurely manner on Main Street. Some coming home from a day's peddling in the city ome other sort of work outside the village, others going out to visit the neighbors. Not far out he village we met one of the familiar ox-carts n with provisions from the city. It was moving lowly that I wanted to try the ancient experiment setting stakes" to see if it really were moving. In bohios scattered along our trail lights began to er. They really did flicker, too, because the ıt" consisted of a tiny pin-point of flame from a cruse of oil. They must have used that kind of in Bible times. Abraham Lincoln's fireplace a mdern neon contraption by comparison. Oc- nally one would see a house very brilliantly lighted with a kerosene lamp of the type which is so familiar in much of rural North America. From one of the dimly lighted houses at the summit of a little hill I heard a sound of merry-making, so, in the darkness, we stopped our horses for a moment. They had a band—in the States we call it a "rhythm band." One of the instruments was a cow-bell, another a tin lid, another a gourd—and I think that was about all. They were all singing some weird thing that would roughly correspond to our American cowboy songs. On the open space in the floor, which could not have been more than about six feet square, one couple was singing and swaying to the rythm of the band.

The houses began to come faster, kerosene lamps became more frequent, here and there a roadside stand was lighted by a kerosene lantern, and life began to move in the streets. We were on the outskirts of Banes. In a few moments our horses' hoofs were clattering on the paved streets and we were passing under bright street lights between rows of magnificent palms. The houses were comfortable and brilliantly lighted and radios played soft music. Now and then I would detect a shortwave program in English. In a few hours, without benefit of Jules Verne transportation or comic-strip time-machine, I visited another world. We were now back in the world from which we had departed.

Other Churches Considering C.P.S. Units

A number of denominations have expressed their desire to administer a C.P.S. unit for their own C.O. members, probably a mental hospital unit like the Methodists are operating at Cherokee, Iowa. Groups indicating such interest are Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregational, Episcopal and Disciples of Christ.

Booklet on Prayer Sent to All Pastors

In a minister's life the duty of prayer can hardly be over-emphasized. His power depends upon his contact with God. How vital prayer is for a Christian servant is strikingly brought out in a little pamphlet by E. M. Bounds, called Power Through Prayer. The Evangelism Committee is sending a copy of this pamphlet to every minister of the conference. The booklet carries a message from God, we believe. Extra copies may be obtained at the rate of ten cents each and may be ordered from W. F. Unruh, Moundridge, Kansas.

IN MEMORIAM

ORVILLE DUANE BANSEMER, son of Herman and Elma Lehman Bansemer, was born at Halstead, Kansas, May 25, 1920, and passed away in a Naval Hospital at Long Beach, California, December 3, 1943. The funeral was conducted at Halstead, Kansas, with Rev. D. C. Wedel, Rev. T. R. Mordy and a navy chaplain assisting.

ELISABETH MESTER HUEBERT, daughter of Johann Christian Mester and Anna Mierau, was born August 18, 1862, in Langfuhr, Danzig, and died at Halstead, Kansas, October 6, 1943. After graduation from a teacehers' seminary in 1883 she was employed for several years as a governess. She and Dietrick Huebert were married in 1891 and the following year left for America. She is mourned by four sons: Otto, Johnnie, and Paul of Halstead and Ernest of Colorado Springs, and three daughters: Elizabeth and Margaret from the home and Mrs. Anna Dreese.

JACOB FRIEDRICH SCHMUTZ, son of Phillip and Christian Schmutz, was born August 6, 1860 at Bohnfeld, Germany, and died at Halstead, Kansas, October 13, 1943. With his parents he settled at Bolivar, Missouri, in 1871. In 1878 we was baptized by Rev. Peter S. Lehmann at Elcton, Missouri. Upon his arrival in Kansas he transferred his membership to the First Mennonite Church of Halstead.

HEINRICH MUELLER was born November 16, 1866, in Kothau at Ingolstadt, Bavaria, Germany, and died at Halstead, Kansas, July 27, 1943. When thirteen he was baptized by Rev. Adolph Ellenberger of the Mennonite Church at Mansheim. In 1886 he came to Halstead with his parents and in 1893 he married Katherine Stauffer. He is mourned by his two children, Karl Jacob Mueller and Esther Helen Mueller; four brothers, Sam Mueller, Rudolf Mueller, Jacob Mueller, all of Halstead, and Peter Mueller of Los Angeles; three sisters, Mrs. Helen Bahr, Miss Katherine Mueller, Miss Caroline Mueller, all of Halstead.

MRS. MARIE BAUMANN, daughter of Rudolph and Anna Luthy Stucky, was born in December 2, 1860, at Rothenbach, Switzerland, and died at Halstead, Kansas, November 26, 1943. She came to America in 1883 and in that same year married Fred Baumann. After having been a member of the Reformed Church at Rothenbach, Switzerland, she attended the German Methodist Church at Halstead and then became a member of the Mennonite Church there.

FRED BAUMANN, husband of Marie Baumann, died in November 30, 1943, four days after the death of his wife. Before becoming a member of the Mennonite Church at Halstead he also had been a member of the German Methodist Church there. The children who mourn the death of their parents are: John F. of Altus, Oklahoma: Ernest W. of Sioux City, Iowa; Fred L. of Valley Center; Jacob H. of Sedgwick; Alfred W. of Burrton; Bernhard H. of Halstead, and Mrs. Lizzie Grimsman of Mount Hope.

MRS. RUTH MARGARET ROPER, nee Haury, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Haury, was born August 25, 1916, at Halstead, Kansas, and departed from this life on February 11, 1944. After graduating from Bethel College in 1938 she taught in the Alexander, Kansas, High School. In 1931 she was baptized upon her confession of faith by Rev. H. T. Unruh and accepted into the membership of the Halstead Mennonite Church. In 1940 she was united in marriage to Christian D. Roper. The one son born to this union was taken with his mother to the world beyond the stars.

JOHN H. LANDIS, son of Aaron and Sarah Hager Landis, was born August 5, 1863, and died January 28, 1944. At fourteen he was baptized and received into the membership of the Flatland Mennonite Church, near Quakertown, Pa. He married Caroline Knechel in 1886. He is survived by Mrs. Ada Ahlum, Mrs. Helen —Bethel Mennonite Church, Winton, California: God blessed us wonderfully with harvests the past year. Clarence Hofer of Dinuba was our guest speaker at the Harvest and Mission Festival that we held in October. The sewing circle sale in December netted over $300.00. Part of this went for relief and part for missions. About $1300.00 was given last year for various causes: Red Cross, Gideons, home and foreign missions, C.P.S. camps, war chest, including our offerings in Sunday School and church. Rev. J. R. Barkman of the Grace Children's Home was with us last Wednesday evening and gave us a good, inspiring message and also showed pictures of the home. We expect Rev. J. H. Langenwalter to be with us for a week beginning March 12. Our attendance has showed an increase lately. Pray for the work here.—Mrs. J. P. Glanzer, Corr.

JOTTINGS

—The bulletin of the First Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, now has an attractive picture of its meetinghouse on the front side. The Senior Christian Endeavor of this church recently had as its main topic "Qualifications for Church Membership." (Certainly this is a subject that deserves much thought.)

—This morning some bulletins from the Grace Mennonite Church, Pandora, Ohio, came to the editor's desk. These are probably the first to arrive from this church. The editor hopes they will be sent regularly. Mrs. S. W. Steiner, who sent them, writes, "Rev. Lester Hostetler, pastor of the Bethel College Church, has been chosen as speaker for the pre-Easter services for the week of March 12-19. The Missionary Society in a recent all-day sewing sorted and mended used clothing which was later sent to the M.C.C. Consecration services were held February 6 for Prof. Russell A. Lantz of Bluffton College as Minister of Music of the Grace Church. He began his work as director of music in January. The church began printing its own bulletins in January. Our pastor, Rev. Forrest Musser, who is an artist as well as pastor, drew the picture on the cover. The bulletin also contains Bluffton College news.

—Dr. Harold Bender, Dean of Goshen College, will be he Vesper speaker at Bluffton College on March 12.

—The First Mennonite Church, Hutchinson, Kansas, oined some other churches on February 13 in a service at which the sound picture, "The Power of God," was shown.

—Brother J. B. Epp writes from Lincoln, Nebraska: Since September we are here again. Last summer we were on the farm near Beatrice. Fine Christian octors in every place are helping us (gratis) to watch our health; and so we are getting along quite well. The Lord is providing for our daily needs. Whatever strength we have left we want o use in the Lord's service. We have always ound work for Him wherever we have gone. At resent we are assisting our son Theodor in his rowing radio service. The Wolga-German eads, "Our offering next Sunday . . . will be for eople (I am from the Wolga) of whom there re 15,000 here in Lincoln, appreciate our visits o their meetings very much. Their services are ostly in German yet; this separates them some-hat from others. Here I have all the opportu-ities to speak that I want. The so-called 'breth-en and sisters' among them have their own eetings besides the regular church services, our times a week. Here especially they welcome outsiders. . . . There is no Mennonite Church n the city. A group of "C.O.'s are placed near he Agricultural College. These may form a ucleus for a 'Mennonite Fellowship' here."

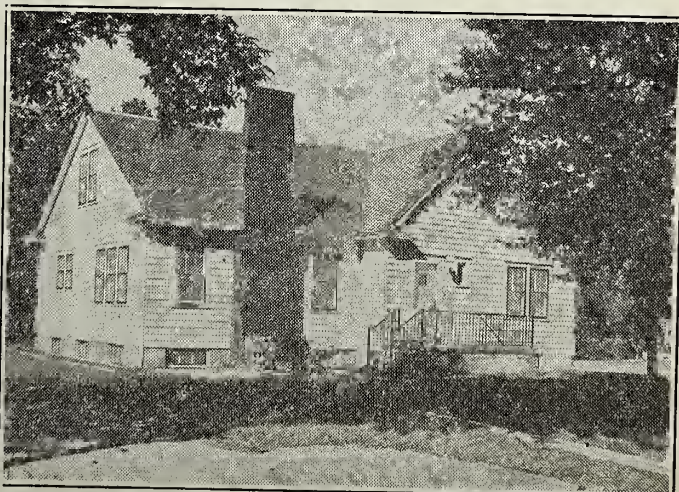
—The Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Mound-dge, Kansas, of which Brother Garman H. edel is pastor is now publishing an attractive urch bulletin with a picture of its meeting-ouse on the front. An item in Vol. 1, No. 1 ads, "Our offering next Sunday . . . will be for the building fund of the Walton Mennonite Church."

—Bulletin, Second Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: "Our offering today is dedicated to our Civilian Public Service which is our testimony that the Lord's Word is not to kill and destroy, but to save and build up. Our young men give themselves to such work without remuneration and honor among men. Let us encourage them and honor the Lord with doing our part and more that this testimony may be something to glorify our Father, who is in heaven."

—Adopted in November, 1943, the new constitution of the Zion Mennonite Church, Elbing, Kansas, gives as its article of confession: "This congregation in accordance with the Mennonite Church in general, recognizes and acknowledges the Holy Scriptures, both the Old and New Testament, as the only and infallible rule of Christian faith and life. 'For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ.' (I Cor. 3:11) The congregation holds fast to the doctrine of baptism upon the confession of faith, the Holy Communion as a memorial of the suffering and death of Christ, the refusal to take oaths, Biblical non-resistance, avoiding affiliation wth secret organizations and the exercising of a scriptural church discipline."

—Bethel College Fellowship committees from the churches of the Western District assembled for a dinner meeting in Memorial Hall on February 18. A total of 248 people were present. The speakers were: P. A. Penner, Bernhard Bargen, William Voth, Mrs. Marvin Neufeld, Willis Rich, and Ed. G. Kaufman. The outstanding recommendation adopted provides that this year the every-member visits be carried out as nearly simultaneously as possible. This means that college representatives will not be called upon to assist, and as such it places the matter of securing funds for Christian education on a basis more nearly like that of missions, etc. March 15 has been suggested as the date for the simultaneous debt liquidation effort. Friends of the school will watch with great interest the effort to wipe out the old debt which has been reduced from $141,329 to $73,646.00 in the past ten years. By February 19 approximately $26,500 had come in. This should be adequate for running expenses, and amounts now coming in will eat away at the remaining debt.

—"The Education Committee of the Middle District Conference is sending Rev. H. E. Nunemaker to visit all the Sunday Schools in the Conference. He will be in our church Sunday evening, March 5. He will speak on Christian Education and would like to meet all Sunday School workers."—Bulletin, Eicher Emmanuel Mennonite Church, near Noble, Iowa.



This is the parsonage of the Bethel College Mennonite Church. The Brotherhood of this church raised $1,646.26 during 1943 for the liquidation of the debt on the parsonage. It has set for itself the goal of raising $1,524.32 in 1944 so that the debt might be erased entirely during the year.

—Burrton Mennonite Church, Burrton Kansas: On February 20 an offering was held for the building fund of the Walton Mennonite Church. On the evening of February 27 the Halstead C. E. gave a return program.

—Buhler Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kansas: A recent offering for C.P.S. dependents amounted to $80.19. The pulpit furniture which was ordered last June is expected to arrive soon. The student volunteers of Bethel College brought us a program on February 27. On February 28 the social and parsonage committee sponsored a fellowship supper. This was for the purpose of strengthening the bond of fellowship and raising funds for a parsonage.

—Bulletin, Salem Mennonite Church, Dalton, Ohio: "Rev. Donovan E. Smucker is broadcasting over radio station WAKR, Akron, every Sunday morning from 9:15 to 9:30. The pastor does not want to have a part in causing anybody to be late for Sunday School, but he does recommend that whenever possible you listen to Rev. Smucker's fine broadcasts at that time." (The First Mennonite Church of Wadsworth sponsors the broadcast referred to.)

—Freeman Junior College has now come to the last of its debt. Sufficient money has come in to pay it. As soon as some of the Civilian Bonds can be cashed the last creditor will be paid. Thus by August 31, 1944, when the fiscal year ends, the school should be debt free, this in face of the fact that in 1942 the debt stood at $41,651.-18. At its peak in 1935 it was $63,212.27. Writing of the liquidation of the debt Brother J. D. Unruh, president of the school says, "For this happy turn we are most grateful to our heavenly Father who has so graciously enabled us to reach this long sought objective. We thank the many friends who kept on giving through the years —never losing faith in the ultimate outcome—likewise the men who were willing to give of their time and means to carry on the actual work of solicitation in the churches deserve commendations. Board members and teachers too need our praises for their efforts to 'keep going' amidst most trying circumstances."

—Oklahoma Bible Academy: "The students of the Bible Department enjoyed a Valentine party on February 11 at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Jantzen. After an evening of games and fun refreshments were served. . . . At the close the group participated in a short devotional. Two former students, who are now in C.P.S. visited us recently and spoke to the student body. The O.B.A. gave a C.E. program in the local church on February 13.

—Eden Mennonite Church, Inola, Oklahoma: A heart-testing sermon was given by our pastor, S. Mouttet on February 13. "Called to be a Christian, A Christian's Call, Obedience to the Call." The C. E. has again in mind to support one of our own "Go-Ye Mission" workers in the Ozarks this summer.

—Brother George S. Stoneback writes that soon he is to tour some C.P.S. camps and that later on he will plant his "young" farm. He is now taking some school work in Philadelphia in addition to his pastoral work. He is taking a course in "The Family" under Dr. Abrams, who wrote the book, Preachers Present Arms. Dr. Abrams is also collecting material on this war.

—The Dorcas Society of the Wayland, Iowa, Mennonite Church recently gave a mission program on "Stewardship."

—Fairfield, (Pa.) Mennonite Church: "Under the leadership of Rev. Stoneback our church has taken steps to beautify the building and grounds. A blue velour Dossal curtain was placed on the wall back of the pulpit, and the pulpit and communion table were covered with red silk brocade. The Bible marker is also of this same material."—Corr.

——Brother David Wedel, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Halstead, Kansas, and also President of the Western District Conference, will teach a course on "Church Administration" at Bethel College this coming quarter.

—Brother and Sister Malcolm Wenger, who have been studying at Bethel College, plan to leave their work there around March 1 to take up their mission work among the Cheyenne Indians of Montana. Brother Wenger chose I John 5:19 as his text for his recent message to the student body. He pointed out that while many people in the Occident are inclined to think and feel that as long as their physical needs are supplied they are all right, the people of the Orient see and feel a need for something more. The world lies in darkness. Speaking of the Cheyenne Indians he said, "Already, we feel somewhat of a responsibility towards these people." He then showed how the white man has often treated the Indian unjustly as illustrated in the story of the Cherokee nation. He made the significant conclusion that we know the world's need and that the answer to it is not the way we live or act, but Christ.

—Buhler Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kan.: Dr. Norman B. Harrison, noted author and Bible lecturer, served the Buhler community with lectures on "Better Christian Living" in the afternoon. The study for the evening services was the Book of Ephesians. A spiritual revival is good for the soul; it helps us to strive to live and serve like our Saviour taught us to live when He was on earth. The four churches sponsoring the meetings were: Hoffnungsau, Hebron, Mennonite Brethren, and Buhler Mennonite.——Corr.

—Brother H. A. Fast is still a very busy man. In addition to carrying a large teaching load he still takes an active part in the work of the Mennonite Central Committee of which he is vice-president and of whose work he is very well nformed. Frequently he has to take the train to Chicago to attend meetings of the M.C.C. and subcommittees. Such a trip he again made on the week-end of February 26.

—Ninety-four Mennonite men are in a C.P.S. mental hospital unit at Norristown, Pa. This is the largest number in any such unit. The largest number of Mennonite men in one regular C.P.S. camp is now forty-six in camp No. 33.

History of M.C.C.

s Told by P. C. Hiebert To Campers at North Fork

We campers of North Fork Camp did consider it great privilege to have P. C. Hiebert in our midst r one much too short evening, on November 24. rother Hiebert is the President of Sterling College, terling, Kansas, and he also serves as President of e Mennonite Central Committee of which he is the ly charter member at the present time.

During the one evening he was in our midst he gave a brief history of the organization and work of the ommittee. In his speech he told us of the three ain phases in the history of the M.C.C.

The first great task of the Committee, as related Brother Hiebert, was to administer relief to our llow Mennonites and others who might also be ached during the terrible famine in Russia in 1920. t that time there were 60,000 Mennonites in the .S. and they were supplying daily food to 43,000 ople in Russia. It was the enormous task of the . C. C. to administer the acquisition and distribution the food evenly and properly. In fact every bit food had to be accounted for. It was this part the work that produced a touch of real drama, for concerned this camp directly. Through this relief oject, the life of one of our fellow campers, then ly a baby, was saved. Few of us in camp realized fore this that through the efforts of some God-aring men some twenty years ago our lives here and w would be directly affected.

The second big task of the M.C.C. again concerned e Mennonites in Russia. It was during the time at so many of the Russian people were being shipped Siberia. For an unknown reason some 4,000 Mennites were shipped south to the border of Germany d the German Government permitted them to come but not to stay. The M.C.C. stepped in to help ieve the people in their distress. Upon the investition of places to go to, it was found that the small intry of Paraguay in South America would permit unwanted mingrants to settle in its borders. The C.C. bought 300,000 acres of land and enough ipment for each family to get started and moved entire group to this new unexplored country. A n was outlined whereby each family could keep own farm by a long time payment plan. So far has met with varied success.

he third and present phase of the unit is familiar to st of us. We realize that the M.C.C. is carry- a great load in administering its share of the C.P.S. program. Few of us realize that as early as 1937, the Friends, Brethren, and Mennonites saw the possibilities of military conscription and that a delegation representing the three bodies had a personal interview with President Roosevelt concerning the matter. Dr. Hiebert, in a very interesting way, told us the highlights of the visit.

Dr. Hiebert closed his speech by admonishing us to strive for that one great degree A.U.G. (Approved Unto God) as Paul admonished Timothy.

What Do We Expect of Our Pastors

By Carl M. Lehman

(The following article constitutes the "practical notes" of Lesson 7, May 28, in the Mennonite Senior-Adult quarterly.)

What do we as average church members expect of our pastors? Perhaps, too much, considering how prone we are to criticize and how reticent to encourage them. But Paul tells about a number of things in his letter to the Thessalonians which we feel we would like to have our pastors consider.

First, we would like to have our pastor know, as Paul knew that his work is not in vain. We do not want a discouraged pastor, for we fear he would have little to offer us. We want one who is confident that the seed he is sowing will bear fruit. Such confidence is contagious; it will not only help him but it will also help us.

We want our pastor to be bold. Paul had been beaten and thrown into prison at Philippi before he came to Thessalonica, but this did not keep him away from the synagogue nor keep him from declaring to the Jews gathered there that this Jesus whom he preached was the Christ. Neither do we want anyone to tell our pastor what he must preach. We want him always to preach that which he knows is true.

We do not want his exhortation ever to be deceitful or in guile. We want him to be genuine—sincere to the core. If he is not, we will know it and lose all confidence in him.

We do not want him to speak to please us, rather to please God who has entrusted the gospel to him. At times we will not like this, but we hope we will be men enough never to be satisfied with mere flattering words. If he should seek the glory of men, we will try not to despise him for it, but we may not succeed.

We want him to be gentle and understanding.

"Gentle as a nurse with her children," Paul says. We do not want him to be so authoritative that he will refuse to listen to our own peculiar point of view, for sometimes we might be right.

We want him to like us, and to be interested in the things we are trying to do. He may find this hard to do, but he must remember that "if I have not charity I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." Paul told the Thessalonians that they were so dear to him that he would have given to them not only the gospel, but his own soul. We would like that kind of a pastor.

Paul laboured night and day for them. His life was just and holy, and blameless among them. He exhorted, comforted, and charged everyone of them as a father does his children. He did all of this that they might walk worthy of God, into whose kingdom they had been called. We would like that to be our pastor's deepest desire, too.

Testimonies From C.P.S. Men

(At C.P.S. Camp No. 34, Bowie, Maryland, several of the campers were asked to present in a few words their "Testament of Faith." The following are testimonies from three Mennonite campers)

"To completely reveal the faith by which I live, I must oblige you to read and believe 'The Bible.' Not the Sermon on the Mount, or the Charity Chapter, but every jot and tittle of the sacred volume. The whole Bible is the inspired Word of God. On these sacred pages, you will find the principles of life which challenge my every thought, action, and deed.

"Present day methods demand that everything be tested and proven to declare the strength or durability or value of the given object. For everyone of us there is also given a standard of measure to which we all submit either consciously or unconsciously. 'Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.' (I Cor. 10:31). Let me run this test every day, every hour, every minute.

"The adage often repeated, 'A chain is not stronger than its weakest link' fittingly refers to the chain of events of life. How rapidly we do forge the links of life's chain, for each thought, each action, each deed becomes a link, and if one fails to glorify God, he must reforge that link lest the whole chain be useless. 'I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me.' (Galatians 2:20). When Christ is the indwelling personality in you and me, we shall do all to the glory of God.' " —Ivan J. Rohrer

"Around the story of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, centers my philosophy of life. I believe in the virgin birth of Jesus. I believe in him as the only Savior. I believe that there is still that same spiritual, moral, and physical healing power through Jesus. By the help and grace of God I mean to follow Jesus, His Teachings, His Word, the Bible, to the best of my ability. I believe he is able to heal all the ills of this war-torn world today. 'What will you do with Jesus, who is called the Christ?' "

—Isaac F. Detweiler

"There are many things we can do without. But we cannot do without food, air, water—they are the essentials of life. Likewise, Christ is indispensable for the spiritual life. We cannot be saved without Christ. It is only through Him that we find forgiveness of sins, reconciliation with God, a knowledge of His will, the power to conquer evil and to attain the fulness of joy and love and peace.

Before Christ ascended into Heaven, He said, 'And, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.' Tennyson said, 'Closer is He than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet.' I put my hand in His and together we live from day to day ever dependent upon Him." Lester J. Zimmerman

In Tabernacles

Israel of old lived in tabernacles for eight days every year in order to commemorate their journey through the desert. It was also to remind them of their frailties and the necessity of depending upon and trusting God. Living in tabernacles further is to remind human beings of our temporary abode in this our body. It behooves us all to build more permanent mansions in the eternal home. Yes, there is a lasting place prepared for us (John 14:2).

There is a very interesting desire in our school boys in India to go out into the forest once a year and build huts of branches and foliage and live in them for several days, or even a week. So during the Indian harvest festival, towards the end of November, our whole school goes out, some five miles from the mission station for a camp in booths. Huts are constructed, measuring about ten by eight, and a floor is carpeted from leaf mold. Usually a dozen huts are built, and prizes are given for the best and second best. The whole camp is organized. Certain boys do the cooking. Other must be watchmen, because it is wild native forest with wild animals at large. So there must be a twenty-four hours a day watchfulness. This is accomplished in shifts of three hours for each group or team. The greatest part of the day is spent in communion with nature's God and our heavenly Father. There are classes, discussions, and camp fires. But the big purpose is to live with God in the beauty of His creation. There may come sneaking snakes, and scorpions. For me too the boys had prepared such a leaf hut, and at first it seemed a bit unprotected. But the assurance that God is near drives all fear of danger away. Boys come back from these camps with a renewed Christian joy, because they experience new fellowship with the Father in the open where artificial things do not hinder. It is a wonderful experience for us all. The whole school looks forward to this annual event. —John Thiessen

"Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue, Keepeth his soul from troubles." Prov. 21:23.

"Being Found by God"

By Donovan E. Smucker

Last time we presented a disturbing picture of godlessness. At the conclusion of the message a great spiritual question clamored for attention. Indeed, it demanded immediate, urgent treatment! Like the tortured heart of ancient Job, we now repeat this plaintive plea: "How Can I Find God?"

At the very outset, as Leslie Weatherhead suggests, we must change the wording of this piercing question. This change is needed because of the real nature of God recorded in Holy Scripture. There Jesus paints many vividly revealing pictures of the Heavenly Father. God was likened to a shepherd seeking his sheep on the mountains. God was likened to a woman seeking a lost coin, "until she find it." God was likened unto a father seeking the salvation of his wayward Prodigal Son. Thus, the Lord is searching, seeking, striving, for us. Searching, seeking, striving all the time; a steadfastness of purpose which puts to shame our little quest for Him." The Bible calls this characteristic of God, grace. Hence, the proper question for us is simply this: "How Can I put Myself in the Way of Being Found By God?"

You see this puts the tension on each one of us. For, here is where an obvious truth clamors for attention. Since God is seeking us constantly, the very minute we seek Him with our whole heart then in an instant comes that merging of God and man known as salvation. But the difficulty comes with those words, "with our whole heart." The truth is that we want God and we do not want God. Thus, there is a ghastly conflict in our hearts which defeats our quest and ruins our experience.

As a matter of fact, there are three common ways of hiding from God, even when we profess to be sought by Him.

First, is the refusal to repent! Today it seems to me that we have just enough religion to make us miserable. Our consciences are touched but our souls are not saved. Dwight L. Moody has made it crystal clear what repentence is all about. It is not mere fear (Prayers which take place only during storms are mainly expressions of fear.) It is not mere feeling. (Men in the penitentiary feel bad, very bad. They are sorry they were caught.) It is not simple remorse. (Judas felt remorse and committed suicide.) It is not painful penance. (The Buddhist lives on a bed of spikes without repenting.) It is not conviction of sin. (Mere awareness of guilt is not repentence.) It is not prayer by itself alone. (Even the Pharisee prayed.) It is not good resolutions. (From the beginning of time men have tried to lift themselves by their own bootstraps.) It is not even breaking off from some particular sin. (A ship may have three leaks and be sinking. To patch up one of the leaks will not stave off disaster.) Well, if it is not all these things what is it? Repentence is turning right about. A soldier would call it right about face. As someone has said, a man is born with his back towards God. When he truly repents he turns right about and faces God!

Of all the barriers to repentence the greatest is this: down deep in our hearts is the suspicion that, after all, the sinner is having a better time than the saint. We keep looking over our shoulders, keeping our eyes on the world. Yet, the essence of repentence is Joy! A Joy which Christ tells us, the very angels in heaven share. Luke 15:17 gives the verse, "Joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth. Therefore, if you would know the joy of Godliness, first of all, you must repent. Listen to Psalm 24: "Who shall ascend into the Hill of the Lord? or, who shall stand in His holy place? . . . He that hath clean hands and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul to vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation."

The second barrier to be overcome, is the refusal of right relations with other people. Our Lord gives this teaching in the Sermon on the Mount: "If therefore thou are offering thy gift at the altar and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee, leave there thy gift at the altar; first to be reconciled to thy brother and then come and offer thy gift." Frank Buchman points out that his conversion required the writing of six letters to men whom he had wronged. He did not get six replies from these notes, but he got tremendous release. Consider the story of the romance of a young couple attending Oxford University in Great Britain.

The man was studying for the ministry and the young woman was planning to be a doctor. They decided to get married on the condition that she continue her own profession as a doctor for which she had a great natural aptitude and love. He also promised to engage a housekeeper to do the house duties. They were happily married and soon settled down in a large English city. She became the specialist in children's diseases in that place. He became an eloquent and famous preacher. Then trouble began. The minister became jealous of his wife's professional fame. Hence, he wanted her to do more entertaining at home, particularly as the congregation grew in size. Meanwhile, he had failed to provide a housekeeper. Naturally, the wife began to fret over the situation. But, she managed to carry on and just squeeze through in time and energy.

During the next seven years, however, four children arrived. Their coming definitely ended her practice as a doctor. She had thought it over and decided to place her duty as a mother over her duty as the outstanding child specialist of the city. Then she tried to talk over her great renunciation with her husband. She did not want help as much as sympathy and loving understanding. Here the minister failed her completely and utterly. He jumped to an unwarranted conclusion. He assumed that she still preferred her career and wanted to break away from him. Soon the husband's inability to give this sympathy began to prey on the mind of this brilliant but sad woman. She did her duty for sixteen years while brooding on his failure to appreciate the cross she was bearing. And those around her did not have the slightest idea of the struggle going on in her mind. The community, of course, keenly felt her loss in the medical field. Meanwhile, her husband developed into an even greater power in the city. She supported him in every way for the two were much sought after. Then, quite suddenly the husband died!

After the funeral it was discovered that he had made bad investments. He had not shown dishonesty but poor judgment. Whatever the reason there was no money for the family. The oldest son was about to finish law school and the youngest was in kindergarten. All these school arrangements were smashed. Inevitably her mind flew back to her old profession. She made inquiries and discovered that medicine had progressed so far she was hopelessly out of date. But she decided to take any offering, working as a nurse in a doctor's office; a medical assistant at a nursery; she took in boarders; as a matter of fact, she did most everything.

All the time there was the unhappy, haunting memory. It beat like a savage tom-tom on her brain.

My husband blocked my career!
My husband refused me sympathy!
My husband ruined my life in trivial tasks!

Day after day, hour after hour, these thoughts went through her mind. She was actually afraid of going insane. "My husband ruined my life" went back and forth through her heated brain. Then she lost all religious faith; lost all sense of reality of the Living God. She was ready for a tragic, cruel crack-up! Then she met a concerned Christian worker. She demanded to know the price of finding God. Oh, how can I find God, she wailed and lamented. She soon discovered. The price was high. She must be prepared to surrender this terrible resentment against her husband. Never mind who was at fault! But, yield up this poison. Finally, she did this, realizing that her sin was unforgiveness. The peace of God returned to her. Joyously she told her story to her oldest son! He joined her in the glorious new life of release which followed. Indeed, how true are these words from the Sermon on the Mount," first be reconciled to thy brother and then offer thy gift." Friends, I beg of you to surrender your hates, dislikes and resentments. Surrender them now if you would know the peace of God which passeth all understanding.

There is a final barrier to be overcome in seeking God. It is familiarity with organized religion. This may sound strange, coming from a Christian minister —but it is true. As one of the great London parsons put it, "One of the things which holds back progress in modern church life is the presence of vast numbers of people who not only have had no real experience of God, but do not believe there is anything to find save what they have found. They are a dead weight which the church has to carry. And, at one point after another they spoil the church's witness because the so-called outsider judges the value of religion from them. 'Come and join us,' they say, 'and find what we've found.' The outsider replies, 'If what you've found makes you what you are, I don't think I want it.' " How sad it makes me to repeat these words of truth. Some time ago the Archbishop of Canterbury invited some clergy to spend a quiet day in considering their problems together. One preacher wrote back and said, "Your Grace, in my village we do not need a quiet day, we need an earthquake!" It is significant that Jesus displayed His strongest language in regard to the Scribes and Pharisees. They were the most religious people of His day. They obeyed the Law but knew not the Heavenly Father. "Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men." (Matt. 23:13.) But, God Almighty doesn't want it that way. He seeks us now, this very minute. Let us repent. Let us be reconciled with our brother. Let us send our hum-drum religion to the Heavenly dry-cleaner. Let us find the greatest reality in all the world, the saving love of God. Let us pray.

And now may the peace of God which passeth all human understanding, be in our hearts and minds through Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Origin of Our Denomination

By C. H. A. van der Smissen

Where do we find the origin of our denomination? The Old Evangelical Brethren, Baptizers (Taufer) Bapistminded (Taufgesinnte) now called Mennonites? Our enemies like to place our origin in the fanatical and rebellious leaders of the sixteenth century, the Zwickau Prophets, of whom Nikolas Storch was the chief leader and in Thomas Muenzer, the leader of the rebellious peasants, but above all in the rebellious Anabaptists of Muenster, in whom they find the zenith of Anabaptism, begun in Saxonia and about 1525 in Zuerich.

In 1881 Professor De Hoop Scheffer of the Baptistminded Seminary wrote in Herzogs Real-Encyclopaedia about the origin of our denomination, "It is possible that these opinions have a connection with the views of sects of the middle ages, especially with those of the Waldenses, but the evidence is missing." Since 1881, when the above was written, many old manuscripts have been found, and many historical works on the history of our denomination have appeared.

Dr. Stark says at the close of his argument, "What we have given here is sufficient to convince everybody, that the sectarians, who now made their appearance and who on account of their opinions about baptism were called Anabaptists, have not at all been a new party, but descended from the former sects of the Waldenses, Petrobrusians, Hendricians, Spirituals, Tisserands, Albigensees and others of different names. Dr. Keller tries also to prove the outward connection.

The space in this paper is too limited to allow us to go into the particulars of these evidences of a connection. May it suffice to submit a few evidences for the inward and for the outward connection.

First then, as to the inward connection. Among the Waldenses, as well as with the Old Evangelical Baptizers, only believers could become members of the congregation and this congregation of saints (in the sense of the New Testament, Eph. 4, 12) was purified of unworthy members by church discipline. The Waldenses, and originally the Moravians (they later accepted infant baptism from the Lutherans) received their members by baptism on confession of faith. Waldenses and Baptizers did not believe in purgatory; they prohibited the oath. Most of the members of the two denominations did not go to war, and they did not become magistrates. Both elected their ministers out of the congregation, but some were eminently learned men.

The Waldenses sent after the Reformation their confession of faith by two messengers to Oekolawpad, reformed leader of Basel. He answered by telling them in what the Reformed differed from them. This would have been as suitable for the Baptizers of Switzerland. One of the messengers was caught in Dijon, put in prison and burnt; the other escaped with the letter. Oekolawpad said: "Those, which have been baptised by the Baptists, we do not rebaptize. We are subject to the worldly government in those things, which are not against God, we honor the government, and believe: that a Christian can be an officer of the government. When the government demands an oath of us, we do not refuse to do it, in spite of what Matthew says. We are not so hard, that we call those which lend money to others and take interest, usurers. We do not think, that it is against the law of God, when the judges and worldly government punish the criminals and that they engage in war to defend our own country and protect the widows and orphans. As far as the teachers are concerned, it pleases us, that you do not accept any one for that, but accept such, who are of good age and do conduct a pious life; but excuse us, when we say: that we think, that with you they are loaded too much with handy work, as belongs to their calling, and that they give too much time to work, which they ought to use to read good books."

To show, that not only the Baptizers, but also their enemies knew of the connection between the Waldenses and the Baptizers, we quote the following: "The lawyers in the imperial court writing the mandate of April 28, 1529, call the Anabaptists an old sect. They say, "We find daily in spite of the above common law and the mandate, which we have sent, that the old sect of Anabaptism, a sect condemned and prohibited these many hundred years, keeps increasing and breaking forth more and more." A Jesuit, Jac. Gretser, called "Hammer of the Heretics", about the year 1600 edited the report of the inquisitor Reimarus of 1260 and makes the following remarks: "Here we see the real image of the heretics of our times, especially of the Anabaptists. The description given by the inquisitor of the Waldenses of his time, with the exception of the sentence, They do not carry on commerce, corresponds to the description of the Anabaptists." The inquisitor says "They are quiet and modest in their conduct, they display no luxury in their exterior, using neither costly nor worthless apparel. They do not carry on commerce, abstain from lies, swearing and cheating, but are satisfied like mechanics with what they earn by manual labor. They do not strive for riches, but are satisfied with the necessities. They are also chaste, especially the Leonists (Waldenses). They are temperate in eating and drinking. They do not go into the taverns neither to the dancing, or other vain pleasures. They desist from anger, continually they are busy, learning and teaching, and therefore pray too little. They can be known by their simple and modest way of speaking; they are careful not to use idle or frivolous words and to slander or to speak a lie, or an oath.

Theobald 1628 says, "I herewith confess, that our German historians in this have recorded very little or almost nothing. But the Gauls testify that many hundred years ago Anabaptist people, as for instance after the death of John Husz in Bohemia the Adamites, Picards, etc., who acted like good Anabaptists and the fanatics in Germany after the restoration of the gospel have sufficiently practiced, by which their origin is given, without much circumlocution. As far as the outward connection between the Waldenses and the Old Evangelical Baptizers is concerned, the Anabaptists of Austria knew of a connection from the time of the Apostles.

Bishop Friedrich Reiser of the Waldensians wrote in 1458, "Friedrich Reiser, by the grace of God bishop of the Believers in the Roman Catholic Church, which have not accepted the present of Constantin (the state church)." So there was a church of believers in the Roman Church. Dr. Keller found a reason for the connection between the Waldenses and the Old Evangelical Baptizers, because the Baptizers preferred the old German Bibles, of which there were fourteen editions before the Lutheran and Zwinglian, which the Baptizers called falsified Testaments. The "Tauferbibel (Baptizers Bible) had three editions, and Luther copied the translation of the prophets, saying "The heretics have done a good work." The state church has burned all the "Taufer" Bibles they could find. They are very scarce.

Sebastian Frank said in 1494:

> All lands are full of holy Scriptures
> And what refers to the saving of souls.
> So much that one must wonder
> That no one gets converted by it.

But the Brethren, as they called themselves, did good work before and after the Reformation.

Second Printing of "Must Christians Fight?"

If your order for this book has not been filled, it is due to the fact that the first printing has been exhausted. A second printing is going to the press which will run 10,000 copies. Plans have also been made for a Canadian printing.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

WISH THEM EXPERIENCE

We are glad to see the desire of our mission candidates to get some actual experience at home before they go to the field, as a part of their training. Whether this experience can be gotten among the prisoners of war or the interned aliens or otherwise, we should do all we can to help our candidates get it. Two of our new recruits, Brother and Sister W. E. Harder, are getting it now in Oraibi, Arizona, before they go to Africa, we hope, this coming spring. Our Board and other boards have also had their eyes open for opportunities among the Japanese and war prisoners. About a year ago one of our returned missionaries from China was asked by the Board to look for open doors of this kind. At that time it was still difficult to do much. The whole country was so stirred up about the fear of spies among the foreigners. This fear has diminished much, and if the war should last much longer, their doors, very likely, will be opened for some such mission work as the above article proposes. Our Board will keep its eyes open for them, especially doors, that would not require the learning of a foreign language, which is a matter of years.

One of the chief obstacles in this kind of mission work will be that so many of these prisoners and foreigners are being moved from place to place, so that a church can hardly be established among them. And without a church center, experience shows, young Christians easily fall away and lose themselves again in the world. But if other doors remain closed, it would be better to do what can be done in spite of these handicaps, than to sit and wait.

ONLY A ROCK

It was only a rock, but being a very large one, its weight caused it to become dislodged and slide down into the irrigation ditch. Now there is hardly any water in the canal. The rice fields lie almost waste. The water of this ditch was life and food for many villagers, some of whom are Christians. Efforts were made to build the ditch around the rock, but the rock only buried itself deeper, shutting off the channel.

In India the common expression of helpless resignation is, "Ham kya karen?" (What can we do?) For the average villager the fight for a living is not an easy one. The elements, social conditions, thieves, and wild animals are to be reckoned with. For example, peanuts would be a vaulable crop for many areas, but deer, jackel, monkeys, and wild hog also relish them. Village goats, cattle, and chickens make gardening very difficult, if not impossible. The poor farmer's land is encroached upon. His rights to life and liberty are challenged on every hand. Money lenders take as much as 100 per cent interest.

Such is the status of most of the villagers in our area. The solution is Christ who came to give life abundantly and to set at liberty those who are in bondage.

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

RESOURCES OF THE COUNTRY CHURCH

The country church may seem small, weak, and of little importance to the life of a country, but actually it is of the greatest significance to the total life of a nation. No other single organization has the loyalty of so high a percentage of its surrounding population as does the rural church. Country people belong to fewer clubs, societies, and social organizations than do city people and for that reason have more time to devote to the activities of the church. In other words, the churches in rural areas have fewer agencies competing for the time of their members than do city churches. For this reason ministers in rural churches have a chance to influence the mind and spirit of their listeners in a way that few others have.

Influence On The City

The country church directly and indirectly influences cities and city churches because rural churches are the seed bed from which urban churches get both members and ministers. It is a well recognized fact that rural people moving to the city tend to be more interested and active in religious activities than do second and third generation city dwellers. Country churches should be concerned about developing the full resources available to them both for the enrichment of their own lives as well as for the lives of those they may later come to serve.

Resources

First of all, the rural church may be the center of community life. It can, frequently, be the integrating force of the community. Because of its centrality and its influence it may serve as a wholesome influence on local organizations and activities such as public schools, farm organizations, and recreation. Being in close contact with nature it has the opportunity of teaching the beauty, the purity, the orderliness, and the bountifulness of God as revealed in nature. It provides occasions for quiet but rich periods of Christian fellowship. A number of rural churches during summer months have encouraged members to bring basket lunches to Sunday morning meetings and remain as a group for a common meal. By breaking bread together members are surely drawn closer to one another. As is the case in many Mennonite communities, hospitals, homes for the aged, mutual aid societies, orphanages, burial societies and Bible schools are maintained by the rural churches. These are only a few resources of the rural church. They are not substitutes for preaching the gospel; they are supplements to it; they are the fruits of the Spirit.

"Fernheim" Well Named

By W. C. Voth

Puerto Casado
Paraguay

This is Sunday evening, and what a hot day it has been! I suppose that you may have some pretty cold weather just now. Wish we could exchange part of it for this heat. It is like the hot July and August days in China used to be when we could not sleep. We tried to sleep a while over the noon hour, but I could not get much of it. It was quite nice the first few days after our arrival in Paraguay. They called it a summer cool spell.

Arrived at Ascuncion on Sunday (January 23) from Buenos Aires. Visited in the F. Heinrichs home in the afternoon. There we met several other men who had come from the Chaco and were trying to go o Buenos Aires. There also was a Mr. Kliewer, who s a teacher in the Brethren Church in Fernheim. He s with us now on the trip to the Colony. Monday nd Tuesday we wrote some letters, did what business ve had to—which is always an important item that nust be done, such as reporting to the police, getting ickets affirmed, etc. Tuesday at 5:30 we left by teamer to Rosario where we arrived Wednesday norning and then went by wagon about thirty-three niles to Friesland Colony. It took us all day, and ve arrived there after dark.

Had sent a wire to Mr. Corn. Kroeker who is the "Dorf-Schultze" or mayor of the Colony. Had a eal, tasty, fried chicken supper. The Kroekers are f the Brethren Church. They received us very cordally, and soon several others were there, also the rethren minister. The next morning after a good reakfast on the porch in the refreshing cool of the norning, Rev. Quiring, minister of the General Conerence group, and the minister of the Brethren came ver. Since we had only that one day there it was at nce decided that they would have a meeting in the vening . . . The forenoon slipped away quickly while isiting with a few who came over. In the afternoon nap, and then Mr. Quiring took us to the nearest utterian Dorf.

That group came from Germany and England. It as interesting to visit them. They showed us around. hey have two villages in Paraguay. Are quite different in some respects from other like groups I know. hey have a hospital, but everything is in the beginng stage. They have been here only about three years. hey, of course, are very busy building more homes, c. Have a nice building for the Kindergarten as well for the school. A number of them seem to be quite ell educated.

This is Monday. After the heat of yesterday we ve a nice cool day; we had a big rain early this orning. It was very dry and dusty lately. We exct to take the train from here tomorrow morning to place 145 kilometers from here, from where we exct a wagon to take us to Fernheim, about a twentyur wagon trip. Had wired for them to meet us. We d allowed ourselves three weeks for this trip to the colonies, that is from Ascuncion. But that really is not enough as we could have only one day at Friesland and vicinity (besides the two days on the road), and at Fernheim we will have about four days visit, or at at best four and one-half. That is about five days out of twenty-one, the rest for traveling and lying around waiting for transportation. We expected to make better connections. Considering the slow means of travel, it seems that from the standpoint of time we are farther away from home here at Fernheim than we have been on this journey.

We plan to leave Fernheim about February 11.

The rest of our stopping places and the dates are as follows:

(Here the censor neatly clipped the whole schedule. Mrs. V.)

The last letter I received from home was written December 15. This I got at Santiago, Chile. Isaacs of course told me some things from home since you wrote that letter . . .

Our train leaves at 5:00 a. m. . . .

Best wishes to Stanley, brothers and sisters, and the dear friends who have been so much concerned for us.

(The above are excerpts from a letter written by W. C. Voth to his family.)

Interned Relief Workers May Return

The State Department has announced that negotiations with the German Government have been completed for the return of diplomatic officials and others who were trapped in France when that country was occupied by the Germans. The Swedish motorship, Gripsholm, sailed February 15, from Jersey City, for Lisbon where the exchange will be made on February 24. The release further states, "With the returning American diplomats there will be certain newspaper correspondents, relief workers . . . all of whom have been held in Germany since early in 1943."

Although M.C.C. has received no offical confirmation from the State Department it is taken for granted that the exchange will include the three M.C.C. relief workers, Brother and Sister Henry Buller and Sister Lois Gunden, who have been interned at Baden Baden, Germany.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

Willard W. Wiebe, Aberdeen, Idaho

MARCH 10—"And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt." Matthew 14:31

The hands of our Lord are still stretched forth for the salvation of souls. My faith is small, and often, if it weren't for the ready hand of my Lord, the waves of doubt would overwhelm me and I would sink into the sea of drowning despair. Jesus' hands are still EXTENDED for our salvation! I reject them at the loss of my soul, or accept them at the loss of my sin.

MARCH 11—"My sheep hear my voice and I know them, and they follow me: And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." John 10:27-29

A source of much grief, worry, and heavy-hearted concern in Christendom is the uncertainty of the Christian's security in Christ. Here Jesus claims a strong hand again, and in the next verse implies that His hand, which holds the believer, is re-inforced by the hand of His Father. The liberty from worry received in such true comfort will never produce license to sin in the true believer; however, it will release us for more efficient labor for Him. Christ's hands are CLENCHED for our security!

MARCH 12—"I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me: for they are thine." John 17:9

This is a true example of Christ's present intercessory prayer for His believers today. A consciousness that He ever liveth to make intercession for me will greatly influence my life. This very thought will help me to combat sin and will spur me on to greater service for Him. The hands of our Lord are FOLDED for our intercession!

MARCH 13—"The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand." John 3:35, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" Romans 8:32

Some of the promises in my Bible are so big that my faith stumbles over them. One such promise is our joint-heirship with Christ. Oh, that we might comprehend the unlimited and eternal value connected with such love. The hands of Christ are FILLED for thy acceptance! O soul, thou must loose thyself from the bondage of doubt and be strengthened in the faith that Christ's hands are FILLED—for thee.

MARCH 14—"Behold my hands and my feet . . ." Luke 24:39, ". . . . they pierced my hands and my feet." Psalm 22:16

Thse hands that were pierced for my sins shall never heal over. This enables me to claim victory over sin and Satan with the authority of His sacrifice, for that sacrifice will never be erased from God's mind. Christ can never forget those for whom He died. We, by our communion services, remember Him through His death, and He, by His pierced hands, remembers us through His death. Calvary is an eternal forget-me-not. His hands are PIERCED for my sin!

MARCH 15—"And he led them out as far as Bethany and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them." Luke 24:50

The last attitude of Christ upon the earth was the attitude of a parting blessing, for in the next verse I read, "while he blessed them, he was parted from them and carried up into heaven." Oh, what glory awaits us when we shall see Him face to face—His hands raised in a welcoming blessing! Do not our hearts burn within us as we think of the joy that to fall asleep in Jesus is merely to change an earthly fellowship with Christ to a heavenly fellowship with Him. Christ's hands are RAISED for our blessing as w come to Him!

MARCH 16—"The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." Deuteronomy 33:27

Am I pressed down today with heavy burdens? O my soul, think not of thy weakness but of the strength of the arms that everlastingly uphold thee! It is th privilege to rest there and to press the weight of thyself and thy burden unto the everlasting arms tha undergird thee. Look often to the hands of thy Saviour and thy God; but know this, that His hands ar extended for thy salvation BEFORE they can be uplifted for thy blessing.

You Give to Me, And I Will Give to God

It was Thanksgiving Day morning. Several brethren casually came to our house for a little chat. I asked them what they were going to give to God today on this special day of thanksgiving. One of them said, "Missionary, you give us something and then we will give that to God." I told them the real value of an offering consisted in it being a real sacrifice of what one had earned. I asked them whether they didn't have some chickens in the home; or, since they were weavers, whether it wouldn't be nice to offer a yard of cloth; or a dish of country beans, etc. It was soon revealed that these brethren had something of all these things I had enumerated, and they went hom to make ready. When church meeting time came they came with their hands full of offerings for God' work, and their faces shone as they presented thei gifts. All they needed was a suggestion. That is s very often the case. One of the big functions of th missionary is to make suggestions and give encouragement. We would implore our home churches to pra for us that we might always have the power of th Spirit to make the right suggestions: spiritually an materially. —John Thiessen

Is Anything Too Much?

By Jo Neal

The autumn leaves were turning to burning reds and vivid golds. Softly they drifted down. One settled silently on my open magazine, and brought me to myself with a start, bringing with it the consciousness of my problem.

"Oh, I can't go. I just can't!" My voice ended in a sob. It seemed that all of my days were unhappy days now. We had been so deliriously happy those first months, Bill and I, but now the days were miserable.

"It seems too much to ask of us." I spoke to myself. "Newly married and paying for a new house. Bill with such a good job at the mill, and everything going perfectly. It is asking too much for us to leave everything for a little forsaken mission station in the hills." Rebellious tears filled my eyes, and made the words on the printed page swim crazily about.

I shut the magazine. It was time to get supper for Bill. Darling Bill, how I loved him! And it seemed to me, that he half consented to go, although he hadn't said it in so many words.

That night I couldn't sleep. Stealing from bed, I sat by the window. The sill was wet with dew.

Suddenly, with almost angelic sweetness, these words came through the night air.

"What a friend we have in Jesus,
All our sins and griefs to bear.
What a privilege to carry,
Everything to God in prayer."

It was Bonny, the little girl who lived next door. "Everything to God in prayer?" The question with startling vividness shot through my mind. How could I pray about my great problem when I was sure it came from God. Could I dare pray that God take the conviction away? If I prayed that God's will be done, or, that He make me willing to go, then I might have to go and leave everything behind; that meant anything to me.

"I'm alone; I haven't even God on my side." Dropping my head on the damp sill, I sobbed. "Oh, God, don't forsake me. Help me, God; somehow, help me." And down in my soul somewhere, I cried, "But I don't want to go. I can't go."

Miserably, I lived through the days one by one, each as miserable as the last. Then something happened that shook the very foundations of my life.

It was Monday. Aunty Conny was making a call, and I had told her my problem. She was a kindly soul —not my real aunt, but a dear, old lady, that everyone called Aunty. It seemed to me while I was telling my tale, that she wasn't quite as sympathetic as I had expected. I had even expected her to be indignant with very idea of our breaking up our nice new home. Instead she only looked at me keenly for a moment, and then asked:

"What did Christ do for you?"

"Why," I said surprised, "He died for me."

"Is there anything He could ask of you that would be too much, then?"

This put things in an entirely new light. I had been thinking of only our side of the question, not God's. Before I could think of a reply the telephone rang.

"Hello," I answered.

"Is this Mrs. Lee?" a voice asked.

"Yes," I replied·

"This is the Midwest Merchant Mills. Your husband has had an accident. Could you come at once?"

The room began to turn in circles, and then things all turned black before me.

Aunty Conny was the first person I saw when I regained consciousness.

"Be sensible, child, be sensible," I heard her say hysterically, while the tears streamed down her cheeks.

"Oh, aunty," I sobbed, "Something's happened to Bill. Let me go,—I must go right away."

"No, no, honey, dear, it's a mistake, a dreadful mistake." She tried to keep me from arising.

"I must go." I said struggling. "There's been an accident. I must go at once."

"Listen, child." Aunty was panting from her efforts to hold me. "They called back right away and said it was another Lee that was killed. It was a mistake. Honey, Bill's all right."

"Are you sure? Oh, Aunty, are you sure?" The suddenness of this good news left me as weak as the last.

"Yes, listen, deary, I heard you drop in here, and I came a-runnin' in and seen you lyin' there as pale as death. Before I could get to the kitchen to get some water to bring you to, that telephone rang again. I answered it 'cause I knew you couldn't, and they said it was a mistake,—that a Fred Lee had been killed, and they called you by mistake. As soon as they found it out, they called back plumb, right away."

"Oh, thank God." I sobbed. "Oh, Bill, Bill, what would I have done without you?"

"That's all right, child," Aunty said, patting my shoulder. "God wouldn't take Bill yet, 'cause He wants him for that mission station in the hills."

At that moment, Bill himself strode into the room.

Never, in all my life, before nor since, was I so glad to see him. His coal black, curly hair and masculine build, and most of all the expression of love for me in his eyes,—the eyes that a moment ago I had thought closed forever, so unnerved me, that I burst into tears in his arms.

"Don't, Kitty, don't," he pleaded, trying to comfort me. "I heard about that dreadful mistake, and nothing could keep me from coming to you right away, because I knew you'd—."

I interrupted him.

"Oh, Bill, God had a perfect right to take you if He wanted to. I've been so selfish and sinful about going to the hills to work. After all that Christ did for me, I was stubborn and rebellious when He asked for only a few years of my life. Oh, Bill, I don't know what I would have done without you; and if God gives me another chance, I'm going to the hills for Him, for the rest of my life, if He wants me."

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow." I heard Aunty Conny say, and immediately after, heard the kitchen screen door bang.

But all I knew then, or cared about, was that Bill and I were going to the hills to work for God just as long as He could use us. And we wanted to, I could tell by the way Bill looked at me.

Youth's Christian Companion

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT

TOPIC: Understanding the Call of God

SCRIPTURE: The book of Amos. Shorter passage for reading on Program: Amos 7:10-15. Focal Point: Amos 7:14,15, "Then answered Amos, and said to Amaziah, I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was a herdsman and a dresser of sycamore trees; and Jehovah took me from following the flock, and Jehovah said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel. Now therefore hear the word of Jehovah."

Program Suggestions:

Hymn: "I'll be what you want me to be."

Prayer: 1. For guidance in choosing a life work. 2. For courage to follow God's call when it comes.

Flannelgraph or chalk-talk: (If not used on the program, this might be made up as a poster to advertise the meeting). Background should be a simple sketched outline of the coast of Palestine and its main waters, the Sea of Galilee, Dead Sea, and Jordan River. About in the center pin a picture of a prophet cut from a Sunday school card or calendar to represent Amos. From this point draw colored lines or stretch colored yarns to the places against which he preached, and pin the ends down with cards on which the names of the places are printed. These names may be found in the first two chapters of Amos:

Damascus — 1:3 north
Gaza — 1:6 south west
Tyre — 1:9 north east
Edom — 1:11 south
Ammon — 1:13 north west
Moab — 2:1 west
Judah — 2:4 close home
Israel — 2:6 right where he is standing

As each card is pinned down, describe the accusation which Amos hurled against it.

Special Music: On obedience, consecration, or service.

Bible Hunt: Everyone bring Bibles and look up the answers. The first one to find it stand and read aloud. Amos had no education that we know of, but he drew from his own experience. Find the following illustrations he used:

1. Cart full of sheaves, 2:13
2. Trap for birds, 3:5
3. Shepherd rescuing sheep, 3:12
4. Fish-hooks, 4:2
5. Rain and drought, 4:7
6. Stars, Pleiades and Orion, 5:8
7. Snake bite, 5:19
8. Streams of water, 5:24
9. Plowing on rocks, 6:12
10. A mason's plumb line, 7:8
11. Sifting grain, 9:9
12. Planting, 9:15

(There are many others which might be added. The leader should give only the chapter and let the Intermediates look up the verses.)

Hymn:

Devotional Talk: "Amos' Call of God."

Re-read text, Amos 7:14,15

Ten observations on the text to aid in preparing a message.

1. Amos' call was opposed by the priest Amaziah, religious leader, and by the king, political leader.
2. He "stuck it out;" he held to his purpose anyway.
3. His call was opposite to his training; he was a herdsman and tree dresser.
4. It was not in the family line; he was not a prophet
5. But it was definite—Go, prophesy to Israel.
6. It was of God.
7. It was personal to him. He was sure of it even if no one else was.
8. He acted on it immediately, and even in the face of opposition.
9. It was not a pleasant call, nor an easy one. He had to hurt people's feelings, tell them their sins.
10. He used tact in pointing out the sins of surrounding nations before hitting Israel's own, but when he came to them he did not mince words, but told the whole truth in the pointed, simple language of a man of the soil.

Hymn: Take My Life

Closing prayer, or season of prayer.

NOTICE C.E. WORKERS AND READERS

In this issue we are bringing you program material for Junior, Intermediate, and Senior C.E. societies. The Intermediate program has the usual heading. The other two are not so easily recognized. "Building for Christ at Basna" is material for the Senior society, and "Telling the Story of Jesus to Others" is material for the Junior society. Both of these provide such excellent material about our mission work that we hope they will be used as much as programs outlined in the usual way.

C.E. workers can easily expand the program material here given by adding talks, songs, etc. Be sure and use the pictures shown here for the program, for they help the members to get a better picture of things as they are.

Those not directly interested in C.E. work will also profit by reading these articles which are of a general, informational nature. Bible school teachers may want to save this material for use in daily vacation Bible school. Let us know how you like these articles.

"Let us repent. Let us be reconciled with our brother. Let us send our hum-drum religion to the Heavenly drycleaner. Let us find the greatest reality in all the world, the saving love of God."—Donovan Smucker dy as early as 1912 when only few missionaries e on the field, they were interested in areas farther y where Christ had not been preached. Dr. P. A.

ner and Rev. P. J. Wiens made a trip to investi-
the Phuljhar Zemindary which is now our Basna d of work. They preached as far south as the age of Basna. Then in 1916 Rev. and Mrs. Steiner several evangelists made a preaching tour. They showed lantern pictures at a meeting in the Basna ol house, and on their way home to Mahaudhi met Gopal who had become a Christian eighteen rs ago. His influence had worked as a light for se around him in darkness. He said seven families ukri village wanted baptism, and so it was.

he missionaries felt that they had to do something these people calling for spiritual help, and so Isadas sent as the first evangelist for this area to Sukri age. His was a vast field to work. Christ was known there. Already in 1917 Mr. Wiens and Steiner could baptize twenty-nine people, the fruits of this district. And the Light shone and good news of salvation quickly spread to many ounding villages of this same caste.
following year Mr. Wiens opened five more outstations and sent na-helpers to work this field. They t a church and the evangelist's
e at Sukri in spite of opposition persecution. God blessed the ef-s of the work so that 108 were bap-d in 1919. A yearly tour of about onth was now made from Mahaudtation, but in 1920 the missionaries tioned the Mission Board to open new mission station here, as there already 200 converts and 250
e waiting for baptism.

1923 the work was organized sepely from Mahaudhi Station and
. and Mrs. S. T. Moyer were put harge of this field. Their first year ork here was difficult. They look-nd asked for land but were refused.
lly in 1924 the land deal was comed and the deed registered. It was the land asked for at first, but towe are glad we received this dense st tract, five and one-half miles h of Basna village rather than near villages of Basna or Sariepalie.
a Station had only a tent and a house, but there were already 400 istians in thirty-five different vils to shepherd. The following year all little brick house was complethere white people could live also he hot season and four Sunday Schools were already organized in the district. They sent seventy boys and girls to the boarding schools in Mahaudhi and Janjgir this year, but the next year Mrs. Burkhard started a boarding school at Basna Station. In 1927 the Mission Station was formally dedicated. Later the area of this field was increased when the English Baptists gave over their field of work in this area because of lack of funds in the year 1938.

Today the tract of dense jungle, acquired twenty years ago, appears very different. The old little church built of mud is too small for the 404 local church members, besides all the unbaptised children and school boys and patients who attend church. A new, brick church building has recently been built, and there are many church buildings of mud here and there, for there are 1586 church members not including children in the Basna area living in ninety-five different villages. The station is well built up. There is a fine brick hospital building with numerous wards around, a good schoolhouse for the middle school and also for the primary school and suitable houses for the teachers and for the boarding pupils. Then two good brick bungalows for the missionaries

This shows an Indian ambulance bringing a patient to the hospital.

Mrs. Duerksen teaching a Bible story to some village women and all the dwelling houses of Christians living here cluster around these.

Mr. and Mrs. Duerksen are in charge of all the many Christians in the villages. Often several villages meet together for worship. One native pastor and several faithful evangelists help in this work. It is a large number of people to teach all that Christ commanded and means many miles of travel for these workers. Mrs. Duerksen helps Mr. Duerksen conduct Bible courses at intervals in these villages.

At present Dr. Dester is in charge of the rapidly growing hospital. A small staff of native workers help to serve the patients physically and mentally. Dr. Dester is also pastor of the large station church with 404 church members. Mrs. Dester helps Dr. Dester in the church and in the hospital, besides this she has charge of the weaving work. We consider the weaving work mission work because it helps to make Christians independent financially. Many of the people of this area were weavers before they came Christians, and by helping the poorer weav in marketing their goods and in planning new patte we teach them to help themselves. Rev. and M Thiessen have charge of the school. There are g teachers to help them in the work of guiding primary children of the first four grades, the m difficult children of the fifth to the eighth grad and the boys of the normal department who le how to teach others. The latter boys are sent out soon as they are ready to the many needy places the district to teach others how to live. They often the only literate family in the village.

In concluding let us ask, "Has it paid to win th souls for Christ and his kingdom?" There are ma more both from high and low castes who are ask and entreating: "Teach us how to become Christi also." "Give of the best to the Master, give H first place in your life" in prayer, in gifts, in serv

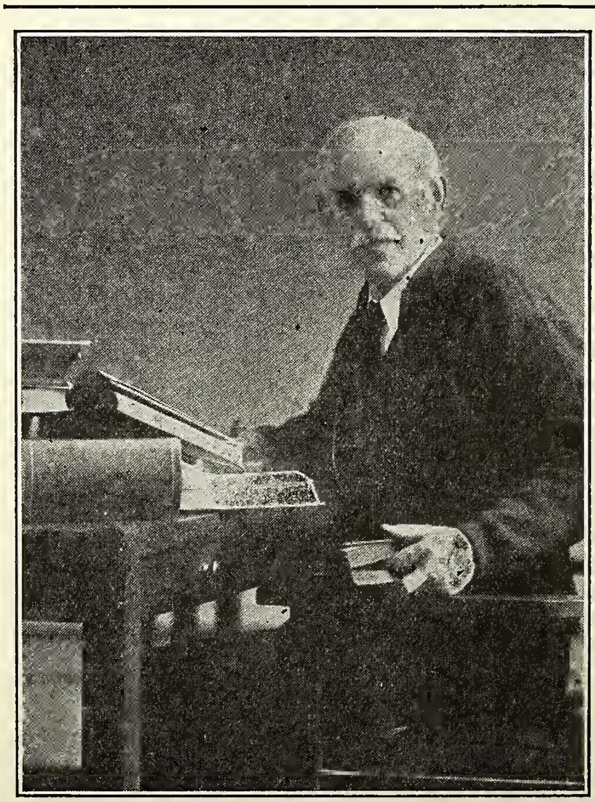
Our program today will give u chance to learn something about one of our missiona who has spent more than fifty years preaching the g pel to the American Indians. An older child or an ac may tell the following story of Missionary Petter's w among the Cheyenne Indians.

Missionary Rodolphe Petter, has been a missionary



This is Rodolphe Petter, scholar, translator, missionary, and above all a humble Christian. We can not estimate the contribution that he has made by working with the Cheyenne language, but we know that it is a very great one. He has not been put on the front pages of our daily newspapers as one of America's great men, but we know that he is.

village bell. In the stillness of the night, he felt clearly that he should give his life to God, and he to his brother, "I hear the call of God. From now shall devote my life to His service." Somewhat his brother awoke him to say, "I just had a dream

Report of the Canning and Drying Project

William T. Snyder

The difficulties confronting every housekeeper in preparing well balanced meals economically despite the ration restrictions under which she must work is experienced on a much larger scale by the Dieticians and Business Managers of our Mennonite Civilian Public Service camps. The camps' problems are serious because many are situated in areas in which there are shortages of the foods that are essential to a properly balanced and nutritious diet. Where such foods are obtainable, the restrictions governing the purchase of commercially canned goods make it difficult to obtain sufficient quantities to fill the requirements. Another problem of the camps is the mounting food costs in practically every area in which the camps are located. As a partial solution to those problems, many of the camps have planted gardens, started poultry or cattle-raising projects, and in general attempted to supply as much of their food as possible. The amount of time C.P.S. men may devote to such "off work project" enterprises is necessarily limited, and therefore the camps could not become self-sufficient in the matter of foodstuffs. As a further solution to the problem, a Home Canning and Drying Project was organized during the past year. All constituent groups of the Mennonite Central Committee were invited to participate in the project as a demonstration of genuine concern for the well-being of the brethren in camp and also as a measure to reduce the cost of providing wholesome food.

Quotas were not set for the individual churches as the whole project was something entirely new. It was thought best to state the needs of the camps and then allow the congregations to contribute as they felt led. The approximate quantities of goods collected at various larger centers are as follows:

State	Collection Center	Approx. No. Qts.
California	(Contributed Directly)	7,200
Iowa	Kalona	7,100
Illinois	Fisher	2,750
	Sterling	800
	Eureka	3,200
	Arthur	3,850
Indiana-Mich.	Goshen	18,000
Kansas	Hillsboro	4,500
	Newton	16,000
Minnesota	Mountain Lake	4,500
Nebraska	Henderson	2,400
	Milford	1,950
	Beatrice	675
Ohio	Orrville	9,000
	Louisville	4,900
	Elida	6,800
	Archbold	3,000
Oklahoma	Corn	450
Oregon	(Shipped Directly)	6,700
Pennsylvania	Souderton	13,500
	Lancaster County	45,900
	Sideling Hill	5,000

South Dakota	Freeman	7,000
Virginia	Broadway	800
	Harrisonburg	450
	Fentress	1,500
	Total	177,925

The Business Managers of the camps were asked to estimate their food requirements for a twelve month period; this estimate formed the basis on which the distribution of the goods reported by the collection centers was planned. An acute need for fruits was felt in the camps at Terry, Montana; Belton, Montana; and Hill City, South Dakota. This was due to the scarcity of fruit in the areas in which their marketing had to be done. It was therefore necessary to allocate to these camps a large percentage of the fruit contributed by the Eastern congregations which are situated in a more abundant fruit-producing area. The quantity of fruit contributed by the Middlewestern congregations, though not sufficient to fill the needs of the camps in the West and Middlewest, was nevertheless much greater than was expected. This is accounted for because many folks purchased fruit who might otherwise have raised it had growing conditions been more favorable.

The general plan of distributing the goods was to use the Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Maryland goods first to fill the needs of the camps at Sideling Hill, Pennsylvania; Hagerstown, Maryland; Luray, Virginia; and the Philadelphia Research Center. All Eastern fruit that could be spared was shipped to Denison, Iowa, for reshipment West. The Medaryville, Indiana, camp received the Eastern Ohio contributions and the Western Ohio contributions went to Denison for reshipment. Other states whose goods went to Denison were: Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, and Michigan. The Kansas contributions were partially used to round out the requirements of the three Colorado camps and a carload was sent to California to fill the needs of the three camps there. South Dakota's goods were shipped directly to Hill City, South Dakota. The Northwestern states of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho were instructed to ship their donations to Lapine, Oregon; Downey, Idaho; and Belton, Montana.

The scope of the project was large and since the Mennonite people had never before undertaken anything comparable to it, many new problems arose. A major difficulty was to find sufficient help to do the packing and shipping after the women had devoted so much time to the preparation of the food. The brethren responded well despite the general shortage of help in all occupations. After receiving reports from the collection centers and from scattered congregations, it was a sizeable task to fill the estimates of each camp from the goods on hand, taking into account the cost of transportation from the collection center and the cost of each commodity in the market near the camp. It was necessary to substitute the heavily contributed foods for certain of the scarcer foods requested by the camps in order that all donations might be used and yet that a good variety of food be given each camp.

Packing the jars for shipment to distant pc was accomplished by the use of strapping mate to give sufficient strength to the cartons in which empty jars had been purchased. The boxes in t original condition were not strong enough to c the heavily laden jars and therefore a packing de had to be used to provide sufficient strength to tect the seals of the jars and to prevent break The boxes were each labelled with the contents then were shipped to the camps either by rail or by truck. Some of the brethren who own tr offered their services either gratis or for a non sum; this made considerable savings possible in shipment of the goods. The total loss due to br age was slight. For example, out of approxima 40,000 quarts shipped to Sideling Hill, Luray, Grottoes, the breakage amounted to three jars. trailerload of goods shipped from Mountain Lak Denison, Iowa, arrived without any breakage; a s ton shipment from Freeman, South Dakota, to City, South Dakota, likewise arrived without breakage. This can be explained by the extra that the donors observed in packing the goods t sure that it would reach the camps in perfect dition.

Letters received at the Mennonite Central Com tee office are indeed gratifying and demonstrate both the men in camp and the donors have rec a genuine blessing from the project. The follo quotations from a few of these letters are indic of the spirit in which the work was undertaken.

Numerous letters have been received from women who participated in the Canning and D Project stating that plans are being made for year. This is indeed encouraging and demonst their continuing interest in the well being of the b ren in camp. The constant changes in conne with the operation of the Civilian Public Service c preclude suggesting definite plans at present b it becomes apparent that a project for 1944 wou advisable, the church leaders will again be advis the need. May the Lord richly bless all who had a share in making this year's project a succes

OUR ACHIEVEMENT—THEIR DESTINY

Human suffering, in intensity and number of p involved, has reached the highest point record the history of mankind. Sin is the cause. The is righteous living among all nations. The good of peace on earth now must come through the of Christ, his church. Each member of the body an inescapable responsibility. Every one must the need and respond personally in relieving suf and leading men to Christ through evangelism, sions and service.—M. R. Zigler, Leader in Chur the Brethren.

"If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to And if he be thirsty, give him water to drink: thou wilt heap coals of fire upon his head, and Je will reward thee." Prov. 25:21,22.

A PRAYER

"Dear Lord, upon my knees I ask
For strength to do each given task;
For graciousness of heart and mind
To be not only just but kind;
For hope that sees through blinding tears
The mystery beyond the years;
For faith that ever stronger grows
Like Job's, in spite of anguished woes;
For courage that will make me sing
No matter what the harsh days bring;
For wisdom to be finding worth
Within the simple things of earth
And loveliness in shaded nooks,
In flowers, trees and running brooks,
In meadow, hill, woodland and glen,—
For these things, Lord, I ask. AMEN!"

"Running into debt in times of prosperity is like sailing away in an airplane. Getting out in times of adversity is like walking back home in the mud."

Erland Waltner, started a series of sermons, the texts of which are aken from the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. Surely, he Lord's blessings are in store for all who will come prayerfully. A new Sunday School room has been built n the church basement for the use of the beginners. Both women societies of our church have ordered cut garments from the Bluffton cutting room and are now busy sewing for those who are in dire need." —Corr.

—"The newly adopted policy of closing stores at 9:00 P.M. Saturday nights (10:00 P.M. during the summer) is eeply appreciated by the churches. We consider it an nswer to prayer. We are convinced that Sunday as a ay of worship will mean much more to those who have he proper hours of sleep during Saturday night. It is oped that customers will cooperate to the fullest extent with this policy and will recognize its mutual benefits to the entire community." Bulletin, Bethel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota.

—Bulletin, Alberta Community Church, Portland, Ore-on: "A film 'The Book for the World of Tomorrow,'. roduced by the American Bible Society, will be shown. This will be followed by a sound film, a message by Dr. Oswald J. Smith: 'Go ye.' " This congregation has an orchestra. A note in the bulletin says, "Does our hurch need a revival? They begin in the prayer meet-ngs." (We are glad to get the Alberta bulletin, which has a new cover design.)

—Directors of Oklahoma Bible Academy Plan Completion Building: (The following is an excerpt from The .B.A. Messenger.)

"We, the board of directors of the Oklahoma Bible Academy, believe the Lord is willing to do great things we only believe and ask for great things . . . We have assed a motion stating that we want to complete our hool building during the coming summer, the Lord lling.

There are, primarily, three reasons for taking this action. First, our present room in the school building is very much too small for the student body which the Lord has sent and will send.

Second, our friends in this vicinity and generally throughout the nation realize that the spirit and moral standing in our public high schools is far too low for a healthy, Christian youth. This fact is increasingly evident every year, with an ever-declining moral standard, and all the more with the spirit of war playing so great a role in our nation.

Third, it seems possible, and even probable, that we will have some form of military training brought into our public high schools after the war. Then, more than ever, we will turn to a Christian, non-military Academy, for the training of our entrusted youth. It will mean many and greater sacrifices, but the value of human souls is at stake!

We, as Board, know we cannot do this in our own strength, or in man's strength. Therefore, our very first objective is to ask you, praying partners, to make this an object of prayer. Let us claim the promises of James 5:16: "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." Let us pray that the Lord make it possible, and that He will lead throughout, according to His Will. He can give the material and send in the necessary funds."

—Bulletin, Fairfield (Pa.) Menonite Church: "Why not try something new for Missionary Sunday. Bring your offering envelopes as usual, but in addition bring a friend or neighbor who does not attend Sunday School or church services. That would not only help to fill chapels in Africa and India, it would help to fill our own place of worship."

—Eden Mennonite Church, Inola, Oklahoma: The primary picture rolls which the Sunday School had saved for many years were given to the "Go-ye Mission." This mission has received word that the Northern Bible Society is sending 700 Bibles. Rev. S. Mouttet asked the congregation Sunday that as the Bibles enter the field God's children pray and the Lord will surely bless.

—From the "Church Messenger" of the Swamp Mennonite Charge, Quakertown, Pa.: "Building Funds are now in existence in both the West Swamp and Bethany Churches. At West Swamp action was taken at the Annual business meeting creating such a fund from the balance in the congregation and Sunday School treasuries. In Bethany the Ladies Aid and Missionary Society laid aside a certain sum for this purpose last year and added more to it this year.

Building committees were created in both these churches and it is hoped that plans can be drawn up for some needed repairs and renovations as soon as materials are available.

In Flatland no special action was taken along this line, but it is hoped that soon the interior might be painted. The outside was painted and repairs were made in 1942.

—Bulletin, Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, Wichita, Kansas, on February 27: "Tonight . . . Mrs. Frieda Regier Entz of Newton will show colored slides of the customs and religious life of the Hopi Indians of Arizona. Mrs. Entz grew to young womanhood among the Hopis, and much of what she relates is from personal experience. Those who have heard her and seen the pictures say they are highly interesting."

—Bethel College: Brother and Sister Malcolm Wenger, under appointment as missionaries to the Indians of Montana, spoke briefly in chapel February 28. As they are leaving school at the end of the Winter Quarter, the students individually came forward, bade Brother and Sister Wenger goodbye and wished them well in their new field of service. Rev. David Wedel is teaching a two-hour course in Church Administration during the Spring Quarter which opened February 28. A Mennonite history class of Bible short-term students from Hesston College visited the Kauffman Museum and the Historical Library recently. The married students in Bethel College had a party on February 17.

THE PRINTER

Manager Burkhard

We are happy to introduce to our readers Mr. Fred J. Burkhard, Manager of the Bethel College Press. Not long ago one of our ministers who knows considerable about printing commented upon the excellent job of printing in The Mennonite. Mr. Burkhard is responsible for this. He is ever willing to go out of his way to improve the paper. Two examples of this are the use of pictures and different sizes of type. This takes extra work. Then too he has carefully watched the neatness of the total work. Mr. Burkhard is married and has two children. He likes to read and he speaks German. Although his name has a Mennonite sound, he isn't one. He comes from Swiss Reformed community of Kentucky, his parents having migrated there from Switzerland. He is a graduate from Berea College where he first learned to know the Mennonites through such people as Prof. Henry Schultz, formerly of Mountain Lake, Minnesota. Those who work with the mechanical part of such a paper as this, play a very important part in its production.

—Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas: Upon the invitation of our C.E. society the choir of the Friedenstal Mennonite Church of Tampa, Kansas, presented us a program on March 5.

—The members of the Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas, have decided to give fifty cents per member per Sunday for their church building fund.

—First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: G. A. Lehman, baritone soloist and former director of the Bluffton College choirs, will give a recital on March 12. The one act Easter drama, "The way of Life" will be given this year. The missionary society recently had as its topic "Around the World with the Mennonite Central Committee." "Sunday School teachers have been presented with copies of Tarbelle and Peloubets teachers' notes. A teachers' study course has been distributed. Plans are underfoot for a weekly meeting for study and prayer on behalf of the Sunday School. Let us pray for the Holy Spirit's power."

—Bethel Mennonite Church, Fortuna, Missouri: Men from the congregation recently came for several days with their tractors and pulled out the hedge that stood between the parsonage and the church building. They plan to put in a new wire fence. The pastor has fixed up the brooder house, for he has ordered three hundred baby chicks for March 15. He has also put electric lights into the new chicken barn. —Corr.

—Johannestal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Our church expects Rev. J. J. Esau for a week's services, beginning March 26. The pastor of our church is to conduct a week of services for the Bethel Church, near Inman.

—C.P.S. regional directors, Raymond Hartzler, Harry Martens, Rufus Franz and Phil Frey, together with the C.P.S. staff at the Akron Office, recently met in a three-day conference to discuss such concerns as dependency, demobilization, religious and educational problems, relief training, and the shifting of men in the camps.

—Walton Mennonite Church, Walton, Kansas: The pastor (Ronald Von Riesen) will be gone the month of March to visit churches in Minnesota, North Dakota, and Montana, in the interests of Bethel College. Rev. H. B. Schmidt of the Tabor Church has consented to take charge during his absence. On March 1 Missionary Augusta Schmidt told the Mission Society about our mission work in India.

—Correction: The First Mennonite Church, Colfax, Washington, contributed $208.75 to the Peace Committee in the past year and not $5.00 as stated in the recent financial statement in this paper. L. J. Horsch, Treasurer, makes this correction with apologies for the mistake.

—A communion service for Mennonite students and others of Chicago and vicinity will be held on Palm Sunday, April 2, at four o'clock at the Mennonite Bible Mission. This is sponsored by the pastors of the Mennonite Bible Mission and the First Mennonite Church.

—Hereford Mennonite Church, Bally, Pa.: Brother Elmer E. S. Johnson, our pastor, is now dealing with some of the following themes: "Why and What Is Sin? On the practical side: Why do so many people in the world seemingly 'get on' without being active in the Christian Church?" "If God loved the world as stated in John 3:16, does He really notice or heed our prayers?" "How can God and Christ have the supremacy over a world such as it now is?" "How can God be good and the children of His creation suffer?" "Why and what do we understand by repentance and salvation?" On Palm Sunday Sister Wilhemina Kuyf will bring the message.

—Eicher Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Wayland, Iowa: The Sunday school has undertaken the support of a native worker in India. His name is Parbhu Din. The money for this project will be taken from the birthday offerings.

—The annual bulletin of the Swamp Mennonite Charge states that the pastor, Brother A. J. Neuenschwander, made 700 visits last year. The pastor also taught the Volunteer Bible Course in the high school for eight weeks. Of thirty-eight young people in the service of the government, two are in C.P.S. The churches of the charge support the work of the boards of Publication and Education. West Swamp led by giving $96.56 and $48.29 to them respectively.

—Swiss Mennonite Church, Alsen, North Dakota: On February 13 the Bethany Bible School of Munich gave us a very good program. It was greatly enjoyed by a large crowd. They took an offering for missions. The offering amounted to over $70.00. Our pastor Brother Flickinger, has been giving a series of messages on the Epistle of the Philippians. Our attendance is increasing.

WHITE HARVEST FIELDS

By Malcolm Wenger

"Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for hey are white already to harvest." (John 4:35) Thus esus, standing by the well of Sychar, used the growng fields about Him, to picture to His disciples the arvest of souls awaiting the reapers. No doubt, he esired to have them see the needy souls in the Samarian village nearby, but more than that there was the hallenging picture of a world-wide harvest field a'aiting reapers to gather "fruit unto eternal life."

For almost two thousand years Christ's church has een working in this harvest field seeking to gather ien into His Kingdom and seeking to carry out His commission to take the gospel to the ends of the earth. Let us lift our eyes and look on the fields to see what has been accomplished in these years of labor in the harvest. Much has been done. No only has the gospel been spread throughout Europe and America, but in 1938 more than twenty-seven thousand foreign missionaries were reported carrying the message to the ends of the earth. In non-Christian lands the Protestant Church claims almost eleven million baptized believers.

Though many sheaves have been gathered we can-

Busby Mission Station Where Malcolm Wengers Will Live

This is the mission station at Busby, Montana, where :other and Sister Malcolm Wenger will make their ›me. They will live in the five-room log cabin shown the center of the picture. The divisions between e logs have recently been re-caulked states Brother enger, and there is more room in the house than the :ture suggests. To the right is the chapel with its ll tower. Once Indians had no watches and a bell ıs needed to call them to the services. To the left the house in which the Alfred Habeggers live. The rn to the left of the house is used to shelter some ws that the Habeggers milk and some horses that ey use for riding when there are no roads for the to or auto roads are impossible. No trees show on is picture which was taken some years ago, but now tle trees stand on the premises, and the field in the :eground is no longer tilled. A government telephone nnects the place with the outside. You look north the picture towards a river valley in the distance. tween the station and the hills there are some Indian ellings.

Here in their new home the Wengers will study the Cheyenne language, and from here they will begin with their work among the Indians. The Habeggers will help them, and so will the Petters at Lame Deer where the Wengers may go for some weekends.

After completing a quarter of school work at Bethel College, the Wengers went to Wisner, Nebraska, the home of Mrs. Wenger. On March 5 Mrs. Esther Boehr Wenger was ordained as missionary to the Cheyennes in the presence of her home congregation. Rev. A. P. Waltner, member of the Foreign Mission Board officiated. He was assisted by our returned missionary, H. J. Brown. In the evening a fellowship meal was held at the home of Brother and Sister August J. Leisy. At this occasion Brother and Sister H. J. Brown spoke about the work in China. A few more days in the parental home, and then the Wengers left for Busby, Montana, where they will be stationed. Perhaps, by the time that this paper reaches the readers this consecrated young couple will have moved into their new home and have begun the work.

A Rich Worship Experience

Recently it was my privilege to attend the Oklahoma Church Leaders' Convention which convened in the meetinghouse of the Bergtal Mennonite Church, Corn, Oklahoma. The meetings were full of deep fellowship, rich feasting on God's Word, and uplifting prayer. Yes, the conference was a rich worship experience.

But all of this did not happen in a magnificent edifice elaborately adorned for worship, for the meetinghouse of the Bergtal Church stands very simple and humble in the open country. But the deep experience of those who attended was well in line with the faith of our fathers. For in the beginning of our faith, there generally was not even a meetinghouse. People met in houses, behind dikes and hedges, and in open spaces in the forest. Did that keep them from having a deep worship experience? Far from it. For them worship was not confined to a particular group of hours or a particular place. They worshipped when they fled from a persecutor and when they gave bread to one in need. Someone has defined worship something like this: "Worship is a conscious experience of fellowship with God." Well, the early brethren seem to have been interested in fellowshipping with God every hour of the day, every day of the week. It was not for them to have a deep emotional experience in a sanctuary and then be shady in business or work in the days following.

The Brethren emphasized the importance of walking in newness of life. That made every day a day of deep inner experiences. This is as it should be. It was so for Jesus. He pointed out the importance of this when he said, "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in Spirit and in truth, for the Father seekest such to worship him." Surely, the early Brethren realized the importance of meeting for mutual edification. But they did not stop there. They went on. They wanted a deep experience with God at all times. That for them was not dependent upon a particular place and time. For them that experience depended more upon inner conditions than outward circumstances. They did not have much to say about surroundings conducive to a worship experience. They realized the importance of an inner experience that transforms all outer circumstances.

If we would have a rich worship experience today it might benefit us to look back more to the beliefs and practices of our fathers and less to the outer magnificence that material progress has made possible. We Mennonites need to draw from the genius of our faith our own standards for meetingshouses and worship.

However, all of this does not mean that we should be careless about our meetinghouses. The members of the Bergtal Church are remodelling theirs. They have nearly finished re-shingling the roof. They have put a thick-walled, convenient basement under it, built a balcony, and rearranged the entrance so that it will be more convenient for funerals and weddings. They may build an addition for the choir, and they plan to paint the structure. Had there been no indications of such improvements, then there would have been reason for thinking that something was wrong. For the absence of such needed care and improvements would have suggested that people thought more of their houses and barns than of the place where they met for united feasting upon the Word, prayer, and singing of praises to God. Our places for united worship need to be neat, clean, in good repair, and conveniently built.

But never should they become so important that we lose our sense of the importance of fellowshipping with God elsewhere and at other times. In fact, emphasis upon a suitable place of public worship should raise questions in our minds about a suitable place of worship in our own homes, for private prayer and scripture study but that is another subject. Let us learn more about the practices of our forefathers in regard to a rich worship experience.—rw.

Secure in God's Love and Care

This noon our little two-and-one-half-year-old boy smiled, laughed, and sang as he snuggled under his cover for a nap. He gave all evidence of feeling utterly secure in the love and care of his parents.

When we had closed the door of his bedroom these thoughts came to me: After all, we have the same privilege as our little boy has of feeling happily secure. For just as he is our child so are we the children—often times very little and immature children—of a Heavenly Father who loves us and cares for us? Certainly we can and ought to be just as happy and secure in our relationship to God as our child is in his feeling towards us.

To me there came thoughts of what Jesus says in the sixth chapter of Matthew about fowls of the air and lilies of the field, and I was reminded of a little verse from the Heart and Life Bulletin which says,

When we see the lilies spinning in distress
Taking thought to manufacture loveliness,
When we see the birds all building barns for store,
'Twill be time for us to worry—not before!

Yes, we have a Heavenly Father who knows all of our needs and is more than able and willing to fulfill them. Mindful of his love and care we can feel happy and secure.—rw.

HOW MUCH DID YOU WEAR?

A missionary at home on furlough was invited to a dinner at a great summer resort, where he met many women of prominence and position.

After dinner he went to his room and wrote a letter to his wife. He said:

"Dear Wife: I've had dinner at the great Hotel—— The company was wonderful. I saw strange things today. Many women were present. There were some who wore, to my certain knowledge, one church, forty cottage organs, and twenty libraries."

In his great longing for money to provide the gospe for hungering millions, he could not refrain from estimating the silks, satins, and diamonds of the guests at the dinner in terms of his people's need.

If God sends us money to send to perishing millions the good news of a Saviour from sin, and we spend it in needless luxuries, what does He think of it?—Autho Unknown.

Announcement about Coming Conference Session

By General Conference Executive Committee

Christians believe that God rules the world and the destiny of nations. Your Committee is convinced that the date announced for the session of our General Conference, beginning August 17, 1944, has been set in accord with the spirit and will of Christ the Head of the Church.

We had hoped to urge an especially large attendance at this session not only of delegates but also of members and friends from distant parts. In view, however, of the request of the public transportation authorities it does not appear advisable to urge such attendance.

It seems therefore that the satisfactory solution of the problem—so far as distant members and friends of the cause of our Church are concerned—rests in this suggestion of the Executive Committee.

We believe, however, in the spiritual communion of the saints. Therefore in view of this conviction and of the weighty problems confronting our Church, we earnestly ask and urge that all members and friends be much in prayer daily that the Lord may through His Holy Spirit give wisdom, grace, and guidance from on high to solve pending vital problems at this session in His Spirit for the temporal and eternal good of all concerned.

Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas. This is where the coming session of the General Conference will be held.

And may the Prince of Peace richly bless all who love His appearing above all we ask and think, and grant to a sinsick and repentent world an early and just peace.

W. C. Voth and Gerald Stucky Home Again

The Brethern W. C. Voth and Gerald Stucky met with members of the Foreign Mission Board on March 9 at North Newton, Kansas. They reported on their trip of approximately 20,000 miles through Central and South American countries. Their official report will however be made when the Foreign Mission Board meets on April 18.

The two representatives of the mission board had arrived by Pan-American Clipper at Miami, Florida, a few days earlier. Brother Voth had then gone west to be reunited with his family in Newton and Brother Stucky had gone to New York first before coming to Newton. Thus a long trip has been safely and happily concluded.

Brother Voth says, "I wish to add a note of appreciation and gratitude to our many mission friends in the States. Through many letters we know that you have been faithfully praying for us and the cause we represent. We wish to thank you one and all, heartily, for we have felt the Lord's sustaining and guiding power in answer to those prayers. Personally I also wish to thank you for your warm interest shown during my illness and after and your prayers of faith for my recovery. The Lord has answered marvelously indeed. Let us give Him the praise for it."

(Given below are some letters that Brother Voth wrote on his journey. Not many of our people have had the privilege of seeing Central and South America as Brother Voth and Brother Stucky have seen it.)

Missionary Voth Describes Visit in Paraguay

We are on our way back from Fernheim Colony and are waiting here at Puerto Casado on the river bank for a boat to go back to Asuncion.

We had a very nice visit at Friesland and later at Fernheim and Menno. Leaving Friesland we started back to Rosario; it was a real hot day and the dust on the road was thick. Arrived before sunset, and went to the Paraquay River for a good swim. At night we tried to sleep with a great army of mosquitoes rejoicing with a great buzz that they had found two tasty Americans for their night's feast. However, at midnight we eluded them; they found their prey had departed for the pleasant shores of the Paraquay. There we waited till 2 o'clock, when the lights of the "Iries" winked us a friendly welcome.

The Iries took us up the river to Puerto Casado where we arrived Sunday morning. We had to wait in this little town until Tuesday morning (Feb. 1), when we took the train out to the western "end of the earth." On a tiny narrow track a diminutive engine puffed his breath out to hurry across the wilderness at a snail's pace, making the 145 kilometers (about ninety-five miles) from 7:00 A.M. till about 7:30 P.M. The wagons that had been sent there for us had arrived a little while before we did.

We had a lunch out in the open with coffee brewed over a campfire. Then at 9:00 P.M. we started out on the trip. After making thirteen kilometers in mud, we stopped for the night under an open shed built for dipping cattle. Had about a five-hour sleep and then wanted to start early, but while we were brewing a little coffee a rain storm rolled up and we waited until 10 o'clock when it let up and we got on the road of mud and water. It was a hot, tedious trip, arriving at the half-way station and the home of the driver, Mr. Doersken, at five P.M.

We could have gone on a ways that night, but we were tired, and then too these folks begged us to stay and hold a service that night in their home. They quickly sent an Indian messenger to the neighbors to announce the meeting, and so we had a nice meeting with them. They seem to be starving for something like that, for it is a rare thing that some one from the outside comes to those who are away from the center.

Thursday morning we took to the road again. It was still pretty wet and traveling slow. At noon we stopped at an elderly bachelor in the Menno Colony. Because of the heat we rested there from twelve till three. Arrived at Philadelphia at 6:00 P.M. and rejoiced in the warm welcome extended by Dr. and Mrs. John Schmidt and Dr. and Mrs. Klassen. They were just ready for supper. We were to make our sleeping quarters at Rev. Harder's home. He is the father of Ernst in the States. We enjoyed a most delightful fellowship-supper with the Drs. Schmidt and Klassen in the Klassen home. We will always remember this as a great treat on this trip. Schmidts still live in small quarters as their new home is not yet ready.

Friday morning we saw the hospital. It is a very active place; the doctors have more than they can do. Both are much needed and seem to do excellent work. Clara and John are a fine happy couple. Clara is doing a fine piece of work too and makes things go around there. Dr. Klassen has taken on a couple of apprentices who have made marvelous progress in dentistry.

He set them to work in the morning, and then he went along with us to show us the rest of Philadelphia —some of the homes, the wagon factory, tin shop, machine shop where they make all kinds of things, the cheese factory and creamery, with which they also have an ice plant. Then also the power light plant. Then dinner at Dr. Schmidts'. In the afternoon they went along with us to the Indian mission station. Rev. Jacob Isaac, chairman of the mission committee of Fernheim, and Mr. Franz Wiens, member of the same, took us on two light wagons to the mission station. We were glad to see the station and get acquainted with the work they are doing. There are three families at work. Mr. Henry Duersken is the farmer. He supervises a good-sized cotton field, and kaffircorn field, and an orchard and garden. The purpose is to teach the Indians to work. His brother, Martin, has charge of a school they tried to establish. This brother and wife have taken in four little Indian children. The work is no doubt difficult; the Indians are of the nomadic type and stay but a few weeks in one place. The mission is a cooperative effort of the General Conference and Brethren Mennonites and the Evangelical Church. They seem to work together quite well.

Saturday night there was a meeting in Philadelphia with a full house. Sunday 8:00 A.M. we attended the Indian service; Missionary Giesbrecht spoke in the native tongue and asked me to make a few remarks. About 125 Indians in attendance and probably that many Mennonites. At nine o'clock A.M. in Philadelphia church a good choir sang selections, Rev. Abraham Harder introduced us; Brother Stucky spoke first with Dr. Klassen interpreting. Then I spoke on our mission work in China, as requested.

A delightful dinner again with Drs. Schmidt and Klassens. Then a short visit with Rev. Harder, and we said goodbye to Philadelphia. Mr. Franz Wiens took us to Rev. John Epp, then for a meeting in Karlsruhe village. There are seven villages in this vicinity, a bit far from Philadelphia so had a meeting with them here. That was a hot night—the hottest on this trip as far as my feeling of it was concerned. The schoolhouse was packed and many outside at the windows again. From the attention in the meetings and what many said it seemed they were glad that the Board had allowed us to stop over here. We certainly enjoyed our stay with them.

From there we went to Rev. John Epps for the night, and the next morning Mr. Wiens took us by spring wagon for a ride toward the railroad. Monday night we got to one of the Menno colony villages, Lindenau, or number nineteen. Spent the night in Jacob Fehr's home. Tuesday 5:00 A.M. started out for the last lap. It was another hot day; the weather is at this time about like the hot August days in Kansas. We were lucky to have an umbrella which kept some of the heat off. By about five o'clock we arrived at the railroad. There is no station, but the Mennonites have built a shed where they can store some materials and can get under if it rains. There were several others who were going on the train at the same time with us.

In the party going on the train with us were Missionary Giesbrecht and Rev. Siemens who are going to Asuncion and then to visit the Old Mennonite mission stations. They wanted to come a week earlier, but when they heard we were coming they waited so they could see us. Mr. Siemens' daughter, Annie, was along also on her way to study nursing in Asuncion. Then there were two ladies from the Friesland group—a Mrs. Nibuhr and Miss Mariechen Fast. From the Menno Colony, Mr. Peter B. Giesbrecht and Simon F. Toevs, going to Asuncion. In the evening there were a number of others coming from Friesland by train and stayed there over night also.

CANNING FOR CAMPS

A program of Canning and Drying for Mennonite Civilian Public Service Camps will again be conducted in 1944. Last year's contributions resulted in over-supplies of tomatoes and pickles in practically all camps, whereas requirements were not fully met for fruits, peas, corn, beets, and other staple vegetables. Jars and sugar ration points will again be provided by M.C.C. A folder to be released on about April 1 and further articles in the church papers will give full information about the program.

Some of the men asked me to lead in a devotional period. We had not a lantern or light of any kind in the whole party, so we had to do things in the dark. Had a number of Bible verses by memory and then a few remarks and then sang a number of old time songs. After a few prayers they continued to sing a good number of familiar hymns. I was surprised how many hymns these folks know by heart. Had a most pleasant fellowship.

The night was spent by everyone throwing a canvas or a few covers on the ground, some in the shed and most of us outside. They had some flynets to keep the mosquitoes off, and we had a pleasant night at that. Then Wednesday morning we left by weekly train for Puerto Casado. There were another two days of waiting, and now we are on the small steamer "Toro" going back to Asuncion. Will likely not arrive there until Sunday night. Were to be there in the forenoon, but they had too much to load so are about half a day late now which is Saturday, Feb. 12. Eight o'clock just now, and have about twenty-four hours ahead if we don't lose more time. That will crowd us to get ready for the plane to Curityba Monday morning the 14th.

(The above letter was written by Missionary W. C. Voth from Puerto Casado, Paraquay, on February 11, 1944.)

January 17, 1944

Dear readers of The Mennonite:

On January 15 the morning sky was bright and rosy as the sun rose over the towering ANDES. It was indeed a majestic sight when, on the wings of our Pan American Air-bird, we soared higher and higher to wing our way across these lofty mountains. In a last glimpse downward we saw a picturesque beauty the expansive city of Santiago, sprawled out as it were on a massive green carpet just beginning to stir from its night's slumber. But our minds could no longer dwell there, for our eyes turned eastward to see the baren, rugged rocks pointing skyward as though in praise of the creator of Heaven and earth and all that is in it. Now we ooked into dark crevices below; there were steep walls whose pinnacles glowed in the caressing, golden morning sun. The higher peaks sparkled in heir drapery of glistening white snow patches; and o complete their beauty a few dainty, fleecy clouds loated leisurely around their necks.

Then the plane wound its way between two tately sentinels and so near the great granite shouler of the one that the lady in front of me gasped Oh! I hope the wing tip won't scratch its side." About this moment our attention was called to the statue of "The Christ of the Andes." We passed ight over it. This statue stands on the boundaryne between Chile and Argentina. It is to repreent a symbol of peace between the two nations. This is a magnificient idea and ideal. But there lso seemed something sad and cold and quiet about this statue standing there in its isolation in the midst of these vast, almost inexcessible mountains. So the question came, in how far might this also symbolize human thinking—that Christ is adorable, Christ's teachings are great and lofty ideals, but relegated to an isolated spot where they cannot mingle with the woof and warf of everyday life.

Our next destination was Buenos Aires, the city of "Good Air". We were met by Rev. Webber of the Old Mennonite Mission. It was the first time a welcome smile met us at an airport. He informed us of the Rev. Isaac's and Miss Schrag's arrival in the city, and took us to the same hotel. It was a most welcome surprise to us to meet these friends here. Together we visited the Webbers in their home where Mrs. Webber had prepared a delicious lunch. Together we also made a trip to Trenque Lauquin where the Old Mennonite Workers Conference met. It was a day of stimulating fellowship. Most of their missionaries and national workers were present. Our stay was all too short. However we were pleased and impressed with the apparent good work this mission has been doing. The cordial relation that seemed to exist between the missionaries and national workers was inspiring. After this brief visit here we expect to go to the Mennonites in Paraguay.

Consider Dependency Problem

A major issue confronting the C.P.S. program is the matter of support for the dependents of C.P.S. men. This problem is accentuated by the large number of fathers that Selective Service has made available for induction at the present time. This problem is being given special consideration with the intention of recommending some plan to the churches to meet the need. Figures as of September 30, 1943, reveal that in C.P.S. camps, 690 men have wives; 198 have children; and 114 have other types of dependents.

Relief Unit for the Middle East

Plans are shaping for the sending of a relief unit to the Middle East. Plans are in terms of a 12-man unit to be complete on the field sometime in July. The unit will include the two workers already in the Middle East, two nurses, a dietitian, a Yugoslav interpreter, several driver-mechanics and First Aid men. Plans are being formulated in terms of administering a camp of Yugoslav refugees someplace in the vicinity of Cairo, Egypt.

CHRIST'S CHALLENGE

"Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Matt. 28:19-20.

From the time of the creation of man God has revealed his plan for humanity directly to man, or indirectly to man through men. He made the greatest revelation to man when he sent Jesus Christ to reveal His plan of love and salvation to a sinful world. When this revelation was finished and Christ was ready to be received into Heaven to be with the Father, He commanded that the work which He had begun, should be continued and His message of salvation be brought to all the people of the world. This call still sounds to all His disciples, at the present time more urgently than ever before. The fields are ripe unto the harvest. The non-Christians, especially in foreign lands, are receptive to the Gospel. Still, in the face of present difficulties, the hate and strife in the world, and the terrible destruction which is going on, there comes the question and the answer:

> "Is this the time, O church of Christ, to sound
> Retreat? . . . Is this the time to halt? . . . No!
> Rather strengthen stakes and lengthen cords,
> Enlarge thy plans and gifts, O thou elect, . . .
> Great things attempt for Him, great things expect,
> Whose love imperial is, whose power sublime."

Shown here are Brother and Sister George B. Neufeld, who are planning on going to the African mission field. They will serve under the Congo Inland Mission Board upon the basis of an agreement made with it by our Foreign Mission Board. The Neufelds are members of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas. They are now taking some work at Bethel College.

There is another side to this question. When we survey the wonderous Cross on which the Prince of Glory died, our hearts are warmed with gratitude and love towards this prince of Glory who gave His life that we might live. We worship Him. But must not our worship seem empty to Him when we fail to realize our responsibility of bringing the good news to the darkened lands? How often have we been the recipients of some little service or deed of love? When we felt our responsibility and inquired as to charges for these services we received the answer, "Pass it on to others." Christ expects us to "pass on" the Good News. We cannot pay for it in dollars and cents. The only acceptable payment is complete surrender to Him. We ponder,

> "What do I owe? Nay, Lord—what do I not?
> All that I am and all that I have got;
> All that I am and that how small a thing,
> Compared with all Thy goodly fostering.
> What do I owe to Christ, my Lord, my King?
> That all my life be one sweet offering;
> That all my life to noblest heights aspire,
> That all I do be touched with holy fire."

In gratitude we yield ourselves to Him who saved us by His atoning death, to serve Him wherever He calls us.

There is work for the Kingdom of God all over the world. God has called us to serve Him in Dark Africa. This continent, the second largest on the globe, has about 150,000,000 people who have never heard the news of salvation. They are groping in spiritual darkness for the light that only Christ can bring into their hearts. They are living in fear, superstitution, and pagan worship. There also, the field is ready for the harvest. They are eager to receive the gospel, but to bring them from their life of superstitution to a life of faith is possible only through the grace of God. This responsibility of teaching them the Good News is too great for us to accept, but we trust in Christ for He has promised to be with us, and "With God all things are possible." We are looking forward to the time when travel conditions will make it possible to get out. We trust that God will open the doors at His appointed time. Our work will probably be to bring the gospel through the educational field. We sincerely covet your prayers as God leads us to our field of service.

—Mr. and Mrs. George B. Neufeld, Inman, Kansas

IMPRESSIONS

"I am impressed with the church houses across our land as compared with the complete absence of such buildings in a 'heathen' land. But I am impressed also with the shortage of warm friendship and abounding human confidence in our 'civilized' land as contrasted with such warmth and confidence in 'heathen' lands. The church houses must have been unheated, for the heart of the gospel is 'Love God . . . Love your fellow men.' Such gospel is generated through Bible study, prayer, the ordinances, worship, the home."

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

MUTUAL AID

Chinese have an expression—"Gung-ho"—which neans "work together." That is the meaning of nutual aid. In order for a thing to be mutual it must vork two ways; it must benefit two or more groups ngaged in a common enterprise. Working together n a common cause is a desirable method of performng the daily tasks of human society. Mutual aid nay be expressed in one of two ways; it may be the esult of a spontaneous expression of love and symathy, or it may be expressed by means of a sysematic organization based on a mutual principle.

Spontaneous Mutual Aid

Mutual aid that is spontaneous is characterized n the life of the family, the neighborhood, and the inship group. Here it is motivated generally by ove, sentiment, and custom. Who of us does not emember the day when farmers in rural neighboroods did not work together much more frequently han they do now in performing the seasonal tasks hat need to be done? Threshing, haying, butchering, lling ice house, husking, and road building are all lustrations of spontaneous mutual aid that once ere very common in rural communities throughout merica. Such practices are today less common mong rural people.

Systematic Mutual Aid

With the decline of spontaneous expressions of utual aid on the one hand, we find the rapid rise f mutual aid on the other. In 1943 there were 5,000 organized cooperatives in the United States ith a membership of 16,000,000. Many of these e found in Mennonite communities in the form of l stations, creameries, grain elevators, stores, and edit associations. Whether mutual aid is spontanous or systematic is not so important as is the move behind the expression. Among Christian people e motive ought to be love; love for each other and r all men. Mutual aid should characterize the Chrisan's method of work, not selfish competitive individlism. Men ought to work together not to exploit third party but to assist themselves and the other rty.

New Testament Basis

The practice of mutual aid characterized the daily e of the early Christians. This is reflected in the e and teachings of every one of the early Christians om Jesus on down to the least of the Apostles. In ts 1:15 we see how a program was organized to nder mutual aid; in Acts 20:35 we are admonished assist those who are weak; in Rom. 15:1-2 Paul monishes brothers to assume responsibility for each her; in Phil. 2:4 we are told not to look out merely our own interests but for the interests of others well; in II Cor. 8:12-14 we are reminded of our er-dependence and hence, Christian responsibility share with one another. The list of Scriptural erences to mutual aid could be extended indefinitely. What we need more of today in our community life is a practice of mutual aid as found in the New Testament and less selfish, individualism as found in the secular, profit-seeking banking and business world. Some people have come to think that capitalism is sacred and almost God-given. It is not, but the admonition to practice Christian mutual aid is given to God.

Day of Miracles Not Past

By Theodore Schmidt

"The day of miracles is not past." That is what Mrs. F. J. Isaac says in connection with their going to India. Many might be inclined to say that there is nothing miraculous about it, but that it was the result of Missionary Isaac's "stick-to-it-iveness."

How can we explain a miracle? On January 30 that question very likely cropped out in many Sunday School class discussions. To get an answer, we may approach the question from various angles. Let us consider two ways of finding an explanation which may well run parallel to each other, but often tend to go in opposite directions.

We have the rational approach and the scriptural approach. The first may be contained in the second, but frequently is forced to stand alone.

In Isaiah 1:18, it says, "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord." Here we are bidden to use the rational approach in conjunction with God, not apart from Him. The tendency with man is that if he cannot reason it out he just does not believe it; he puts it in the myth-story class. Take an example. In Joshua 3 and 4 the miracle of how the Israelites passed through the Jordan, with the water standing in a heap to the north of them, is related. It makes sense to us when we see Boulder Dam—made by the hand of man—hold back a wall of water 700 feet high, but it is unbelievable that God should hold back the water of the Jordan River with His invisible hand until the people of Israel had passed through. Is the thing created greater than the Creator?

In Isaiah 55:8, 9 and 11, we find God speaking thus: "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." This tells me that we must take in faith miracles in the Bible which we cannot explain until we reach that time and place of which Paul speaks when he says, "For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known." (I Cor. 13:12). Is the age of miracles past? I would certainly agree with Mrs. Isaac that the age of miracles is not past.

"The violence of the wicked shall sweep them away, Because they refuse to do justice." Prov. 21:7.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

Willard W. Wiebe, Aberdeen, Idaho

MARCH 17—"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life. . ." John 3:36

Salvation for the soul is not rationed. God does not issue a priority on this precious "commodity." Nor will God force the new birth upon us. It is in easy access to all who realize their sin and their need of a Savior. Think on this and thank God that our application for salvation needn't pass a ration ruling for acceptance. However, it is dependent upon our reaching out in faith and believing, as God's Word proclaims, that Christ's sacrifice on the cross is sufficient penalty for our sinful life.

MARCH 18—"These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that he have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God." I John 5:13

Am I in doubt as to my salvation? Assurance of salvation is not rationed. God has not issued a priority on this precious "commodity" either. It is not God's will that Christians should be uncertain in this all important realm. There is nothing in the entire universe that can and should be more certain than our salvation. ". . . I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." II Timothy 1:12.

MARCH 19—"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee." Isaiah 26:3

Certainly in this day of unrest peace is a scarcity. Peace seems almost extinct. Is it rationed? No, a priority is not needed to enjoy the fullness of the peace which only God can give. Scripture is filled with promises to Christians that peace is theirs if they but draw nigh to the Prince of Peace. "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." Philippians 4:6, 7

MARCH 20—"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." I John 1:9

No rationing board governs the forgiveness of our sins. We need not wait in uncertainty for our sins to be forgiven. God waits for us. We need not carry the load of guilt any longer. A little boy once incorrectly quoted this verse to me in this manner, "If we confess our sins, God is faithful enough to forgive our sins." If we are ready to confess, God is faithful to His promise and will forgive.

MARCH 21—"For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." II Corinthians 8:12

God has given freely of His gifts. God has not rationed them to us, yet we are prone to ration our gifts to Him. For example, when it comes to our possessions, how much of a priority does God have? We may think that we can not afford to give, but in the light of eternity, can we afford not to? "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." II Corinthians 9:6. Shall we determine our giving in the light of the sowing, or in the light of the reaping?

MARCH 22—". . . the Father seeketh such to worship him." John 4:23

Is it an easy thing for the Father to find those that worship Him "in spirit and in truth?" How long must He seek? Statistics tell us that in America about one half the parents do not think it worthwhile to send their children to Sunday School, but these same parents would not stand for it if they could not send their children. Are we more interested in work than in worship? No twist of logic can convince me that we seek first the kingdom of God as we thus ration our worship to Him.

MARCH 23—"Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." Hebrews 4:16

There is said to be a chapel in St. Peter's at Rome the door of which is opened only once in twenty-fiv years. As the time approaches for the doors to open the pilgrims gather, all of them eager to pray afte the long interval in a place considered to be of specia sanctity. Let us suppose that our prayer could onl be offered, or would only be heard once in a quarte of a century. Thank God that auditions with th King are not rationed!

When Not to Talk

On the cover of our Church Messenger you find these words, "The Church with a friendly welcome," and it is true our church should be, and is, a friendly church. Meeting and greeting one another is an important part of our assembling together. Paul mentioned this in his letter to the Romans, "Salute one another with an holy kiss." (Rom. 16:16)

But the time for friendly greetings and visiting is not during the services, whether it be the Sunday School hour or the worship service. When the pianist begins the prelude—and even before—that should put an end to conversations. "The Lord is in Hi Holy Temple, let all the earth keep silence befor Him."

Let us "worship the Lord in the beauty of his hol ness." Silence aids in shutting out the world and in fo cusing our thoughts on communing with our Lor This hour is so precious to true worshipers, don't spo it for someone else by causing a disturbance with ur necessary talking. —Church Messenge

March 2, 1944

Dear Rev. Weinbrenner,

I wish to express my appreciation for our church papers, especially The Mennonite. I've meant to do this for a long time, and after I had read your small article "Youth Uninformed" I thought this was as good a time as any to do it.

It is very true that we young people are very much uninformed as to our conference activities. This has become very evident to me during the time I've spent in C.P.S. camps; furthermore we, and I think some older people also, are too little informed on the history of the Mennonite church, its principles and fundamental beliefs. Since I've been in camp and have come into contact with members of the various other branches of the Mennonite church, I have begun to realize just how little I knew about our own General Conference.

During this time I've had opportunity to study Mennonite history, not only in camp but also in the M.C.C. Relief Workers' Training School at Goshen, Indiana, last summer. Mennonitism has never meant more to me than it does now. It makes me feel happy to be a Mennonite with the background that our forefathers have given us. At the same time it makes me feel very humble to think how little we sometimes appreciate our church and how we forget that our ancestors were martyred for the same beliefs that we now sometimes take so lightly.

Our pastor, Rev. P. H. Richert, for years has been trying to create in us a desire to read our church papers. Time and again, at every opportunity, he urged us, especially the young people, to read them more. Now while in C.P.S. our church papers have begun to mean very much to me; not only does it help me to keep informed on our church activities, but also I appreciate the spiritual thoughts that are expressed in the articles.

May the Lord bless you further in this work.

Sincerely,
Waldo Janzen

CHANGE IN MEDICAL POLICY

The medical statement providing for the health maintenance of C.P.S. men has been broadened to include eye examination and treatment. Eye examinations will be provided where recommended by the camp physician, and M.C.C. will assume one half the cost of glasses or other treatment recommended by a reliable doctor up to a maximum annual M.C.C. liability of ten dollars.

PEACE SECTION NOTES

Farm Deferments on New Basis

Minimum production requirements for deferment of essential agricultural workers have been doubled by Selective Service. Such workers must now produce at least sixteen "war units" a year. The previous minimum was eight units.

Selective Service has also ordered farm deferments to be limited to six months which is the rule for other occupational deferments, and abolished Class 3-C, which is the class for men deferred because of dependency as well as agricultural essentiality.

Logic of the War Situation

"The logic of the situation seems to demand that those who refuse to fight when their country is at war should meet the involuntary sacrifice of those who are drafted to kill their enemies, with a voluntary sacrifice fully as heroic for the civilian relief of human suffering."

Needed Supplies Arrive in Paraguay

Dr. G. S. Klassen, dentist to Paraguay, has finally received a valuable shipment containing anesthetic and other dentistry supplies. He writes: "Finally four months after we left home our dental material came. January 14 the wagon drove by the hospital and unloaded all our equipment, also our personal stuff. It arrived in fine shape and we are indeed thankful.... Up till now we have managed to extract 1,000 teeth here in Philadelphia. Also have many mouths ready for dentures. Now with this shipment here we will have plenty of anesthetic and other materials to keep us busy twenty-four hours a day—if only I did not always have to stop and sleep some every day!"

YOUTH JOTTINGS

—May we introduce you to four efficient workers? Shown here are four young people who play a very important part in the production of this paper. Three of them set up the type. They work with two big machines. Gliding their nimble fingers over a keyboard that looks somewhat like that of a typewriter, they make letters jump together into words and words into lines. Mistakes can't be erased in this work, for a line is set after the molten metal has cooled. If there is a mistake in the line, the metal bar—or "slug" as it is called—must be discarded and another one set. The three operators shown here make few mistakes. The fourth student—for all four are students working for the Bethel College Press—does the proofreading. It is her work to see that the printed matter is just like the original copy—although very graciously she even corrects errors which may appear in the original copy. She puts in or cuts out periods, commas, and capitals as the book of rules may suggest. All mistakes which the typesetters have made must be caught by her and corrected. People have commented upon the comparative rarity of errors in this paper. The three typesetters are: Dorothy Wedel, a member of the First Church of Christian, Moundridge, Kansas. She is majoring in English. Sophie Schmidt, a member of the Alexanderwohl Mennonite Church, Goessel, Kansas. Sophie is interested in commerce. Ethel Dick, a member of the Hebron Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kansas, is planning to major in music. Ellen Waltner, who reads proof, is a member of the Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, and she plans to teach English.

—Two women candidates for relief work: "It is reported that two of our members have presented themselves to the Mennonite Central Committee as candidates for foreign relief work, namely, Miss Marie K. Fast, who has been a nurse in Portland, Oregon, and Miss Salome Fast, who is a nurse at Ypsilanti, Michigan. Without doubt the field of foreign relief work is one of the most challenging for Christian people today. Let us pray for these candidates and for others who may also be considering such work. Let us pray that doors of service may open for such who are willing to go."—Bulletin, Bethel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota.

—The Intermediate C.E. Society of the First Mennonite Church Beatrice, Nebraska, recently gave a program including such topics as, "The Non-Swearing of Oaths" and "Secret Societies."

—Willard Wiebe, ministerial student at Bethel College, was recently elected President of the Student Volunteers of that school. Willard, who is writing the daily devotional messages for this month, is a graduate of the Los Angeles Bible Institute and a member of the First Mennonite Church, Aberdeen, Idaho. Arnold Nickel, ministerial student from Mountain Lake, Minnesota, and a graduate of the Northwestern Bible School in Minneapolis, was elected vice-president. Bertha Ewort, a member of the Johannestal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas, was elected secretary. Marguerite Sprunger, a member of the First Mennonite Church, Berne, Indiana, and mission candidate, was elected program chairman, and Orlando Schmidt, ministerial student from the Buhler (Kansas) Mennonite Church, was elected prayer chairman.

—Louise Duerksen, a Bethel College senior who completed her work with the winter quarter, has accepted a position on the faculty of the Sylvia, Kansas, high school. In college Louise was president of the Home Economics Club and served as an Assistant in the Home Economics Department. She is a member of the Inman Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas.

—Orlando Goering is chairman of the C.E. society of the Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas. He is also a member of the library committee. Orlando has taken some courses for ministerial training and is much interested in church work although engaging in farming.

—First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California: Fourteen girls met in the Church basement last Thursday evening for the organization of a sewing circle. After a brief program consisting of devotionals, a duet, and a reading, and a short business session, the girls prepared and stamped tea towels to be sewed and embroidered by Mrs. Habegger's Indian girls at the Montana mission station.

As one of their activities the girls wish to sponsor the gathering and sending of used clothing for relief purposes through the Mennonite Central Committee.

—Bethel Mennonite Church, Fortuna, Missouri: The pastor is conducting a mid-week study class at the parsonage. The class is studying the books on "Mennonite Heritage." Seventeen members were present at the last meeting. The meeting is opened by a short devotional conducted by one of the members; then the roll is called to which each answers with a Bible verse. After an hour's explanation and discussion, the class is dismissed. The boys go to Rev. Raid's Industrial Shop and work on their projects. Many worthwhile and valuable things are being made from the native walnut, cedar, and oak wood. The girls spend the remainder of the evening sewing and embroidering. The Missionary Committee of the C.E. Society is sponsoring an interesting and successful library project. Everyone who put one or more books into the library fund is given permission to check out a book for a two week period. A good sized library has been acquired this way, and each Sunday after church services the library is a busy place as the librarian checks the books in and out. Evidently much reading is being done, and many people are given access to books they would otherwise perhaps not get to read. The committee plans to return the books to the owners at the end of the year, and then a new library wil be started. —Corr.

White Harvest Fields

not allow this small measure of success to blind us to the great areas of the world still lying white and untouched by the reapers. Let us look at the largest of these areas.

South America

In Brazil a vast section of the great Amazon basin, equal to half the area of South America, is practically without gospel witness. It is estimated that there may be eight million people in this area, including many primitive Indian tribes living in the forests and jungles along this great river. In practically every other country of South America areas unoccupied by missionaries are reported.

Africa

The area in the center of Africa between the Sahara Desert and the Congo, densely populated by Negro and Hamitic peoples, is without a Christian missionary. It is fifteen hundred miles from the farthest east mission station in Nigeria to the nearest station on the Nile. Someone has said, "It is as if the United States had one missionary in Maine and one in Texas and not a ray of gospel light between."

Asia

In the "heart of Asia" lies a vast area which is till the stronghold of the powers of darkness. Let us glance at each part of this area.

West of Manchuria and north of China proper is Mongolia. Two-thirds of its area, called Outer Monolia, is now entirely closed to the gospel. Two or hree million people roam its broad plains. They are eligious zealots and are hard to win for Christ.

Chinese Turkestan (Sinkiang), in the westernmost art of China to the north of Tibet, is a land of sandy asins and lofty mountains. It is inhabited by about our million people of various races. The few missionries who were formerly there have been forced by ussian influence to leave that land. However, a reent report seems to indicate that the Chinese are gain in full control and the door for mission work may again be open.

South of Chinese Turkestan and north of India the land of Tibet, sometimes called the "Citadel f Satan." This land is a high plateau of from ten o seventeen thousand feet altitude, surrounded by he loftiest mountains in the world. Its three and a alf million people are hostile to foreigners. Lamanm, "a peculiarly satanic form of Buddhism," holds he people firmly in its grasp and burdens them with he support of a vast priesthood. The chief religious tes are the propitiation of evil spirits. A number missionaries are working along the borders waiting r entrance to this darkened land.

Between Tibet and India on the southern slope of e Himalaya mountains lie two small independent ngdoms, Nepal and Bhutan. Six million cheerful, ogressive people of varying races and religions have osed their land to Europeans and the gospel as well.

Beyond Khyber Pass on India's northwest frontier d to the west of Tibet is the mountainous land of ghanistan. A despotic government rules its ten llion fanatic Moslems. It is a land of moral darkness, with a government characterized by corruption, bribery, and cruelty. The death penalty awaits a profession of Christianity. Foreigners are largely excluded. Although no other field has been more tightly closed to mission efforts, there are encouraging signs that it may be opening.

Russian Central Asia (formerly Turkestan, Bokhara or Khiva) is the part of Asiatic Russia extending from the Caspian Sea east to Chinese Turkestan. In this area live fifteen million people of many races and tribes, now under Soviet control. Only a few missionaries have ever braved the difficulties presented by nature and Moslem fanaticism. A group of Mennonites once started work among the Kirghiz tribesmen, but even this is said to have been stopped by the first World War.

As a summary of this great "Heart of Asia", picture a vast sweep of some of the roughest and most inaccessible territory in the world, a territory larger than either the United States or Europe and inhabited by thirty-four million people. In all this area the spiritual night is relieved by only a few tiny lights of gospel witness.

This has been but a glimpse of the larger unoccupied areas of the world. We must also consider that in the so-called "occupied" areas for which missions have accepted responsibility there are often sections entirely without gospel witness. The inadequate staffs of missions only too often are unable to cope with the need. In the non-Christian world as a whole there are on the average only nineteen missionaries for every million people. After nearly two thousand years of effort Jesus could still truly say, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest." (Matt. 9:37, 38).

Can it be that lack of prayer on the part of the church has hindered the evangelization of these unoccupied fields? Have we been so much concerned with our own needs that we have failed to see the waiting harvest field to which Christ directs our attention? Let us give ourselves to earnest and believing prayer that reapers may be sent forth into these great untouched areas of His harvest.

A good deal of the factual material for this article was taken from The Progress of World Wide Missions by Robert Hall Glover, New York; Harper and Brothers, 1938.

Too Great a Concession to Militarists

It is with considerable hesitation that one calls attention to a paragraph in the otherwise excellent book, Must Christians Fight, in which too great a concession is made to militarists. But since this book is being advertised in our papers and spread in our conference, including the C.P.S. camps, duty demands that something be said about it. Otherwise I recommend this book.

On page 54 and 55 the passage in Genesis 9:6 (to which verse 5 belongs) is dealt with by mentioning two interpretations of it, both of which are presented as "possible" interpretations.

1. The first interpretation finds in this passage the divine authorization for human government, not only to kill murderers (who alone are here included) but also to "wage whatever wars they may deem necessary." This last deduction is impossible. There is nothing in this passage, directly or indirectly, about a license for governments to wage war as they deem necessary. Even the later law of Moses, which includes others besides murderers under capital punishment, gives no such license. Verse 5 reads: "At the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man ." This "requirement" is strictly limited to murderers and prohibits man to do as he deems necessary. To call this a "possible" interpretation is too great a concession to militarists, who will find much comfort in it, especially since it comes from the peace churches. It weakens our testimony against war, which is regrettable.

2. The second interpretation likens this requirement by God for capital punishment of murderers to the siful "violence" of man before the flood, which caused the flood. When God "requires" capital punishment, it is impossible to liken it to such wicked violence as brought about the greatest judgment of history upon man.

This compels us to leave Genesis 9:6 and its context, verse 5, just as it stands: "At the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man." The fact that the "brother" was to see to this punishment shows that there was no personal hate behind it, but the same love that was behind the flaming sword of the angel at the gate of Paradise, as Genesis 3:22 clearly shows. God did not want man to live forever in his fallen state; He loved man too much for that. This angel was no mere bluff, but represented just what God meant, namely justice and love. For believers in Christ this angel does not stand there anymore. Thank theLord! If God could have saved man without this angel of justice, he would certainly have done so. Those who deny the justice of capital punishment under the law, deny the need of Christ's fulfilling this law by "becoming a curse for us" according to the law. Gal. 3:13.

In love for the truth and the church,
—P. H. Richert

Brotherhood of the Eastern District Conference

By Norman K. Berky

(In this and succeeding issues you will have an opportunity to read a very interesting story. It is that of the Brotherhood organizations of the Eastern District Conference. The years covered are those from 1917-1942. As far as the editor knows the complete history of this organization has appeared in no other publication. Read this story that is chuck full of interesting facts. rw.)

It has not been easy to gather this material together. It may not be altogether accurate in some things. Some items of information were not all accomplishments, as they were not all completed; some barely reached beyond the discussion stage; other things that the Brotherhood made possible are not mentioned in the minutes, nor indeed can all be known in the various details of various individual lives. We shall mention only a few of the charter members by name. We hope you will pardon any unintentional errors that may have been made.

This has been a larger job than I counted on when I said "yes" to your president, Brother Ely Fretz. If tires, gas, and increasing confusion in our business lives had not given me a few weeks release from work, I could not have done what I promised you to do.

The plan of approach to the subject is:

1. Introduction and Origin.
2. Accomplishments in Material Support.
3. Accomplishments in Fellowship.
4. Accomplishments in the Deepening of Spiritual Lives.
5. Conclusions.

1.Origin

On September 22, 1917, at the Eastern District Sunday School Convention held at Perkasie, an address was delivered by Maxwell H. Kratz. Acting upon some suggestions which he made, the resolutions committee recommended that a "committee of three devise ways and means of bringing into existence a movement of laymen for service." This committee was to cooperate with three lay members of the Home Mission Board. A committee was appointed and issued a call for the first meeting on July 22, 1918. This call in the form of a letter stated the purpose, namely, "to form an organization of the laymen of our church for the purpose of getting our men better acquainted with each other, keeping them more keenly interested in various phases of the work of our church, fostering among them a keener and stronger loyalty to its principles, and to have them stand more closely together in Christian service." A meeting was held in the Souderton Mennonite Church on Sunday afternoon, August 11, 1918. and organization effected.

2. Material Support

September 1, 1919, the Brotherhood was invited to assume the collection of a fund of $60,000 during the following three years for relief, reconstruction, missions, and education. This was to be an acid test for the young organization; it would mean hard work organizing for the campaign and would open the Brotherhood to criticisms of all kinds. A campaign committee was appointed to visit each church to present the cause. Literature, bulletins, pledge cards, and record cards were prepared and distributed to each church. September 6, one year later, it was reporte that $50,000 had been subscribed to the fund which was known as the Thanksgiving Fund.

Cash collected was:

9/6/20	$15,308.31
9/5/21	26,634.04
9/3/22	37,467.24

At the end of three years in September, 1922, th fund was incomplete and was ordered continued an other year. September 29, 1923, the total amount of cash collected for the fund was $41,663.99.

To illustrate how some of the money was used for relief; an emergency case arose. An urgent appeal for $1000 came from the Mennonite Church at Crefeld, Germany. Many early Mennonite settlers had come from this church. $1000 was sent by Conference.

While this collecting of the Thanksgiving Fund vas going on, a call came for the collection of clothng and supplies for Southern Russia. The Eastern District Conference requested the Brotherhood to take harge of the work. This was done, and the articles gathered were shipped through the Mennonite Central Committee. On September 4, 1922, it was reported hat the clothing drive had resulted in twenty-three bales of clothing and $100 cash to purchase additional upplies.

September 29, 1923, we read that Conference ordered that no further efforts be made to complete he Thanksgiving Fund, that various needs of the hurches demanded a budget of $10,000, of which o per cent was to be for the Eastern District Conference, 30 per cent for our educational institutions, and o per cent for the Home for the Aged. This new fund as to be called the Forward Movement Fund, and ie Brotherhood was requested to assume the collection f it. However, because of the criticism that the rotherhood was only a money-raising organization it as decided to ask Conference to raise the money irough its own organization with the Brotherhood elping in the detail work under Conference direction.

October 27, 1924, action was taken to raise $500 early for three years to pay for books of Mennote History in the Pennypacker collection in the orary at Perkiomen Seminary, and otherwise further ie establishing of a nucleus for gathering books of ennonite History. Afterward, we believe, this beme $100 and was paid for several years and later it into the Conference Budget until fully paid.

September 26, 1925, the Brotherhood assisted in e drive for the Eastern District Conference budget $4,300.00 This assistance was given Conference r several years thereafter. The Brotherhood had large part in establishing the budget method of iancing as at present used by Conference. This ethod has also been adopted by some of our churches it stands as a much needed piece of work done. has lifted church finances to a higher and more uitable plane.

October 1, 1927, we read of the approval of a plan sell Farm Lien Bonds to finance the settlement of ssian Mennonites in Canada. There seems to be record of how many were sold. There was an lebtedness of $1,200,000 to the Canadian Pacific ilroad and 10,000 more Mennonites were to be ved into Canada at an additional cost of $1,500,000. ne of these bonds were sold throughout the Confere by various individuals. (This applies only to Eastern District Conference portion of that supt rendered by all Mennonite bodies through the nnonite Central Committee.)

)ctober 24, 1931, an offering of $86.00 was given. e-half of this was given to the needy in Altoona, the other half sent in the form of food packages to starving Mennonite families in Russia.

October 14, 1933, we assisted the Eastern District Conference again in raising $1,500.00 for Russian refugees in Harbin, China. October 27, 1934, $1321.24 was reported paid.

October 22, 1932, a donation was given to the Germantown Mennonite Church toward expenses in renovating that historic church.

November 7, 1936, we raised $300.00 to assist in establishing publication work among the Mennonites in Western Canada. This was paid in full. More recently Spanish relief was extended through Orie Miller.

One young man back in the early years received some financial assistance in preparing himself to become a medical missionary. In 1925 there was a gift to a missionary of $42.25 and in 1926, a gift to a missionary of $25.00.

October 30, 1937, a resolution was passed to assist a young man in getting his training at Bluffton College. $250.00 yearly was voted for a period of four years until the completion of his education. This was done, however, the amount required yearly was a little less than $250.00.

The Brotherhood through the years has supported our institutions, educational and the Old Folks Home. These two constantly recur almost from its inception, and support was given as new calls came in from year to year as noted in the foregoing remarks. The support for Bluffton and Witmarsum Seminary was large and varied and for Bluffton over a long period of time. We assisted in the various drives and opened doors into Conference homes to permit the College to make its own drives at various times. Perhaps a note here would be in order. At all times great care was taken not to conflict with the authority or responsibility of other units of Conference or Conference itself. There has been nothing dominating about the Brotherhood in any of its relationships within Conference. Its attitude has always been cooperative, friendly, and helpful in every way. All this can easily be said and more.

Financial and moral support was given to the Young People's Retreat from its start; $25.00 yearly and for several years part of the deficit of operating the Retreat was made up by the Brotherhood. Recently it has supported the development of Menolan.

Recently it was proposed and favorably acted upon to adopt a plan for a fund to be called the Mennonite Brotherhood Scholarship Plan. The plan is to raise $100.00 annually for the Fund; its purpose to assist young men to receive a Christian education. This plan needs some smoothing down and will probably get it. There is nothing so healthy as group discussion, when the men know what they want and proceed to get it. We do need clarification upon the point of what a Christian education is and in what institutions it may be obtained. Some of us are all too much at sea here and we need to come to some common understanding.

IN MEMORIAM

OBITUARY OF HENRY T. REIMER

Henry T. Reimer was born February 27, 1881, in Hochfeld, Russia. He came to America with his parents, Abram and Margaret Reimer in 1883 and settled on a farm west of Beatrice.

In the year of 1899 he was baptized upon his confession of faith by Elder Gerhard Penner. He began his education in the parochial school and later attended Bethel College. He then taught school in Kansas one year, after which he was employed by the Elbing Lumber Co., Elbing, Kansas, and later by the John H. von Steen Lumber Co., Beatrice, Nebraska. He then had the opportunity of purchasing his own business in Holmesville, Nebraska, which he conducted until his death.

In October, 1907, he was married to Martha von Steen. After one and one-half years of married life, death separated them. On November 30, 1911, he was united in marriage to Justina Claassen of Whitewater, Kansas. This union was blessed with three sons and one daughter, the daughter passing away in infancy.

In the year 1923 he was elected to serve as minister in his home church, which he faithfully served in this capacity as long as his health permitted. He was deeply concerned about the welfare of the congregation, especially in the salvation of the young people, and many a prayer has gone up to the throne of Grace in their behalf.

In 1936 they were privileged to celebrate their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary.

He became seriously ill in 1937, but through the grace of God he recovered and enjoyed fair health until the fall of 1942, when he again became ill. During this period of illness his earthly body gradually weakened till the morning of February 29, 1944, when the Lord called his servant home. He reached the age of sixty-three years and two days.

He often referred gratefully to the kind attention he received from the sisters and nurses of the Mennonite Hospital.

His passing away is deeply felt by his bereaved wife, three sons, Henry T. Jr., Fort Collins, Colorado; Donald, Columbus; and Edgar, Holmsville, three daughters-in-law, two grandchildren, three brothers, three sisters, relatives and many friends.

"E'er since, by faith, I saw the stream
Thy flowing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die:
When this poor lisping, stamm'ring tongue
Lies silent in the grave,
Then in a nobler, sweeter song,
I'll sing Thy pow'r to save."

ADAM RATZLASF, son of Benj. and Eva Ratzlaff, was born October 10, 1867, in Antonowka, Russian Poland, and died February 4, 1944. In 1880 he came to America with his parents and settled with them on a farm near Durham, Kansas. In 1884 he was baptized by Minister Benj. Schmidt of the "Holdeman" Church. He married Sarah Schroeder of Hillsboro in 1892. Failing to get a free homestead in the run into Oklahoma, he bought a farm near Orienta where he and his family have lived for many years. His first wife died in 1908. About a year later he married Bena Franz of Orienta. In 1905 the family united with the Orienta Mennonite Church. For many years he was president of the board of the Oklahoma Bible Academy. He also made large financial contributions to this school. He is mourned by his wife and seventeen children.

MRS. FRED AESCHLIMAN, nee Rosa Rubin, was born in Canton Bern, Switzerland, August 15, 1861, and died February 21, 1944. She was married to Fred Aeschliman in 1882. They came to America in 1885 and made their home near Pulaski, Iowa, for several years. In 1887 they moved to Whitman County, Washington. In 1893 they became charter members of the First Mennonite Church, near Colfax. She is mourned by her husband and the following children: Lou F., Will, Ed., Sam, Ira, and John, and Mrs. Walter Buri, all of Colfax, and Mrs. Elmer Widmer of Albany, Oregon.

LINDA RUTH STRAUSZ, daughter of Peter J. and Anna B. Flickner Strausz, died February 16, 1944, at the age of seventeen years, five months, and fifteen days. Her mother preceded her in death a little over a year ago.

EDWARD PENNER, son of Heinrich and Marie Penner, nee Penner, was born on February 14, 1873, at Warnau, near Marienburg, West Prussia. He was baptized by his father in 1890 and received into the Mennonite Church. Following the death of his father in 1890 he came to America with the rest of the family and settled near Beatrice, Nebraska. For over forty years he farmed and lived with his brother Andreas and family. He died February 27, 1944.

MRS. JACOB E. BERGER, daughter of Gerhardt and Elizabeth (Krolle) Dahlem, was born on a farm in Mascoutah Township, Illinois, on December 3, 1862. In 1877 she was baptizde by the Rev. Christian Krehbiel and accepted into the membership of the First Mennonite Church, Summerfield, Illinois. Later she joined the Garden Township Mennonite Church, Halstead, Kansas. She married Jacob E. Berger at Halstead, Kansas, in 1886. She died February 26, 1944, her husband having preceded her in death in 1942. Children who mourn her departure are: Andrew H., Erwin E., and Mrs. George Applegate of Wellington; Gustave, Reinhold R., and Mrs. Elmer Altman of Newton; Mrs. Owen Jenkins, Moundridge; and Harold H. of Carmi, Illinois.

MELVIN H. RUTH, son of Gustav W. and Anna (Hirstein) Ruth, was born near Trenton, Clinton County Illinois, on February 2, 1914. He died as the resul of an auto collision on February 25, 1944. He wa baptized in 1926 by Rev. A. S. Bechtel and received int the fellowship of the First Mennonite Church of Summerfield, Illinois. He married Katheryn Grolle in 193 Two years ago the family moved to Redkey, Indiana. H is mourned by his wife and his four children: Bett Lou, James Melvin, Robert William, Phylis Jean; h father and mother; two brothers, Le Roy and Ralp from Summerfield; and one sister, Mrs. Lucille Fiedl of Freeburg, Illinois.

JOHN G. ALTHAUS, eighty-two, died January 1 1944, on the farm where he was born near Bluffto Ohio. He was a member of the Grace Mennoni Church. He is survived by three sons, William a Levi of Bluffton and Calvin of Lima. Two sisters w survive him are: Mrs. Johanna Basinger of Columb Grove and Mrs. Elizabeth Diller of Bluffton.

EDEN MENNONITE CHURCH MOUNDRIDGE, KANSAS

The visitation schedule of Rev. Walter Gering is greatly appreciated by the families of the congregation. Although the visits are short it gives the members of the congregation an opportunity to discuss any pressing problems with our pastor.

We are still continuing our Wednesday evening services this year. The first part of this service is devoted to the children and the last part to older folks. These meetings are of great spiritual value and appreciated by all.

The Committee in charge of our church library is doing a fine job of enlarging our library. Some books are donated, others borrowed, and some purchased for the library. —R. W. J. Corr.

ZION MENNONITE CHURCH DONNELLSON, IOWA

Dr. L. L. Ramseyer, president of Bluffton College was the speaker at our worship service, March 5. He said world conditions are a challenge to youth to prepare for a life of service and for the older ones to help youth in their efforts.

Our pastor, Rev. H. E. Nunemaker is visiting the Middle District churches in the interest of a stronger and more effective Bible teaching program. As he will be absent from his home church March 19, a worship service will be conducted by the laymen of the church.

The adult and young peoples' choirs of the church are planning a musical worship service for Easter Sunday evening.

The members of The Worker's Conference of our Sunday School have taken up the study of the book "The Acts." This will help them in the preparation of next quarter's lessons.

The missionary Society has completed the cut garments which it received from the cutting room at Kalona, Iowa. These are to be packed and sent to the M.C.C. in the near future. It has been decided to send another order for cut garments as the need is very great. —Corr.

WADSWORTH MENNONITE CHURCH WADSWORTH, OHIO

The annual business meeting revealed an interesting eport from the Women's Christian Service Organiza- ion. This group completed the following projects: 44 dresses; 36 slips; 9 gowns; 16 boys shirts; 6 play- uits; 6 pajamas; 12 bloomers; 1 baby shawl; 7 com- orters for relief; quilted two quilts. Sent out 61 lbs. of sed clothing to the M.C.C.; canned 416 qts. tomatoes.

Other projects included money advanced for War risoner's Aid, a layette for an American-Japanese baby, ennonite Central Committee and the American Friends ervice Committee.

Rev. Smucker, our pastor, continues to present week- Sunday morning radio broadcasts from station WAKR, kron, Ohio. The response to these Christian messages as been a blessing. The programs are entitled "Chapel the Air" and are heard at 9:15 A. M.

A Bible Study course has been started for teachers d others, to be conducted each week. This weekly udy period will also be centered around a service of ayer.

Rev. Smucker completed a ten-day tour of Menno- te C.P.S. camp in the east. This speaking tour was ade at the request of the M.C.C. The purpose of the trip as to preach on Mennonite doctrine and to strengthen e religious convictions of the various persons witness- g in these camps. During the pastor's absence Rev. thur S. Rosenberger of the Salem church brought the orning message. During this trip the pastor visited e offices of the M.C.C. at Akron, Pa., and also the tional Board for Religious Objectors in Washington, C.

John Morneweck, the new Sunday School superinten- nt, has provided the teachers with copies of Tarbell's d Peloubet's teachers guides.

Speakers at Eden Church

Dr. J. Winfield Fretz

Dr. Ed. G. Kaufman

The Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, began six days of special services on March 12. Dr. Ed. G. Kaufman and Dr. J. Winfield Fretz are the speakers. Dr. Kaufman, a son of the Eden Church, is President of Bethel College. Dr. Fretz, contributor of "Mennonites and Rural Life" in this paper, is at present conducting some investigative studies for the Mennonite Central Committee, relative to rehabilitating our young men as they come back from the service, and other related problems.

Afternoon services begin at 2:30 o'clock, with Dr. Kaufman conducting a Bible study during the first part and Dr. Fretz speaking along the line of rural church work during the second part. The evening service begins at 7:45 with Dr. Kaufman giving evangelistic messages on the disciples during the first part and Dr. Fretz continuing his theme after that.

JOTTINGS

—First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California: Plans are under way for the enlargement of the basement and the remodeling of the auditorium as these plans become possible. The changing of the auditorium will give more room for the morning services, but at the same time some Sunday School class rooms will be taken up. Enlarging the basement would create more such rooms. It is reported that $2,200 is already available for the program of expansion.

—Bethel College: On Thursday evening, March 2, at the regular dinner hour, over one hundred students and faculty members gathered in the chapel for a meditation hour during which Dr. P. A. Penner spoke on the famine in India. Those present sacrificed their evening meal, and the money that would have gone for the food will be sent by the Business Office to the M.C.C. for India Famine Relief.

—The Middle District Conference last August authorized its Education Committee to contact the churches of the district in order to promote a more effective teaching program. Brother H. E. Nunemaker, pastor of the Zion Mennonite Church, Donnellson, Iowa, has been asked to visit the churches. From March 13 to 24 inclusive he is to visit the churches in Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio.

—Bulletins, Buhler Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kansas: The "Parsonage-Loyalty" supper netted over $500.00 in cash and bonds. The amount in the parsonage fund is now a little over $1,500.00.

—Burrton Mennonite Church, Burrton, Kansas: The Junior C.E. recently featured a special program. Miss Marguerite Sprunger, student at Bethel College and missionary candidate, gave a program of music and a chalk talk.

—Brother J. B. Epp writes, "All Mennonites in or near Lincoln, Nebraska, are kindly requested to send their names and address to the undersigned. Readers who have Mennonite relatives, friends, or other acquaintances here, please send me their names and addresses. Thanks. The purpose of this is to get together off and on for fellowship. This is being done in other larger cities, and is enjoyed by all who come. Have you C.O. young brethren stationed here?"

SPIRIT OF BROTHERLINESS SHOWN

A fine spirit of brotherliness was shown on March 8 when fifteen members of the Gnadenberg Mennonite Church, near Newton husked out some corn for a fellow member who was ill. On Tuesday one of the church members called upon a few others and suggested the proposition. It was accepted so enthusiastically that others heard about it. On the afternoon of the next day fifteen men with seven wagons drove into the five acre patch of corn. After two hours of enjoyable work the field was husked, and there were seven full loads of corn for Gerhard Nickel, the member who had been ill for some time.

—Bulletin, Bethel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: "We commend those families who make it a practice to have their younger children sit with them in church. In our day families are not together as often as they ought to be. For the family to worship together, not only in the same church but in the same pew, has a solidifying and unifying influence. We congratulate and encourage you children who sit with your parents during worship services."

—E. J. Neuenschwander in the "Church Messenger" says, "Can we as Christians show love toward and pray for Germans and Japanese, as well as for our own American friends? As followers of Christ we need to be diligent in our prayer life. We dare not become hateful."

—Members of the Menno Mennonite Church, Lind, Washington, gave $2,862.75 to Bethel College during its fiscal year of 1942-43. This makes an average of $19.74 per member, the highest of any church in the conference.

—The constitution (new) of the Zion Mennonite Church, Elbing, Kansas, under requirements for admittance states: "Anyone may become a member of this church who has been baptized upon the confession of faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and as his personal Savior; gives evidence of Christian character; accepts and approves of the Articles of Faith and this constitution; and pledges to support all the principles and provisions thereof." (It would be interesting to know how many of our churches actually get a committment from their candidates for membership in regard to such matters as mentioned in the last two phrases quoted above.)

—Bluffton, Ohio: The sixth annual Booster Banquet of Bluffton College will be held in the local high school gymnasium, Friday evening, March 24, at 7 p.m. Speaker for the occasion will be Frazier Reams, who is widely known as a public speaker and has held many positions or responsibility in public life, including that of collector of internal revenue of the Toledo district. Bluffton's Booster Banquest has been steadily gaining favor with friends of the college. Supported only by a few devoted friends of the school in its first year, the banquet has grown in size, until a total of approximately 350 tickets was sold last year. With ticket prices remaining the same—$3.00 for one, and $5.00 for two—prospects for a good attendance are unusually favorable this year, according to the banquet committee and the college administration.

—The new Mennonite Junior Quarterly is now used by eighty-nine Sunday Schools. Over 2,250 copies will be used this coming quarter. Rev. J. M. Suderman, Manager of the Mennonite Publication Office, Newton, Kansas, says that he is very well pleased with the response to this quarterly.

—Rev. H. T. Reimer of Holmsville, Nebraska, passed to his heavenly home on February 29, after several years of illness. Brother Reimer was one of the two ministers who throughout the years have assisted the regular pastor of the Second Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska. Rev. Jacob Wiebe is the other minister who has so served and continues to serve. See the obituary of Brother Reimer in this paper. Besides his manifold duties in church and business, Brother Reimer took an active part in the work of the Western District Conference. One of his three sons, Henry T. Reimer, Jr., is Director of the Civilian Public Service Camp, Fort Collins, Colorado.

—Mrs. J. M. Suderman, who has been assisting her husband with the large amount of work in the Publication Office, is confined to the Bethel Hospital where she is seeking to recover her strength.

—The Bethel College Bible Week, held from March 6 to 10 was very well attended. The Western District Ministers' Conference was held during the same week. Papers were read on important subjects, and we hope to present some of them to the readers of this paper.

—The Bergtal Church near Corn, Oklahoma, was the host to the recent Oklahoma Church Leaders' Conference. The women's mission society served the good meals, which included "borscht" and fried chicken. Brother Henry Hege is the school-teacher pastor of this church. With the duty of superintending a school system of 250 pupils, he has his head and heart full.

—The brethren H. P. Fast, pastor of the Mennonite Church at Orienta, Oklahoma, and J. C. Kaufman, pastor of the Emmaus Mennonite Church, Whitewater, Kansas, recently conducted a series of meetings for the Oklahoma churches. The brethren did this in behalf of the Oklahoma Bible Academy, which rendered this service to the churches in appreciation of the loyalty shown in the past.

—Correction: The per member average of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas, for 1943 was $13.13 and not $3.13 as erroneously stated in the last financial supplement of this paper.

And There Arose a Great Storm

By Chas. D. Geiser

In 1926, on about June 20, a mild furor swept through the peaceful little town of Berne, Indiana. It was all because of a disaster that had occurred in the Jura mountains in Switzerland.

The two brothers, Ernest and Werner Geiser, who had immigrated from Switzerland, had received word from their folks back home, that their home, among many others, had been reduced to a shambles by a devastating hurricane. The people of Berne, Indiana, being kindhearted, as always, collected a sizeable sum of money and sent it to Peter Geiser in Switzerland toward the reconstruction of his broken homestead.

Since 1926 two more brothers, Charles and William, have come to this country. The writer, in behalf of the family, feels urged to express gratitude through this medium to all the good folks who contributed so graciously in making it possible to rebuild the old homestead. (Illustration No. 1).

Illustration No. 2 shows their home after its destruction. For those who are not familiar with the disaster, it happened, briefly as follows.

The sky grew suddenly dark and huge sundry hailstones began to fall. We men were all working out in the field, a half a mile from home. The womenfolk were in the house.

We started out for home just as before any other shower. But we had not gone very far when the pine trees began to sway and bend their tips to the ground. Then they twisted and broke asunder like twigs. Some were uprooted and rolled far from the place where they had stood. The roar of the hail and the wind was deafening. Prostrate on the ground we held onto the grass to keep from being lifted up into the air. The pains inflicted by those colossal hailstones was terrific. It was a miracle none of us was seriously injured by the scudding debris and falling trees.

Father held platter after platter from the lunch basket over his head to protect himself against the ravaging hailstorm. They all broke but the last one, which had a neat round hole in the center caused by a hailstone. Around the edge of this platter was written, entwined with tendrils and violets, in antique letters the simple but fitting word "Souvenir."

As we reached the site of our home we found mother and the three sisters all alive and unhurt. It seemed like another miracle, for which we thanked God. The house and barns were blown off their foundations and spread over the fields, some parts of them several miles away.

The woodland lay there a devastation of sky-reaching roots and splintered stumps. The grass was hammered down even with the ground.

Shortly thereafter another gale swept the country side, during which we hurried into the old vaulted cellar. As we stood in there, huddled together and shaking with fear, father said in a tone of heart-stirring confidence, "Just have faith in God, all of you, no matter what comes." We felt somehow God would protect us—and He did. This gale was not a repetition of the first in violence, merely an ordinary thunder storm. Yet, it was rather serious, for it was the beginning of a full week's constant rain.

We moved into the chapel (Illustration No. 3)

LOVE FOR ALL

According to a press release by the Common Council for American Unity, President Roosevelt in a letter to the American Jewish Congress said, "There is no place in the lives or thoughts of true Americans for anti-Semitism." This is a noble thought. Our Lord Jesus Christ made clear that there is no place in the lives and thoughts of true Christians for "anti-somebodyism" of any kind. Our Lord taught love for neighbor and love for the enemy. He taught us to return good for evil. God loves every human being. Shall we do otherwise? God forbid.

Children and God-Consciousness

Paul wrote to the Colossians, "And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men." It is not so difficult for us to realize that the adult Christian should be concerned about pleasing God rather than man. But how do we parents treat our children in the light of this teaching? Should they also be made conscious of the fact that right conduct is primarily for the sake of God and not for man? One writer thinks so. He says, "It is most important that when children are small, the parents should teach them to feel that God is always watching over them and knows exactly what they say and do; and when they disobey, they should be made to feel that the sin against God is greater than that against the parent. Whenever a punishment was necessary in our family, we tried to impress upon the child the fact that he owed God an apology for wrongdoing; so off he had to go, and kneel down and ask God's forgiveness. There was nothing harder for one of our little boys to do, after he had taken a punishment and then been made to stop crying, than to be told to smile and shout the victory. That simple little act seemed to chase his trouble all away."

FIRST THE KINGDOM

Jesus said, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." How easy it is to become so entangled in making a living that the Kingdom is pushed into a lesser place in the allotment of our time and energies. Yes, we must "make a living"—or should we rather say, we can "accept a living" from our Father who gives us the means for it. But as Christians we ought to remember that a livlihood is but the means to the greater end of the Kingdom. A recent obituary contained this sentence in German, "Wir erwarben uns eine Farm, wo wir unsre Kinder ernaehrt und christlich auferzogen haben." How wonderful it would be if all Christian parents would regard their means for a livlihood as a great opportunity for giving children a Christian training! How sad when the means of livlihood becomes more important than the Christian training!—rw.

"He that goeth about as a tale-bearer revealeth secrets; Therefore company not with him that openeth wide his lips." Prov. 20:10.

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

Trends of the Rural Church

The rapid decline of the rural church in many areas in America has been of concern to many church leaders. In some parts of the country there has been a noticeable shift of churches from the open country to the village. In a famous study of America's rural churches it was found that two country churches die for every one that is organized. In the villages the number appearing and the number disappearing approximately balance.

Non-Mennonite Churches

There are about 175.000 rural churches in the United States, that is, churches in towns of under 2,500 population and in the open country. The great majority of the rural churches are Protestant; Catholic churches and Jewish synagogues are centered primarily in the cities. The National Catholic Rural Life Conference is aware of this fact and is doing all it can to establish Catholic churches in rural areas because it realizes city people and institutions depend for replenishment on country populations.

Since many rural churches die and new ones are organized each year, it would be interesting to know the characteristics of the old and the new ones. On the basis of observation one would conclude that the older denominations such as the Presbyterian, Baptist Methodist, and Congregational are disappearing, and in their place are appearing the newer, aggressive groups, such as Pentecostal, Nazarene, Four Square Gospel, and in the larger cities, Christian Science.

What about Mennonites?

One must ask how this general trend in the America rural church affects the Mennonite Church. Are it country churches declining? Are they moving from open country to towns and villages? Are they givin way to the newer aggressive, evangelical churc groups? In answer to the first question we kno from the Federal Religious Census and from churc year books that Mennonite rural churches are no declining. They are more than holding their own they are actually increasing in number and in mem bership. In answer to the second question indica tions are that Mennonites are following the genera Protestant trend of moving to town; this is more tru of such conferences as, General, Defensele Central, and Mennonite Brethren than of the Ol Mennonite. Old Mennonites still erect new churche in the open country, even if on the edge of town They do it on the basis of principle and premeditate planning.

In answer to the third question, there is much ev dence that the newer evangelical sects are makin inroads on the Mennonites. Every branch of th Mennonite Church is affected. In every Mennoni community one can find former Mennonites alo with former members of older Protestant church who have joined the newer sects. This trend is ult mately more significant than any of the others.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

LOST AND FOUND

By H. J. Brown

The Japanese American war had started, the miss)naries had been interned, and all funds from abroad ad stopped to come in. The General Committee's reasury was well drained. Rev. Yang Ching Poa was serving the Kai Chow East-suburbs church aleady for many years. It was the largest church in he Mennonite Mission of the China field. More than en years this church had carried on a grand work without any financial help from the Mission. This was largely made possible by the free-will contribuions of Christian men and women employed by the ocal institutions, as High School, Bible School, and east greatly restricted in this work. Many workers owever, these institutions were either closed or at east greatly restricted in this workk. Many workers ad been sent home and others were working for half ay. This greatly affected the income of the church. The average church members tried to shoulder more esponsibility; but with all the Japanese forces and he communist hordes scattered throughout the disrict, taxes and levies were high, and people were verywhere financially hard pressed. The church was nable to raise the whole budget. Rev. Yang had hown himself to be a good pastor and a hard worker; ut he was considerate and wise too. Since the Bible chool had been forced to close by the Japanese, two rdained men were now without a permanent position. They were local men with land to back them up, while he was far from home, somewhere in the Shansi Province; so he felt it his duty to resign and go home. Travelling with a family of three or four children was ot easy. The church was very sorry to see him go; nd many brought them little gifts in cash, so that love gift of over two hundred dollars was handed hem at the farewell.

They now reckoned that with this gift and the little noney obtained by selling out furniture and the like hey would be able to cover all travelling expenses. Kai Chow is not on any railroad, but has bus connecon with Kaifeng. The whole trip meant a day and ight travel on train from Kaifeng. When they left he bus in the rush they had dropped one piece of padded garment belonging to one of the boys. This owever, was only noticed after the arrival at the inn. They repeatedly turned everything over, but no mater, how they looked around, it was not found.

During the time of their search a man came into he room and looked around, noticing the excitement e asked, whether they missed anything; so they exlained to him that one of the garments was lost. uddenly he disappeared.

It was not so long until he came back, holding the arment in his hands, saying: "Is this the garment?" They gladly assented.

Then he asked again, "Was there anything in the garment?"

They replied, "Why yes, two hundred dollars. They were to cover the expense of the trip home."

To their surprise, he held up the other hand saying, "Here are the two hundred dollars. A boy picked up the garment as it dropped when you left the bus. I gave him ten cents and took it from him. But now, who are you, and what made me so uneasy, so that I had no peace until I sought you out and returned the garment and money to you?"

Rev. Yang replied, "I am a servant of God. My home is in Shansi, but for a number of years I have been serving the Mennonite Church in Kai Chow. On account of the war conditions I am taking my wife and children back home to Shansi. The Lord has been good unto us, so that by selling out and special gifts from the Christians these two hundred dollars were raised to defray the expenses of the trip. You see without this money that you hold in your hand, we cannot reach home. Thank you very much for the kind return."

The man was very much moved and replied, "Please tell me more of your God of love, and of Jesus your Savior. I too want to know and serve your God!"

Mankind would seem much stronger,
If God only should judge
Their strength by how much longer
They can carry a grudge.

And There Arose a Great Storm

near by and lived there until the homestead was rebuilt and ready once again to protect us against winter and storms of ordinary vehemence.

The source of this cyclone was in France. It moved along the Jura mountains, in places sweeping the land, and in others zooming through space without touching the ground. It had lost much speed as it reached Basle, and ended in the German Rhineland causing little damage there. Leaving behind a track one-half mile wide, it revealed distinctly its various tornado and eddy-like movements, which were noticeable by the position in which the trees lay and by the directions the debris was strewn.

Illustration No. 3

As to loss of life, one child was lifted up from his mother's side while walking on the sidewalk and thrown to death.

Much livestock was lost. The loss of crops was heavy. According to official statistics one hundred farms and sections of several towns and cities suffered severe damage.

Historical records, or lack of these, show that cyclones are rare phenomena in Switzerland. There occurs more frequently a phenomena called the "foehn." This is a tepid and sometimes warm wind which rushes through the valleys of the Alps from sunny Italy, causing some damage, but it never attains the violence of the here described cyclone.

It is perhaps fitting here to say something about Peter Geiser and his relatives. There were seven brothers and three sisters. On Illustration No. 4 you see the brothers as they were about fifteen years ago. Standing, from left to right they are: Samuel, Hans, David; sitting: Peter, Christian, Daniel, Abraham. Daniel, Hans, and Christian have since passed away.

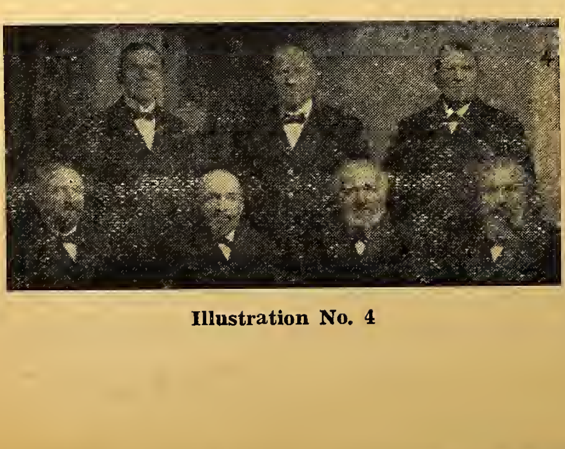

Illustration No. 4

Hans and Peter were lay preachers. Hans had been instrumental as a preacher for many years leading hundreds of souls to the true knowledge of salvation in Jesus Christ. He worked most frequently among the farmers in the Emmenthal and also in other parts of German-speaking Switzerland, especially among those scattered in the Jura mountains. According to a letter we received from our sister who was present at his funeral, the procession which followed his body to the cemetery exceeded in size all others of the recent history of the Mennonites in the Bernese Jura. Truly, he must have been a man called out by God to preach the Word.

Peter, my father, had not the opportunities, because of heavy duties at home and the early death of our beloved mother, to preach the gospel extensively like Hans. However, as long as I can remember, he always was and still is active in this respect at the meeting places close to his home. Our mother was Rosina Lehmann, a sister to Mrs. Emil Nagel, Sr., of Berne, Indiana. Most all of her close relatives have lived most of their life in and around Berne, Indiana.

Daniel Geiser, the oldest of the brothers, was the father of Samuel Geiser who wrote the book on the Taufgesinnten Gemeinden der Schweiz. The other Samuel Geiser who collaborated with the former on the manuscript is the son of Hans. Both of these writers aside from being successful farmers are also ordained, and active lay preachers at the Sonnenberg, Jura, meeting houses and churches.

All the others of the Geiser brothers shown on the accompanying picture, and also their sisters were prosperous farmers, steadfast in keeping the faith of their forefathers.

The Peter Geiser farm is now in the hands of Albert Geiser, one of my brothers. Peter, our father, has remarried and lives with Albert.

The farmhouse which is built according to the old European custom with the living quarters, and the stables and hayloft all under one roof is still a resting place for preachers and other attenders who come from afar, even foreign countries, to frequent the meetings held at the chapel close by. (Ill. No. 3) It, too, was damaged slightly by the cyclone, but quickly repaired.

It is in this chapel that Jacob Vetter, the great tent evangelist, preached some of his powerful sermons. Many other messengers have been there and left behind lasting spiritual blessings. Many souls found their Saviour in the chapel, due to the fact that none but men fundamental in their Biblical belief were ever invited to raise their voices behind the pulpit.

A visitor will never forget the glorious words beautifully painted in a large knotty-pine panel behind the rostrum: "JESUS CHRIST IS LORD TO THE HONOR OF GOD THE FATHER."

The Mennonites in Russia

By A. Warkentin

Beginning of Mennonitism in Russia

In 1786 the Czarina, Katherine the Second, sent out decree into Germany inviting German peasants to ome to South Russia in order to cultivate the large egions in the Ukraine which had fallen to Russia fter the Russian-Turkish War in 1777. considerable number of Protestants, atholics, and Mennonites followed this nvitation.

Gradually large colonies were estabished by these people in Bessaravia and he Crimea. The first Mennonite coningent which arrived in South Russia in 789 settled down on the right bank of he Dnieper River, close to the city of lexandrowsk. Eighteen villages, ocupying about 100,000 acres of land, omprised the so-called Chortitza Colny.

As all pioneers, these people had to o through hard times, but with governent support they succeeded in stabilizng their economic life rather quickly.

These first emigrants to Russia came rom West Prussia, south of the seaport f Danzig, from the great Werder beween the two rivers—the Vistula and he Nogat. In 1804 and the following years more migrants followed. They settled down on very rich oil on the Molotshna River and its tributaries: the ockmack, the Kurudujuschan, the Juschanlee, the Beim Tschokrak, and Apanlee. Sixty villages eventually ere established on territory of around 300,000 acres.

Later, between the years 1850 and 1861, two new olonies were established east of the Volga River—he Trackt and Samara. These four colonies, the hortitza, the Molotschna, the Trackt, and Samara onstitute the "mother" colonies of all Mennonite olonization in Russia.

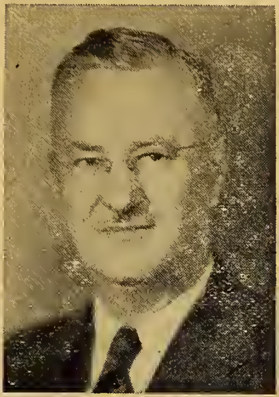
Further Developments

By the above-mentioned four colonies, hirty-six more settlements were estabshed between the years 1860 and 1910, he more important ones being Memrik, agradowka, Kuban, Orenburg, Omsk, awlodar, and Barnaul, with a total of bout 3,000,000 acres of land, 365 vilges, and a population of 105,000.

Organization

As in no other country, the Mennoites in Russia were permitted to estabsh their own local government. They eally were a "state within the state." he highest authority was the Oberchulz. He was the magistrate of a colny and under him were the Schulz, one every village. Each village had its wn police, levied its own taxes, and controlled its own affairs. Although the local officers were responsible to the government of the country, they had a great deal of freedom. For almost a century the government did not mix in the affairs of the colonies. Their school system was independent. Teachers were trained and hired by the colonies. The colony took care of the aged and of the orphans. They had their own insurance organizations, and since 1875 also almost complete control of the civil public service in which the young people were engaged.

They had a unique system of solving the agricultural problem. The "Mother" colonies, and later also some "daughter" colonies, had land reserves which remained the property of the whole colony. This land (which amounted to about 35,000 acres in the Molotschna district) was rented out to highest bidders of adjacent villages. After the rent money had accumulated to a sizable sum, it was invested in the acquisition of a large tract of land somewhere else, which the "mother" colony bought to establish a new settlement for the younger generation. The "mother" colony acted as a land bank, giving the new settlers favorable financial aid, which had to be paid back on the installment plan. In the meantime more money had come from the land reserve, the loan to the new settlement was returned, and so the "mother" colony was enabled in twenty to twenty-five years to buy another tract of land for the landless population of the colony. Thus the "mother" colony had a revolving fund which enabled them to establish a colonization system which proved to be very effective and helped to solve the economic and social problems of the colonies.



Dr. A. Warkentin, author of this article, is now in Chicago, where he is recovering from a stroke that he suffered some time ago. The latest reports state that he is able to take short walks.

Economic Developments

During the period of about 125 years, the Mennonites in Russia developed a sizeable industry in the production of agricultural machinery, with twenty-six large and small factories. Their milling industry became one of the great factors in the economic life of South Russia. In 1910 there were seventy-three motor and roller mills in the hands of Mennonites. Besides those, they had 105 wind feed mills. Around the turn of the century their brick industry supplied many workers in thirty-eight brick factories.

Since their educational system was under their own supervision, they trained their own teachers in nineteen high schools and normal schools. They built and supported around 400 grade schools in which Mennonite teachers gave instruction in the Russian as well as the German language. They took care of their sick in three Mennonite hospitals and in one large asylum. The homes for the aged and one orphanage helped in providing for the old and homeless.

Present Conditions

With the outbreak of the First World War, the whole economic and social life among the Mennonites in Russia was disrupted, and when in 1917 the Revolution broke out, the Mennonites, as well as others, underwent a most severe famine and persecution. Tens of thousands were killed, imprisoned, and exiled. All of them were disowned of their land. Through the help of the Mennonite Brethren in America, Holland, and other countries, almost 30,000 were permitted to come into the Americas. Until 1936 communications with them were possible, but from there on the Russian government looked with a great deal of suspicion and disfavor upon all who kept up correspondence with a foreign country, and for that reason correspondence practically had to cease. Since the beginning of the Second World War only a very few reports about their conditions have reached this country.

A Word of Explanation

A word of explanation seems necessary to clear up certain misunderstandings concerning the building project of the Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church of Wichita. There is a feeling that our building plans are too elaborate. This feeling exists because of the prospectus that was sent out some two years ago. But, as I explained at a special congregational meeting last September, it was decided to simplify our plans and build only the auditorium and leave off the educational building. Our present plans call only for a simple modest house of worship.

Our first great need is a house of worship, and the need for that is extremely urgent, because we have no church at present. All we have is an ordinary five-room home which we use as a meeting place. It was built to be the parsonage and bears no likeness to a church. Folks passing by wouldn't in the least suspect that it is a church. The present arrangement was to be only a temporary one.

We are a congregation of almost 200 members without a church building. I have never known a congregation of that size without a regular church home. We definitely know that some of our Mennonite folks who come to Wichita refuse to come to our services because we have no church building.

If the present place would provide, even in a modest sense, sufficient room it would not be so bad, but it doesn't do that. One lady recently said, "Imagine squeezing a congregation of almost 200 members with their children into a common five-room home." Besides, we always have a good many coming to our services who are not members.

Consequently, our church life with its varied activities finds itself in a so-called "strait-jacket." People are sometimes put into a strait-jacket as a punishment. Our church life is suffering because of lack of room.

We feel a golden opportunity for growth and service is passing by unutilized. Our membership would grow much faster and we could do much more in furthering the cause of Christ if we had more room. This is indeed one of the most promising and fruitful mission fields of our conference. There are many Mennonites here in Wichita. We are a loss to our Mennonite Church, because we do not have a church building here.

There is another misunderstanding that needs clearing up: Namely, the feeling that some have that we as a church are not willing to be measured by Mennonite standards. This seems indeed strange to us. We do want to be measured by such standards. We do not want anything that our Mennonite Churches don't have or want. Though we are a church in a large city we do want to stay at heart one with the other Mennonite churches.

In closing let me say that it is with deep gratitude and much appreciation that we receive the contributions that are continually coming from unexpected sources. Donations that represent real sacrifices have come from inmates of our folks home and hospital staff.

These and similar other gifts always give us new courage to continue in our present struggle. Sometime some of our folks almost lose heart. There is danger that some of our members may leave our church if we do not get a church building soon. To do this takes a considerable sum of money, because we have to build according to city regulations. It has to be a fire proof building. We would be glad to build an ordinary frame structure if that were possible.

Yours in His Service,

P. E. Frantz

Motives for Giving

A Meditation

Giving becomes a PRIVILEGE when it consists in sharing. This is much more than dropping a few coins in the collection plate, much more than a mere skimming of our abundance in an effort to contribute to the causes of charity and abundance.

It is giving our prayers, our love, and ourselves with our gift. Of such giving the poet, Lowell, has the transfigured Beggar, Christ, so beautifully say,

"Who gives himself with his gift feeds three, Himself, his hungering neighbor, and Me."

Giving as an OPPORTUNITY enables the poor to give as much as the rich. The size and value of such giving is not measured in terms of dollars and cents but in the terms of sacrifice and love.

In the eyes of Christ, the poor widow who cast in the smallest coins of money, gave more than the rich who cast in of their abundance. She out of love to God and to the needy gave to the extent of depriving herself of the necessities of life. What an opportunity! We can and may give much even if we are poor.

Giving as a DUTY urges us to give as God has prospered us. We feel that we must give because we owe it to the needy and suffering world.

In the light of the need now so great and so general among mankind, duty says, "He that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

In another sense JUSTICE demands liberal giving. At a time when over one half of the world's population is lacking food, clothing, and the other necessities of life, and most of those who possess worldly goods are devoting their all to a program of destruction for the sake of winning war, what are the Christians doing who believe that war is sin?

Are those of us who are left at home more or less undisturbed, complacently laying up wealth from the fruits of a rich harvest and the high prices which come as a result of a cruel and bloody war?

Though we may have no direct connection with, and perhaps little or no guilt in causing or supporting the war, can these large profits be entirely dissociated from the crime of the death struggle of the nations? Justice says, Give this extra profit. You disown the war and its efforts. The extra profit should go to activities that are trying to undo the results of war.

God freely gave His only begotten Son. Christ willingly gave His life for us. What are we, His children, willing to give?

The Family Altar

By Walter J. Dick

Every year we reach a season known in the Christian world as Lent. This season is observed in the Christian Church in commemoration of the forty days' fast of Christ. People observe this season in various ways. Some will deny themselves certain luxuries and privileges while others make new covenants with God. What have we denied ourselves this season in order to make this covenant with God? Remember, Jesus Christ denied Himself in order to be completely obedient to His Father.

I would like to suggest something which has always proved to be of great spiritual benefit. This would be a time to make the covenant and not break it for the rest of the year—nor ever. That is, the family worship. Every Christian owes this time of devotion in Bible reading and prayer to himself and his family. Never in the world was there a greater need to draw close to God. Juvenile delinquency is increasing by leaps and bounds—because parents have neglected to instruct their children. Mr. Hogg, a chaplain in an Arkansas penitentiary, says, "Out of 17,000 convicts I found only one who had been brought up in a home where they had an old-fashioned family altar. I heard since that he was pardoned because he was found innocent of the crime of which he was charged." Let us not become so "now-fashioned" in our family affairs that we forget our dear old Bible and the time of fellowship in prayer.

If you have not observed this family worship, give it a try. A man never loses by trying. If you have tried it, keep it up. Only a coward quits. With such constant fellowship with Him, the world will soon begin to notice your increased love for Christ and His glorious work.

May His blessing abide with you.

Ashamed of Jesus

By Olin A. Krehbiel

Are you ashamed of Jesus Christ? Peter denied his Lord three times because he was ashamed to admit he was a follower of the Son of God. How many today are hiding the fact that they are Christians? Are you afraid when you get out in a worldly crowd that someone might find out that you are one of Christ's? When you try so hard to convince others that you are no "goody, goody" is it because you are ashamed to be a Christian? Or when you tell others you are modern, sophisticated and broad-minded is it because you are afraid they might get the idea that you are serious about your religion? Maybe you are ashamed to show that you get any joy out of Christianity and you put on a long face with a cold look.

Sometimes it is well for us to analyze what is in the back of our minds that makes us act the way we do. Maybe we will find a trace of that feeling that Peter had when he denied any connection with the Master. Followers of Christ should not be apologetic of their discipleship. Jesus said, in Luke 9:26, "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's and of the holy angels." Paul in writing to the Romans says, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every

Willard W. Wiebe, Aberdeen, Idaho

MARCH 24—Did you ever guess a man's occupation by his walk? A farmer?—a sailor?—a cowboy? Can we not often judge character by the walk of a person? In Paul's epistle to the church at Ephesus we find the word "walk" used seven times. However, the Greek word "peripateo" means to walk at large, that is, it refers to your entire manner of life. Turn to the first occurrence of the word in chapter 2:1-3. This refers to our walk in the PAST, our walk before we were Christians, while we were dead in sin, and before God quickened us. Notice that in vss. 2,3 this walk was in the realm of the world, the Devil, and the flesh. This is Satan's triad. Thank God that through the blood of the Lamb we are delivered from the blockade of the Lion and we walk no more bound therein!

MARCH 25—Today we consider our PREPARED walk. Please notice in Ephesians 2:8-10, the second occurrence of the word "walk," that it is a good walk, or manner of life, which has been prepared for us. These good works in which we are to walk do not, and can not, earn our passageway to Heaven. Salvation is not "of works," v. 9, but is "unto good works," v. 10. Our good works are never the root but rather the fruit of our salvation. God hath ordained that we should walk in these good works. Then let us!

MARCH 26—As we have thought of our PAST walk and our PREPARED walk, so now, in chapter 4:1-3, our attention is centered around our PRESENT walk. Is this not most practical? In our scripture reading for today it is a worthy walk which Paul pleads for. Is our manner of life worthy of our calling in Christ? Ye are to walk as becometh a Christian—not hypocritically, but genuinely. In vss.2,3 there are enumerated the things which characterize such living. Lowliness, meekness, long suffering, in love, and peaceful. Lord, help us to walk WORTHY of the name Christian today!

MARCH 27—Yesterday we were given how to walk —today how not to walk. Our manner of life, as Christians, has a negative side too. Read chapter 4:17-19 and see the things which are to be put off. Our walk must necessarily be a SEPARATED walk if it is to remain worthy of the Gospel of Christ. A man placed his sweet singing canary on his back porch where the sparrows kept it company all summer long. In the fall it was again brought into the protection of the house, but too late. Its sweet song was now a shallow twitter. "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord."

MARCH 28—Please read Ephesians 5:1,2. How are we to walk? "in love." How are we to walk in love? "as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God." That's it. Our manner of life is be a SACRIFICIAL manner of life. Think of this as you read the last three verses of the fourth chapter of Ephesians. Yes, we are to "walk in love." Love and sacrifice go hand in hand. They are inseparable. They are cause and effect. Love is the cause of sacrifice and sacrifice is the effect of love. May we be marked with this sacrificial manner of life today!

MARCH 29—In Ephesians 4:17 we were exorted to a separated walk. In Ephesians 5:8, the next occurrence of the word "walk," there is another plea for separation. This is different, however. The former, "walk not as," is a separation FROM, while the latter, "walk as," is a separation TO. The former is negative, while the latter is positive. Please note also that our verse does not say that we were sometimes in darkness, and that we are now in light. Leave out the preposition, for it says that we were darkness and that now, in Christ, we are light! This is not fiction, but this is fact! Our manner of life should be separated UNTO this high standing! "Walk as children of light."

MARCH 30—In Ephesians 5:15-17 we find the last occurrence of our word "walk." What kind of a walk is one that is "circumspect"? The Revised Version translated the word to "carefully." The Greek word used is a strong word to denote "most straight," or "most exact," that is, "deviating in no respect." O, friend, such a manner of life is sorely needed today! The greatest hindrance in our churches today comes not from the infidel from without, but from the professing Christian from within. There was a time when the world was arrested by the holiness of the church. That was when the manner of life of its people was "deviating in no respect." Oh, that the world might again be impressed by a holy church!

MARCH 31—"Jesus said unto him, Rise take up thy bed, and walk." John 5:8

Three lads were pushing a hand cart up a steep hill. The two behind got into a discussion and forgot to push. The boy who was pulling in the shafts turned around and exclaimed, "Less talk and more shove!" If Christ had said, "Rise up and talk," how easily many of us would have qualified for such a mission. But he said, "Rise up and walk!" It is not so much our talk but our walk, our manner of life, by which we are judged. Our citizenship in heaven can more easily be seen of men by our "walk" than by our words!

WHITE HARVEST FIELDS

By Malcolm Wenger

"Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." (John 4:35) Thus Jesus, standing by the well of Sychar, used the growing fields about Him, to picture to His disciples the harvest of souls awaiting the reapers. No doubt, he desired to have them see the needy souls in the Samaritan village nearby, but more than that there was the challenging picture of a world-wide harvest field awaiting reapers to gather "fruit unto eternal life."

For almost two thousand years Christ's church has been working in this harvest field seeking to gather men into His Kingdom and seeking to carry out His commission to take the gospel to the ends of the earth. Let us lift our eyes and look on the fields to see what has been accomplished in these years of labor in the harvest. Much has been done. No only has the gospel been spread throughout Europe and America, but in 1938 more than twenty-seven thousand foreign missionaries were reported carrying the message to the ends of the earth. In non-Christian lands the Protestant Church claims almost eleven million baptized believers.

Though many sheaves have been gathered we can-

Busby Mission Station Where Malcolm Wengers Will Live

This is the mission station at Busby, Montana, where Brother and Sister Malcolm Wenger will make their home. They will live in the five-room log cabin shown in the center of the picture. The divisions between the logs have recently been re-caulked states Brother Wenger, and there is more room in the house than the picture suggests. To the right is the chapel with its bell tower. Once Indians had no watches and a bell was needed to call them to the services. To the left is the house in which the Alfred Habeggers live. The barn to the left of the house is used to shelter some cows that the Habeggers milk and some horses that they use for riding when there are no roads for the auto or auto roads are impossible. No trees show on this picture which was taken some years ago, but now little trees stand on the premises, and the field in the foreground is no longer tilled. A government telephone connects the place with the outside. You look north on the picture towards a river valley in the distance. Between the station and the hills there are some Indian dwellings.

Here in their new home the Wengers will study the Cheyenne language, and from here they will begin with their work among the Indians. The Habeggers will help them, and so will the Petters at Lame Deer where the Wengers may go for some weekends.

After completing a quarter of school work at Bethel College, the Wengers went to Wisner, Nebraska, the home of Mrs. Wenger. On March 5 Mrs. Esther Boehr Wenger was ordained as missionary to the Cheyennes in the presence of her home congregation. Rev. A. P. Waltner, member of the Foreign Mission Board officiated. He was assisted by our returned missionary, H. J. Brown. In the evening a fellowship meal was held at the home of Brother and Sister August J. Leisy. At this occasion Brother and Sister H. J. Brown spoke about the work in China. A few more days in the parental home, and then the Wengers left for Busby, Montana, where they will be stationed. Perhaps, by the time that this paper reaches the readers this consecrated young couple will have moved into their new home and have begun the work.

A Rich Worship Experience

Recently it was my privilege to attend the Oklahoma Church Leaders' Convention which convened in the meetinghouse of the Bergtal Mennonite Church, Corn, Oklahoma. The meetings were full of deep fellowship, rich feasting on God's Word, and uplifting prayer. Yes, the conference was a rich worship experience.

But all of this did not happen in a magnificent edifice elaborately adorned for worship, for the meetinghouse of the Bergtal Church stands very simple and humble in the open country. But the deep experience of those who attended was well in line with the faith of our fathers. For in the beginning of our faith, there generally was not even a meetinghouse. People met in houses, behind dikes and hedges, and in open spaces in the forest. Did that keep them from having a deep worship experience? Far from it. For them worship was not confined to a particular group of hours or a particular place. They worshipped when they fled from a persecutor and when they gave bread to one in need. Someone has defined worship something like this: "Worship is a conscious experience of fellowship with God." Well, the early brethren seem to have been interested in fellowshipping with God every hour of the day, every day of the week. It was not for them to have a deep emotional experience in a sanctuary and then be shady in business or work in the days following.

The Brethren emphasized the importance of walking in newness of life. That made every day a day of deep inner experiences. This is as it should be. It was so for Jesus. He pointed out the importance of this when he said, "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in Spirit and in truth, for the Father seekest such to worship him." Surely, the early Brethren realized the importance of meeting for mutual edification. But they did not stop there. They went on. They wanted a deep experience with God at all times. That for them was not dependent upon a particular place and time. For them that experience depended more upon inner conditions than outward circumstances. They did not have much to say about surroundings conducive to a worship experience. They realized the importance of an inner experience that transforms all outer circumstances.

If we would have a rich worship experience today it might benefit us to look back more to the beliefs and practices of our fathers and less to the outer magnificence that material progress has made possible. We Mennonites need to draw from the genius of our faith our own standards for meetingshouses and worship.

However, all of this does not mean that we should be careless about our meetinghouses. The members of the Bergtal Church are remodelling theirs. They have nearly finished re-shingling the roof. They have put a thick-walled, convenient basement under it, built a balcony, and rearranged the entrance so that it will be more convenient for funerals and weddings. They may build an addition for the choir, and they plan to paint the structure. Had there been no indications of such improvements, then there would have been reason for thinking that something was wrong. For the absence of such needed care and improvements would have suggested that people thought more of their houses and barns than of the place where they met for united feasting upon the Word, prayer, and singing of praises to God. Our places for united worship need to be neat, clean, in good repair, and conveniently built.

But never should they become so important that we lose our sense of the importance of fellowshipping with God elsewhere and at other times. In fact, emphasis upon a suitable place of public worship should raise questions in our minds about a suitable place of worship in our own homes, for private prayer and scripture study but that is another subject. Let us learn more about the practices of our forefathers in regard to a rich worship experience.—rw.

Secure in God's Love and Care

This noon our little two-and-one-half-year-old boy smiled, laughed, and sang as he snuggled under his cover for a nap. He gave all evidence of feeling utterly secure in the love and care of his parents.

When we had closed the door of his bedroom these thoughts came to me: After all, we have the same privilege as our little boy has of feeling happily secure. For just as he is our child so are we the children—often times very little and immature children—of a Heavenly Father who loves us and cares for us? Certainly we can and ought to be just as happy and secure in our relationship to God as our child is in his feeling towards us.

To me there came thoughts of what Jesus says in the sixth chapter of Matthew about fowls of the air and lilies of the field, and I was reminded of a little verse from the Heart and Life Bulletin which says,

> When we see the lilies spinning in distress
> Taking thought to manufacture loveliness,
> When we see the birds all building barns for store,
> 'Twill be time for us to worry—not before!

Yes, we have a Heavenly Father who knows all of our needs and is more than able and willing to fulfill them. Mindful of his love and care we can feel happy and secure.—rw.

HOW MUCH DID YOU WEAR?

A missionary at home on furlough was invited to a dinner at a great summer resort, where he met many women of prominence and position.

After dinner he went to his room and wrote a letter to his wife. He said:

"Dear Wife: I've had dinner at the great Hotel——. The company was wonderful. I saw strange things today. Many women were present. There were some who wore, to my certain knowledge, one church, forty cottage organs, and twenty libraries."

In his great longing for money to provide the gospel for hungering millions, he could not refrain from estimating the silks, satins, and diamonds of the guests at the dinner in terms of his people's need.

If God sends us money to send to perishing millions the good news of a Saviour from sin, and we spend it in needless luxuries, what does He think of it?—Author Unknown.

Announcement about Coming Conference Session

By General Conference Executive Committee

Christians believe that God rules the world and the destiny of nations. Your Committee is convinced that the date announced for the session of our General Conference, beginning August 17, 1944, has been set in accord with the spirit and will of Christ the Head of the Church.

We had hoped to urge an especially large attendance at this session not only of delegates but also of members and friends from distant parts. In view, however, of the request of the public transportation authorities it does not appear advisable to urge such attendance.

It seems therefore that the satisfactory solution of the problem—so far as distant members and friends of the cause of our Church are concerned—rests in this suggestion of the Executive Committee.

We believe, however, in the spiritual communion of the saints. Therefore in view of this conviction and of the weighty problems confronting our Church, we earnestly ask and urge that all members and friends be much in prayer daily that the Lord may through His Holy Spirit give wisdom, grace, and guidance from on high to solve pending vital problems at this session in His Spirit for the temporal and eternal good of all concerned.

Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas. This is where the coming session of the General Conference will be held.

And may the Prince of Peace richly bless all who love His appearing above all we ask and think, and grant to a sinsick and repentent world an early and just peace.

W. C. Voth and Gerald Stucky Home Again

The Brethern W. C. Voth and Gerald Stucky met with members of the Foreign Mission Board on March 9 at North Newton, Kansas. They reported on their trip of approximately 20,000 miles through Central and South American countries. Their official report will however be made when the Foreign Mission Board meets on April 18.

The two representatives of the mission board had arrived by Pan-American Clipper at Miami, Florida, a few days earlier. Brother Voth had then gone west to be reunited with his family in Newton and Brother Stucky had gone to New York first before coming to Newton. Thus a long trip has been safely and happily concluded.

Brother Voth says, "I wish to add a note of appreciation and gratitude to our many mission friends in the States. Through many letters we know that you have been faithfully praying for us and the cause we represent. We wish to thank you one and all, heartily, for we have felt the Lord's sustaining and guiding power in answer to those prayers. Personally I also wish to thank you for your warm interest shown during my illness and after and your prayers of faith for my recovery. The Lord has answered marvelously indeed. Let us give Him the praise for it."

(Given below are some letters that Brother Voth wrote on his journey. Not many of our people have had the privilege of seeing Central and South America as Brother Voth and Brother Stucky have seen it.)

Missionary Voth Describes Visit in Paraguay

We are on our way back from Fernheim Colony and are waiting here at Puerto Casado on the river bank for a boat to go back to Asuncion.

We had a very nice visit at Friesland and later at Fernheim and Menno. Leaving Friesland we started back to Rosario; it was a real hot day and the dust on the road was thick. Arrived before sunset, and went to the Paraquay River for a good swim. At night we tried to sleep with a great army of mosquitoes rejoicing with a great buzz that they had found two tasty Americans for their night's feast. However, at midnight we eluded them; they found their prey had departed for the pleasant shores of the Paraquay. There we waited till 2 o'clock, when the lights of the "Iries" winked us a friendly welcome.

The Iries took us up the river to Puerto Casado where we arrived Sunday morning. We had to wait in this little town until Tuesday morning (Feb. 1), when we took the train out to the western "end of the earth." On a tiny narrow track a diminutive engine puffed his breath out to hurry across the wilderness at a snail's pace, making the 145 kilometers (about ninety-five miles) from 7:00 A.M. till about 7:30 P.M. The wagons that had been sent there for us had arrived a little while before we did.

We had a lunch out in the open with coffee brewed over a campfire. Then at 9:00 P.M. we started out on the trip. After making thirteen kilometers in mud, we stopped for the night under an open shed built for dipping cattle. Had about a five-hour sleep and then wanted to start early, but while we were brewing a little coffee a rain storm rolled up and we waited until 10 o'clock when it let up and we got on the road of mud and water. It was a hot, tedious trip, arriving at the half-way station and the home of the driver, Mr. Doersken, at five P.M.

We could have gone on a ways that night, but we were tired, and then too these folks begged us to stay and hold a service that night in their home. They quickly sent an Indian messenger to the neighbors to announce the meeting, and so we had a nice meeting with them. They seem to be starving for something like that, for it is a rare thing that some one from the outside comes to those who are away from the center.

Thursday morning we took to the road again. It was still pretty wet and traveling slow. At noon we stopped at an elderly bachelor in the Menno Colony. Because of the heat we rested there from twelve till three. Arrived at Philadelphia at 6:00 P.M. and rejoiced in the warm welcome extended by Dr. and Mrs. John Schmidt and Dr. and Mrs. Klassen. They were just ready for supper. We were to make our sleeping quarters at Rev. Harder's home. He is the father of Ernst in the States. We enjoyed a most delightful fellowship-supper with the Drs. Schmidt and Klassen in the Klassen home. We will always remember this as a great treat on this trip. Schmidts still live in small quarters as their new home is not yet ready.

Friday morning we saw the hospital. It is a very active place; the doctors have more than they can do. Both are much needed and seem to do excellent work. Clara and John are a fine happy couple. Clara is doing a fine piece of work too and makes things go around there. Dr. Klassen has taken on a couple of apprentices who have made marvelous progress in dentistry.

He set them to work in the morning, and then he went along with us to show us the rest of Philadelphia—some of the homes, the wagon factory, tin shop, machine shop where they make all kinds of things, the cheese factory and creamery, with which they also have an ice plant. Then also the power light plant. Then dinner at Dr. Schmidts'. In the afternoon they went along with us to the Indian mission station. Rev. Jacob Isaac, chairman of the mission committee of Fernheim, and Mr. Franz Wiens, member of the same, took us on two light wagons to the mission station. We were glad to see the station and get acquainted with the work they are doing. There are three families at work. Mr. Henry Duersken is the farmer. He supervises a good-sized cotton field, and kaffircorn field, and an orchard and garden. The purpose is to teach the Indians to work. His brother, Martin, has charge of a school they tried to establish. This brother and wife have taken in four little Indian children. The work is no doubt difficult; the Indians are of the nomadic type and stay but a few weeks in one place. The mission is a cooperative effort of the General Conference and Brethren Mennonites and the Evangelical Church. They seem to work together quite well.

Saturday night there was a meeting in Philadelphia with a full house. Sunday 8:00 A.M. we attended the Indian service; Missionary Giesbrecht spoke in the native tongue and asked me to make a few remarks. About 125 Indians in attendance and probably that many Mennonites. At nine o'clock A.M. in Philadelphia church a good choir sang selections, Rev. Abraham Harder introduced us; Brother Stucky spoke first with Dr. Klassen interpreting. Then I spoke on our mission work in China, as requested.

A delightful dinner again with Drs. Schmidt and Klassens. Then a short visit with Rev. Harder, and we said goodbye to Philadelphia. Mr. Franz Wiens took us to Rev. John Epp, then for a meeting in Karlsruhe village. There are seven villages in this vicinity, a bit far from Philadelphia so had a meeting with them here. That was a hot night—the hottest on this trip as far as my feeling of it was concerned. The schoolhouse was packed and many outside at the windows again. From the attention in the meetings and what many said it seemed they were glad that the Board had allowed us to stop over here. We certainly enjoyed our stay with them.

CANNING FOR CAMPS

A program of Canning and Drying for Mennonite Civilian Public Service Camps will again be conducted in 1944. Last year's contributions resulted in oversupplies of tomatoes and pickles in practically all camps, whereas requirements were not fully met for fruits, peas, corn, beets, and other staple vegetables. Jars and sugar ration points will again be provided by M.C.C. A folder to be released on about April 1 and further articles in the church papers will give full information about the program.

From there we went to Rev. John Epps for the night, and the next morning Mr. Wiens took us by spring wagon for a ride toward the railroad. Monday night we got to one of the Menno colony villages, Lindenau, or number nineteen. Spent the night in Jacob Fehr's home. Tuesday 5:00 A.M. started out for the last lap. It was another hot day; the weather is at this time about like the hot August days in Kansas. We were lucky to have an umbrella which kept some of the heat off. By about five o'clock we arrived at the railroad. There is no station, but the Mennonites have built a shed where they can store some materials and can get under if it rains. There were several others who were going on the train at the same time with us.

In the party going on the train with us were Missionary Giesbrecht and Rev. Siemens who are goin to Asuncion and then to visit the Old Mennonit mission stations. They wanted to come a week earlier, but when they heard we were coming they waite so they could see us. Mr. Siemens' daughter, Annie was along also on her way to study nursing in Asuncion. Then there were two ladies from the Frieslan group—a Mrs. Nibuhr and Miss Mariechen Fas From the Menno Colony, Mr. Peter B. Giesbrecl and Simon F. Toevs, going to Asuncion. In th evening there were a number of others coming from Friesland by train and stayed there over night also.

Some of the men asked me to lead in a devotional period. We had not a lantern or light of any kind in the whole party, so we had to do things in the dark. Had a number of Bible verses by memory and then a few remarks and then sang a number of old time songs. After a few prayers they continued to sing a good number of familiar hymns. I was surprised how many hymns these folks know by heart. Had a most pleasant fellowship.

The night was spent by everyone throwing a canvas or a few covers on the ground, some in the shed and most of us outside. They had some flynets to keep the mosquitoes off, and we had a pleasant night at that. Then Wednesday morning we left by weekly train for Puerto Casado. There were another two days of waiting, and now we are on the small steamer "Toro" going back to Asuncion. Will likely not arrive there until Sunday night. Were to be there in the forenoon, but they had too much to load so are about half a day late now which is Saturday, Feb. 12. Eight o'clock just now, and have about twenty-four hours ahead if we don't lose more time. That will crowd us to get ready for the plane to Curityba Monday morning the 14th.

(The above letter was written by Missionary W. C. Voth from Puerto Casado, Paraquay, on February 11, 1944.)

January 17, 1944

Dear readers of The Mennonite:

On January 15 the morning sky was bright and rosy as the sun rose over the towering ANDES. It was indeed a majestic sight when, on the wings of our Pan American Air-bird, we soared higher and higher to wing our way across these lofty mountains. In a last glimpse downward we saw a picturesque beauty the expansive city of Santiago, sprawled out as it were on a massive green carpet just beginning to stir from its night's slumber. But our minds could no longer dwell there, for our eyes turned eastward to see the baren, rugged rocks pointing skyward as though in praise of the creator of Heaven and earth and all that is in it. Now we looked into dark crevices below; there were steep walls whose pinnacles glowed in the caressing, golden morning sun. The higher peaks sparkled in their drapery of glistening white snow patches; and to complete their beauty a few dainty, fleecy clouds floated leisurely around their necks.

Then the plane wound its way between two stately sentinels and so near the great granite shoulder of the one that the lady in front of me gasped "Oh! I hope the wing tip won't scratch its side." About this moment our attention was called to the statue of "The Christ of the Andes." We passed right over it. This statue stands on the boundary-line between Chile and Argentina. It is to represent a symbol of peace between the two nations. This is a magnificient idea and ideal. But there also seemed something sad and cold and quiet about this statue standing there in its isolation in the midst of these vast, almost inexcessible mountains. So the question came, in how far might this also symbolize human thinking—that Christ is adorable, Christ's teachings are great and lofty ideals, but relegated to an isolated spot where they cannot mingle with the woof and warf of everyday life.

Our next destination was Buenos Aires, the city of "Good Air". We were met by Rev. Webber of the Old Mennonite Mission. It was the first time a welcome smile met us at an airport. He informed us of the Rev. Isaac's and Miss Schrag's arrival in the city, and took us to the same hotel. It was a most welcome surprise to us to meet these friends here. Together we visited the Webbers in their home where Mrs. Webber had prepared a delicious lunch. Together we also made a trip to Trenque Lauquin where the Old Mennonite Workers Conference met. It was a day of stimulating fellowship. Most of their missionaries and national workers were present. Our stay was all too short. However we were pleased and impressed with the apparent good work this mission has been doing. The cordial relation that seemed to exist between the missionaries and national workers was inspiring. After this brief visit here we expect to go to the Mennonites in Paraguay.

Consider Dependency Problem

A major issue confronting the C.P.S. program is the matter of support for the dependents of C.P.S. men. This problem is accentuated by the large number of fathers that Selective Service has made available for induction at the present time. This problem is being given special consideration with the intention of recommending some plan to the churches to meet the need. Figures as of September 30, 1943, reveal that in C.P.S. camps, 690 men have wives; 198 have children; and 114 have other types of dependents.

Relief Unit for the Middle East

Plans are shaping for the sending of a relief unit to the Middle East. Plans are in terms of a 12-man unit to be complete on the field sometime in July. The unit will include the two workers already in the Middle East, two nurses, a dietitian, a Yugoslav interpreter, several driver-mechanics and First Aid men. Plans are being formulated in terms of administering a camp of Yugoslav refugees someplace in the vicinity of Cairo, Egypt.

CHRIST'S CHALLENGE

"Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Matt. 28:19-20.

From the time of the creation of man God has revealed his plan for humanity directly to man, or indirectly to man through men. He made the greatest revelation to man when he sent Jesus Christ to reveal His plan of love and salvation to a sinful world. When this revelation was finished and Christ was ready to be received into Heaven to be with the Father, He commanded that the work which He had begun, should be continued and His message of salvation be brought to all the people of the world. This call still sounds to all His disciples, at the present time more urgently than ever before. The fields are ripe unto the harvest. The non-Christians, especially in foreign lands, are receptive to the Gospel. Still, in the face of present difficulties, the hate and strife in the world, and the terrible destruction which is going on, there comes the question and the answer:

> "Is this the time, O church of Christ, to sound
> Retreat? . . . Is this the time to halt? . . . No!
> Rather strengthen stakes and lengthen cords,
> Enlarge thy plans and gifts, O thou elect, . . .
> Great things attempt for Him, great things expect,
> Whose love imperial is, whose power sublime."

Shown here are Brother and Sister George B. Neufeld, who are planning on going to the African mission field. They will serve under the Congo Inland Mission Board upon the basis of an agreement made with it by our Foreign Mission Board. The Neufelds are members of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas. They are now taking some work at Bethel College.

There is another side to this question. When we survey the wonderous Cross on which the Prince of Glory died, our hearts are warmed with gratitude and love towards this prince of Glory who gave His life that we might live. We worship Him. But must not our worship seem empty to Him when we fail to realize our responsibility of bringing the good news to the darkened lands? How often have we been the recipients of some little service or deed of love? When we felt our responsibility and inquired as to charges for these services we received the answer, "Pass it on to others." Christ expects us to "pass on" the Good News. We cannot pay for it in dollars and cents. The only acceptable payment is complete surrender to Him. We ponder,

> "What do I owe? Nay, Lord—what do I not?
> All that I am and all that I have got;
> All that I am and that how small a thing,
> Compared with all Thy goodly fostering.
> What do I owe to Christ, my Lord, my King?
> That all my life be one sweet offering;
> That all my life to noblest heights aspire,
> That all I do be touched with holy fire."

In gratitude we yield ourselves to Him who saved us by His atoning death, to serve Him wherever He calls us.

There is work for the Kingdom of God all over the world. God has called us to serve Him in Dark Africa. This continent, the second largest on the globe, has about 150,000,000 people who have never heard the news of salvation. They are groping in spiritual darkness for the light that only Christ can bring into their hearts. They are living in fear, superstition, and pagan worship. There also, the field is ready for the harvest. They are eager to receive the gospel, but to bring them from their life of superstition to a life of faith is possible only through the grace of God. This responsibility of teaching them the Good News is too great for us to accept, but we trust in Christ for He has promised to be with us, and "With God all things are possible." We are looking forward to the time when travel conditions will make it possible to get out. We trust that God will open the doors at His appointed time. Our work will probably be to bring the gospel through the educational field. We sincerely covet your prayers as God leads us to our field of service.

IMPRESSIONS

"I am impressed with the church houses across our land as compared with the complete absence of such buildings in a 'heathen' land. But I am impressed also with the shortage of warm friendship and abounding human confidence in our 'civilized' land as contrasted with such warmth and confidence in 'heathen' lands. The church houses must have been unheated, for the heart of the gospel is 'Love God . . . Love your fellow men.' Such gospel is generated through Bible study, prayer, the ordinances, worship, the home."

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

MUTUAL AID

Chinese have an expression—"Gung-ho"—which means "work together." That is the meaning of mutual aid. In order for a thing to be mutual it must work two ways; it must benefit two or more groups engaged in a common enterprise. Working together in a common cause is a desirable method of performing the daily tasks of human society. Mutual aid may be expressed in one of two ways; it may be the result of a spontaneous expression of love and sympathy, or it may be expressed by means of a systematic organization based on a mutual principle.

Spontaneous Mutual Aid

Mutual aid that is spontaneous is characterized in the life of the family, the neighborhood, and the kinship group. Here it is motivated generally by love, sentiment, and custom. Who of us does not remember the day when farmers in rural neighborhoods did not work together much more frequently than they do now in performing the seasonal tasks that need to be done? Threshing, haying, butchering, filling ice house, husking, and road building are all illustrations of spontaneous mutual aid that once were very common in rural communities throughout America. Such practices are today less common among rural people.

Systematic Mutual Aid

With the decline of spontaneous expressions of mutual aid on the one hand, we find the rapid rise of mutual aid on the other. In 1943 there were 35,000 organized cooperatives in the United States with a membership of 16,000,000. Many of these are found in Mennonite communities in the form of oil stations, creameries, grain elevators, stores, and credit associations. Whether mutual aid is spontaneous or systematic is not so important as is the motive behind the expression. Among Christian people the motive ought to be love; love for each other and for all men. Mutual aid should characterize the Christian's method of work, not selfish competitive individualism. Men ought to work together not to exploit a third party but to assist themselves and the other party.

New Testament Basis

The practice of mutual aid characterized the daily life of the early Christians. This is reflected in the life and teachings of every one of the early Christians from Jesus on down to the least of the Apostles. In Acts 1:15 we see how a program was organized to render mutual aid; in Acts 20:35 we are admonished to assist those who are weak; in Rom. 15:1-2 Paul admonishes brothers to assume responsibility for each other; in Phil. 2:4 we are told not to look out merely for our own interests but for the interests of others as well; in II Cor. 8:12-14 we are reminded of our inter-dependence and hence, Christian responsibility to share with one another. The list of Scriptural references to mutual aid could be extended indefinitely. What we need more of today in our community life is a practice of mutual aid as found in the New Testament and less selfish, individualism as found in the secular, profit-seeking banking and business world. Some people have come to think that capitalism is sacred and almost God-given. It is not, but the admonition to practice Christian mutual aid is given to God.

Day of Miracles Not Past

By Theodore Schmidt

"The day of miracles is not past." That is what Mrs. F. J. Isaac says in connection with their going to India. Many might be inclined to say that there is nothing miraculous about it, but that it was the result of Missionary Isaac's "stick-to-it-iveness."

How can we explain a miracle? On January 30 that question very likely cropped out in many Sunday School class discussions. To get an answer, we may approach the question from various angles. Let us consider two ways of finding an explanation which may well run parallel to each other, but often tend to go in opposite directions.

We have the rational approach and the scriptural approach. The first may be contained in the second, but frequently is forced to stand alone.

In Isaiah 1:18, it says, "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord." Here we are bidden to use the rational approach in conjunction with God, not apart from Him. The tendency with man is that if he cannot reason it out he just does not believe it; he puts it in the myth-story class. Take an example. In Joshua 3 and 4 the miracle of how the Israelites passed through the Jordan, with the water standing in a heap to the north of them, is related. It makes sense to us when we see Boulder Dam—made by the hand of man—hold back a wall of water 700 feet high, but it is unbelievable that God should hold back the water of the Jordan River with His invisible hand until the people of Israel had passed through. Is the thing created greater than the Creator?

In Isaiah 55:8, 9 and 11, we find God speaking thus: "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." This tells me that we must take in faith miracles in the Bible which we cannot explain until we reach that time and place of which Paul speaks when he says, "For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known." (I Cor. 13:12). Is the age of miracles past? I would certainly agree with Mrs. Isaac that the age of miracles is not past.

"The violence of the wicked shall sweep them away, Because they refuse to do justice." Prov. 21:7.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

Willard W. Wiebe, Aberdeen, Idaho

MARCH 17—"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life. . ." John 3:36

Salvation for the soul is not rationed. God does not issue a priority on this precious "commodity." Nor will God force the new birth upon us. It is in easy access to all who realize their sin and their need of a Savior. Think on this and thank God that our application for salvation needn't pass a ration ruling for acceptance. However, it is dependent upon our reaching out in faith and believing, as God's Word proclaims, that Christ's sacrifice on the cross is sufficient penalty for our sinful life.

MARCH 18—"These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that he have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God." I John 5:13

Am I in doubt as to my salvation? Assurance of salvation is not rationed. God has not issued a priority on this precious "commodity" either. It is not God's will that Christians should be uncertain in this all important realm. There is nothing in the entire universe that can and should be more certain than our salvation. ". . . I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." II Timothy 1:12.

MARCH 19—"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee." Isaiah 26:3

Certainly in this day of unrest peace is a scarcity. Peace seems almost extinct. Is it rationed? No, a priority is not needed to enjoy the fullness of the peace which only God can give. Scripture is filled with promises to Christians that peace is theirs if they but draw nigh to the Prince of Peace. "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." Philippians 4:6, 7

MARCH 20—"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." I John 1:9

No rationing board governs the forgiveness of our sins. We need not wait in uncertainty for our sins to be forgiven. God waits for us. We need not carry the load of guilt any longer. A little boy once incorrectly quoted this verse to me in this manner, "If we confess our sins, God is faithful enough to forgive our sins." If we are ready to confess, God is faithful to His promise and will forgive.

MARCH 21—"For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." II Corinthians 8:12

God has given freely of His gifts. God has not rationed them to us, yet we are prone to ration our gifts to Him. For example, when it comes to our possessions, how much of a priority does God have? We may think that we can not afford to give, but in the light of eternity, can we afford not to? "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." II Corinthians 9:6. Shall we determine our giving in the light of the sowing, or in the light of the reaping?

MARCH 22—". . . the Father seeketh such to worship him." John 4:23

Is it an easy thing for the Father to find those that worship Him "in spirit and in truth?" How long must He seek? Statistics tell us that in America about one half the parents do not think it worthwhile to send their children to Sunday School, but these same parents would not stand for it if they could not send their children. Are we more interested in work than in worship? No twist of logic can convince me that we seek first the kingdom of God as we thus ration our worship to Him.

MARCH 23—"Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." Hebrews 4:16

There is said to be a chapel in St. Peter's at Rome, the door of which is opened only once in twenty-five years. As the time approaches for the doors to open, the pilgrims gather, all of them eager to pray after the long interval in a place considered to be of special sanctity. Let us suppose that our prayer could only be offered, or would only be heard once in a quarter of a century. Thank God that auditions with the King are not rationed!

When Not to Talk

On the cover of our Church Messenger you find these words, "The Church with a friendly welcome," and it is true our church should be, and is, a friendly church. Meeting and greeting one another is an important part of our assembling together. Paul mentioned this in his letter to the Romans, "Salute one another with an holy kiss." (Rom. 16:16)

But the time for friendly greetings and visiting is not during the services, whether it be the Sunday School hour or the worship service. When the pianist begins the prelude—and even before—that should put an end to conversations. "The Lord is in His Holy Temple, let all the earth keep silence before Him."

Let us "worship the Lord in the beauty of his holiness." Silence aids in shutting out the world and in focusing our thoughts on communing with our Lord. This hour is so precious to true worshipers, don't spoil it for someone else by causing a disturbance with unnecessary talking. —Church Messenger,

Dear Rev. Weinbrenner,

I wish to express my appreciation for our church papers, especially The Mennonite. I've meant to do this for a long time, and after I had read your small article "Youth Uninformed" I thought this was as good a time as any to do it.

It is very true that we young people are very much uninformed as to our conference activities. This has become very evident to me during the time I've spent in C.P.S. camps; furthermore we, and I think some older people also, are too little informed on the history of the Mennonite church, its principles and fundamental beliefs. Since I've been in camp and have come into contact with members of the various other branches of the Mennonite church, I have begun to realize just how little I knew about our own General Conference.

During this time I've had opportunity to study Mennonite history, not only in camp but also in the M.C.C. Relief Workers' Training School at Goshen, Indiana, last summer. Mennonitism has never meant more to me than it does now. It makes me feel happy to be a Mennonite with the background that our forefathers have given us. At the same time it makes me feel very humble to think how little we sometimes appreciate our church and how we forget that our ancestors were martyred for the same beliefs that we now sometimes take so lightly.

Our pastor, Rev. P. H. Richert, for years has been trying to create in us a desire to read our church papers. Time and again, at every opportunity, he urged us, especially the young people, to read them more. Now while in C.P.S. our church papers have begun to mean very much to me; not only does it help me to keep informed on our church activities, but also I appreciate the spiritual thoughts that are expressed in the articles.

May the Lord bless you further in this work.

Sincerely,
Waldo Janzen

CHANGE IN MEDICAL POLICY

The medical statement providing for the health maintenance of C.P.S. men has been broadened to include eye examination and treatment. Eye examinations will be provided where recommended by the camp physician, and M.C.C. will assume one half the cost of glasses or other treatment recommended by a reliable doctor up to a maximum annual M.C.C. liability of ten dollars.

PEACE SECTION NOTES

Farm Deferments on New Basis

Minimum production requirements for deferment of essential agricultural workers have been doubled by Selective Service. Such workers must now produce at least sixteen "war units" a year. The previous minimum was eight units.

Selective Service has also ordered farm deferments to be limited to six months which is the rule for other occupational deferments, and abolished Class 3-C, which is the class for men deferred because of dependency as well as agricultural essentiality.

Logic of the War Situation

"The logic of the situation seems to demand that those who refuse to fight when their country is at war should meet the involuntary sacrifice of those who are drafted to kill their enemies, with a voluntary sacrifice fully as heroic for the civilian relief of human suffering."

Needed Supplies Arrive in Paraguay

Dr. G. S. Klassen, dentist to Paraguay, has finally received a valuable shipment containing anesthetic and other dentistry supplies. He writes: "Finally four months after we left home our dental material came. January 14 the wagon drove by the hospital and unloaded all our equipment, also our personal stuff. It arrived in fine shape and we are indeed thankful.... Up till now we have managed to extract 1,000 teeth here in Philadelphia. Also have many mouths ready for dentures. Now with this shipment here we will have plenty of anesthetic and other materials to keep us busy twenty-four hours a day—if only I did not always have to stop and sleep some every day!"

YOUTH JOTTINGS

—May we introduce you to four efficient workers? Shown here are four young people who play a very important part in the production of this paper. Three of them set up the type. They work with two big machines. Gliding their nimble fingers over a keyboard that looks somewhat like that of a typewriter, they make letters jump together into words and words into lines. Mistakes can't be erased in this work, for a line is set after the molten metal has cooled. If there is a mistake in the line, the metal bar—or "slug" as it is called—must be discarded and another one set. The three operators shown here make few mistakes. The fourth student—for all four are students working for the Bethel College Press—does the proofreading. It is her work to see that the printed matter is just like the original copy—although very graciously she even corrects errors which may appear in the original copy. She puts in or cuts out periods, commas, and capitals as the book of rules may suggest. All mistakes which the typesetters have made must be caught by her and corrected. People have commented upon the comparative rarity of errors in this paper. The three typesetters are: Dorothy Wedel, a member of the First Church of Christian, Moundridge, Kansas. She is majoring in English. Sophie Schmidt, a member of the Alexanderwohl Mennonite Church, Goessel, Kansas. Sophie is interested in commerce. Ethel Dick, a member of the Hebron Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kansas, is planning to major in music. Ellen Waltner, who reads proof, is a member of the Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, and she plans to teach English.

—Two women candidates for relief work: "It is reported that two of our members have presented themselves to the Mennonite Central Committee as candidates for foreign relief work, namely, Miss Marie K. Fast, who has been a nurse in Portland, Oregon, and Miss Salome Fast, who is a nurse at Ypsilanti, Michigan. Without doubt the field of foreign relief work is one of the most challenging for Christian people today. Let us pray for these candidates and for others who may also be considering such work. Let us pray that doors of service may open for such who are willing to go." —Bulletin, Bethel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota.

—The Intermediate C.E. Society of the First Mennonite Church Beatrice, Nebraska, recently gave a program including such topics as, "The Non-Swearing of Oaths", and "Secret Societies."

—Willard Wiebe, ministerial student at Bethel College, was recently elected President of the Student Volunteers of that school. Willard, who is writing the daily devotional messages for this month, is a graduate of the Los Angeles Bible Institute and a member of the First Mennonite Church, Aberdeen, Idaho. Arnold Nickel, ministerial student from Mountain Lake, Minnesota, and a graduate of the Northwestern Bible School in Minneapolis, was elected vice-president. Bertha Ewort, a member of the Johannestal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas, was elected secretary. Marguerite Sprunger, a member of the First Mennonite Church, Berne, Indiana, and mission candidate, was elected program chairman, and Orlando Schmidt, ministerial student from the Buhler (Kansas) Mennonite Church, was elected prayer chairman.

—Louise Duerksen, a Bethel College senior who completed her work with the winter quarter, has accepted a position on the faculty of the Sylvia, Kansas, high school. In college Louise was president of the Home Economics Club and served as an Assistant in the Home Economics Department. She is a member of the Inman Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas.

—Orlando Goering is chairman of the C.E. society of the Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas. He is also a member of the library committee. Orlando has taken some courses for ministerial training and is much interested in church work although engaging in farming.

—First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California: Fourteen girls met in the Church basement last Thursday evening for the organization of a sewing circle. After a brief program consisting of devotionals, a duet, and a reading, and a short business session, the girls prepared and stamped tea towels to be sewed and embroidered by Mrs. Habegger's Indian girls at the Montana mission station.

As one of their activities the girls wish to sponsor the gathering and sending of used clothing for relief purposes through the Mennonite Central Committee.

—Bethel Mennonite Church, Fortuna, Missouri: The pastor is conducting a mid-week study class at the parsonage. The class is studying the books on "Mennonite Heritage." Seventeen members were present at the last meeting. The meeting is opened by a short devotional conducted by one of the members; then the roll is called to which each answers with a Bible verse. After an hour's explanation and discussion, the class is dismissed. The boys go to Rev. Raid's Industrial Shop and work on their projects. Many worthwhile and valuable things are being made from the native walnut, cedar, and oak wood. The girls spend the remainder of the evening sewing and embroidering. The Missionary Committee of the C.E. Society is sponsoring an interesting and successful library project. Everyone who put one or more books into the library fund is given permission to check out a book for a two week period. A good sized library has been acquired this way, and each Sunday after church services the library is a busy place as the librarian checks the books in and out. Evidently much reading is being done, and many people are given access to books they would otherwise perhaps not get to read. The committee plans to return the books to the owners at the end of the year, and then a new library wil be started. —Corr.

WHEN TO WORRY

When we see the lilies spinning in distress,
Taking thought to manufacture loveliness,
When we see the birds all building barns for store,
'Twill be time for us to worry—not before!

White Harvest Fields

not allow this small measure of success to blind us to the great areas of the world still lying white and untouched by the reapers. Let us look at the largest of these areas.

South America

In Brazil a vast section of the great Amazon basin, equal to half the area of South America, is practically without gospel witness. It is estimated that there may be eight million people in this area, including many primitive Indian tribes living in the forests and jungles along this great river. In practically every other country of South America areas unoccupied by missionaries are reported.

Africa

The area in the center of Africa between the Sahara Desert and the Congo, densely populated by Negro and Hamitic peoples, is without a Christian missionary. It is fifteen hundred miles from the farthest east mission station in Nigeria to the nearest station on the Nile. Someone has said, "It is as if the United States had one missionary in Maine and one in Texas and not a ray of gospel light between."

Asia

In the "heart of Asia" lies a vast area which is still the stronghold of the powers of darkness. Let us glance at each part of this area.

West of Manchuria and north of China proper is Mongolia. Two-thirds of its area, called Outer Mongolia, is now entirely closed to the gospel. Two or three million people roam its broad plains. They are religious zealots and are hard to win for Christ.

Chinese Turkestan (Sinkiang), in the westernmost part of China to the north of Tibet, is a land of sandy basins and lofty mountains. It is inhabited by about four million people of various races. The few missionaries who were formerly there have been forced by Russian influence to leave that land. However, a recent report seems to indicate that the Chinese are again in full control and the door for mission work may again be open.

South of Chinese Turkestan and north of India is the land of Tibet, sometimes called the "Citadel of Satan." This land is a high plateau of from ten to seventeen thousand feet altitude, surrounded by the loftiest mountains in the world. Its three and a half million people are hostile to foreigners. Lamanism, "a peculiarly satanic form of Buddhism," holds the people firmly in its grasp and burdens them with the support of a vast priesthood. The chief religious rites are the propitiation of evil spirits. A number of missionaries are working along the borders waiting for entrance to this darkened land.

Between Tibet and India on the southern slope of the Himalaya mountains lie two small independent kingdoms, Nepal and Bhutan. Six million cheerful, progressive people of varying races and religions have closed their land to Europeans and the gospel as well.

Beyond Khyber Pass on India's northwest frontier and to the west of Tibet is the mountainous land of Afghanistan. A despotic government rules its ten million fanatic Moslems. It is a land of moral darkness, with a government characterized by corruption, bribery, and cruelty. The death penalty awaits a profession of Christianity. Foreigners are largely excluded. Although no other field has been more tightly closed to mission efforts, there are encouraging signs that it may be opening.

Russian Central Asia (formerly Turkestan, Bokhara or Khiva) is the part of Asiatic Russia extending from the Caspian Sea east to Chinese Turkestan. In this area live fifteen million people of many races and tribes, now under Soviet control. Only a few missionaries have ever braved the difficulties presented by nature and Moslem fanaticism. A group of Mennonites once started work among the Kirghiz tribesmen, but even this is said to have been stopped by the first World War.

As a summary of this great "Heart of Asia", picture a vast sweep of some of the roughest and most inaccessible territory in the world, a territory larger than either the United States or Europe and inhabited by thirty-four million people. In all this area the spiritual night is relieved by only a few tiny lights of gospel witness.

This has been but a glimpse of the larger unoccupied areas of the world. We must also consider that in the so-called "occupied" areas for which missions have accepted responsibility there are often sections entirely without gospel witness. The inadequate staffs of missions only too often are unable to cope with the need. In the non-Christian world as a whole there are on the average only nineteen missionaries for every million people. After nearly two thousand years of effort Jesus could still truly say, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest." (Matt. 9:37, 38).

Can it be that lack of prayer on the part of the church has hindered the evangelization of these unoccupied fields? Have we been so much concerned with our own needs that we have failed to see the waiting harvest field to which Christ directs our attention? Let us give ourselves to earnest and believing prayer that reapers may be sent forth into these great untouched areas of His harvest.

A good deal of the factual material for this article was taken from The Progress of World Wide Missions by Robert Hall Glover, New York; Harper and Brothers, 1938.

Too Great a Concession to Militarists

It is with considerable hesitation that one calls attention to a paragraph in the otherwise excellent book, Must Christians Fight, in which too great a concession is made to militarists. But since this book is being advertised in our papers and spread in our conference, including the C.P.S. camps, duty demands that something be said about it. Otherwise I recommend this book.

On page 54 and 55 the passage in Genesis 9:6 (to which verse 5 belongs) is dealt with by mentioning two interpretations of it, both of which are presented as "possible" interpretations.

1. The first interpretation finds in this passage the divine authorization for human government, not only to kill murderers (who alone are here included) but also to "wage whatever wars they may deem necessary." This last deduction is impossible. There is nothing in this passage, directly or indirectly, about a license for governments to wage war as they deem necessary. Even the later law of Moses, which includes others besides murderers under capital punishment, gives no such license. Verse 5 reads: "At the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man ." This "requirement" is strictly limited to murderers and prohibits man to do as he deems necessary. To call this a "possible" interpretation is too great a concession to militarists, who will find much comfort in it, especially since it comes from the peace churches. It weakens our testimony against war, which is regrettable.

2. The second interpretation likens this requirement by God for capital punishment of murderers to the siful "violence" of man before the flood, which caused the flood. When God "requires" capital punishment, it is impossible to liken it to such wicked violence as brought about the greatest judgment of history upon man.

This compels us to leave Genesis 9:6 and its context, verse 5, just as it stands: "At the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man." The fact that the "brother" was to see to this punishment shows that there was no personal hate behind it, but the same love that was behind the flaming sword of the angel at the gate of Paradise, as Genesis 3:22 clearly shows. God did not want man to live forever in his fallen state; He loved man too much for that. This angel was no mere bluff, but represented just what God meant, namely justice and love. For believers in Christ this angel does not stand there anymore. Thank theLord! If God could have saved man without this angel of justice, he would certainly have done so. Those who deny the justice of capital punishment under the law, deny the need of Christ's fulfilling this law by "becoming a curse for us" according to the law. Gal. 3:13.

In love for the truth and the church,
—P. H. Richert

Brotherhood of the Eastern District Conference

By Norman K. Berky

(In this and succeeding issues you will have an opportunity to read a very interesting story. It is that of the Brotherhood organizations of the Eastern District Conference. The years covered are those from 1917-1942. As far as the editor knows the complete history of this organization has appeared in no other publication. Read this story that is chuck full of interesting facts. rw.)

It has not been easy to gather this material together. It may not be altogether accurate in some things. Some items of information were not all accomplishments, as they were not all completed; some barely reached beyond the discussion stage; other things that the Brotherhood made possible are not mentioned in the minutes, nor indeed can all be known in the various details of various individual lives. We shall mention only a few of the charter members by name. We hope you will pardon any unintentional errors that may have been made.

This has been a larger job than I counted on when I said "yes" to your president, Brother Ely Fretz. If tires, gas, and increasing confusion in our business lives had not given me a few weeks release from work, I could not have done what I promised you to do.

The plan of approach to the subject is:

1. Introduction and Origin.
2. Accomplishments in Material Support.
3. Accomplishments in Fellowship.
4. Accomplishments in the Deepening of Spiritual Lives.
5. Conclusions.

1.Origin

On September 22, 1917, at the Eastern District Sunday School Convention held at Perkasie, an address was delivered by Maxwell H. Kratz. Acting upon some suggestions which he made, the resolutions committee recommended that a "committee of three devise ways and means of bringing into existence a movement of laymen for service." This committee was to cooperate with three lay members of the Home Mission Board. A committee was appointed and issued a call for the first meeting on July 22, 1918. This call in the form of a letter stated the purpose, namely, "to form an organization of the laymen of our church for the purpose of getting our men better acquainted with each other, keeping them more keenly interested in various phases of the work of our church, fostering among them a keener and stronger loyalty to its principles, and to have them stand more closely together in Christian service." A meeting was held in the Souderton Mennonite Church on Sunday afternoon, August 11, 1918. and organization effected.

2. Material Support

September 1, 1919, the Brotherhood was invited to assume the collection of a fund of $60,000 during the following three years for relief, reconstruction, missions, and education. This was to be an acid test for the young organization; it would mean hard work organizing for the campaign and would open the Brotherhood to criticisms of all kinds. A campaign committee was appointed to visit each church to present the cause. Literature, bulletins, pledge cards, and record cards were prepared and distributed to each church. September 6, one year later, it was reported that $50,000 had been subscribed to the fund which was known as the Thanksgiving Fund.

Cash collected was:

9/6/20	$15,308.31
9/5/21	26,634.04
9/3/22	37,467.24

At the end of three years in September, 1922, the fund was incomplete and was ordered continued another year. September 29, 1923, the total amount of cash collected for the fund was $41,663.99.

To illustrate how some of the money was used for relief; an emergency case arose. An urgent appeal for $1000 came from the Mennonite Church at Crefeld, Germany. Many early Mennonite settlers had come from this church. $1000 was sent by Conference.

While this collecting of the Thanksgiving Fund was going on, a call came for the collection of clothing and supplies for Southern Russia. The Eastern District Conference requested the Brotherhood to take charge of the work. This was done, and the articles gathered were shipped through the Mennonite Central Committee. On September 4, 1922, it was reported that the clothing drive had resulted in twenty-three bales of clothing and $100 cash to purchase additional supplies.

September 29, 1923, we read that Conference ordered that no further efforts be made to complete the Thanksgiving Fund, that various needs of the churches demanded a budget of $10,000, of which 20 per cent was to be for the Eastern District Conference, 30 per cent for our educational institutions, and 50 per cent for the Home for the Aged. This new fund was to be called the Forward Movement Fund, and the Brotherhood was requested to assume the collection of it. However, because of the criticism that the Brotherhood was only a money-raising organization it was decided to ask Conference to raise the money through its own organization with the Brotherhood helping in the detail work under Conference direction.

October 27, 1924, action was taken to raise $500 yearly for three years to pay for books of Mennonite History in the Pennypacker collection in the library at Perkiomen Seminary, and otherwise further the establishing of a nucleus for gathering books of Mennonite History. Afterward, we believe, this became $100 and was paid for several years and later put into the Conference Budget until fully paid.

September 26, 1925, the Brotherhood assisted in the drive for the Eastern District Conference budget of $4,300.00 This assistance was given Conference for several years thereafter. The Brotherhood had a large part in establishing the budget method of financing as at present used by Conference. This method has also been adopted by some of our churches so it stands as a much needed piece of work done. It has lifted church finances to a higher and more equitable plane.

October 1, 1927, we read of the approval of a plan to sell Farm Lien Bonds to finance the settlement of Russian Mennonites in Canada. There seems to be no record of how many were sold. There was an indebtedness of $1,200,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railroad and 10,000 more Mennonites were to be moved into Canada at an additional cost of $1,500,000. Some of these bonds were sold throughout the Conference by various individuals. (This applies only to the Eastern District Conference portion of that support rendered by all Mennonite bodies through the Mennonite Central Committee.)

October 24, 1931, an offering of $86.00 was given. One-half of this was given to the needy in Altoona, the other half sent in the form of food packages to starving Mennonite families in Russia.

October 14, 1933, we assisted the Eastern District Conference again in raising $1,500.00 for Russian refugees in Harbin, China. October 27, 1934, $1321.24 was reported paid.

October 22, 1932, a donation was given to the Germantown Mennonite Church toward expenses in renovating that historic church.

November 7, 1936, we raised $300.00 to assist in establishing publication work among the Mennonites in Western Canada. This was paid in full. More recently Spanish relief was extended through Orie Miller.

One young man back in the early years received some financial assistance in preparing himself to become a medical missionary. In 1925 there was a gift to a missionary of $42.25 and in 1926, a gift to a missionary of $25.00.

October 30, 1937, a resolution was passed to assist a young man in getting his training at Bluffton College. $250.00 yearly was voted for a period of four years until the completion of his education. This was done, however, the amount required yearly was a little less than $250.00.

The Brotherhood through the years has supported our institutions, educational and the Old Folks Home. These two constantly recur almost from its inception, and support was given as new calls came in from year to year as noted in the foregoing remarks. The support for Bluffton and Witmarsum Seminary wa large and varied and for Bluffton over a long perio of time. We assisted in the various drives an opened doors into Conference homes to permit th College to make its own drives at various times. Perhaps a note here would be in order. At all times great care was taken not to conflict with the authority or responsibility of other units of Conference or Conference itself. There has been nothing dominating about the Brotherhood in any of its relationships within Conference. Its attitude has always been cooperative, friendly, and helpful in every way. All this can easily be said and more.

Financial and moral support was given to the Young People's Retreat from its start; $25.00 yearly and for several years part of the deficit of operating the Retreat was made up by the Brotherhood. Recently it has supported the development of Menolan.

Recently it was proposed and favorably acted upon to adopt a plan for a fund to be called the Mennonite Brotherhood Scholarship Plan. The plan is to raise $100.00 annually for the Fund; its purpose to assist young men to receive a Christian education. This plan needs some smoothing down and will probably get it. There is nothing so healthy as group discussion, when the men know what they want and proceed to get it. We do need clarification upon the point of what a Christian education is and in what institutions it may be obtained. Some of us are all too much at sea here and we need to come to some common understanding.

IN MEMORIAM

OBITUARY OF HENRY T. REIMER

Henry T. Reimer was born February 27, 1881, in Hochfeld, Russia. He came to America with his parents, Abram and Margaret Reimer in 1883 and settled on a farm west of Beatrice.

In the year of 1899 he was baptized upon his confession of faith by Elder Gerhard Penner. He began his education in the parochial school and later attended Bethel College. He then taught school in Kansas one year, after which he was employed by the Elbing Lumber Co., Elbing, Kansas, and later by the John H. von Steen Lumber Co., Beatrice, Nebraska. He then had the opportunity of purchasing his own business in Holmesville, Nebraska, which he conducted until his death.

In October, 1907, he was married to Martha von Steen. After one and one-half years of married life, death separated them. On November 30, 1911, he was united in marriage to Justina Claassen of Whitewater, Kansas. This union was blessed with three sons and one daughter, the daughter passing away in infancy.

In the year 1923 he was elected to serve as minister in his home church, which he faithfully served in this capacity as long as his health permitted. He was deeply concerned about the welfare of the congregation, especially in the salvation of the young people, and many a prayer has gone up to the throne of Grace in their behalf.

In 1936 they were privileged to celebrate their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary.

He became seriously ill in 1937, but through the grace of God he recovered and enjoyed fair health until the fall of 1942, when he again became ill. During this period of illness his earthly body gradually weakened till the morning of February 29, 1944, when the Lord called his servant home. He reached the age of sixty-three years and two days.

He often referred gratefully to the kind attention he received from the sisters and nurses of the Mennonite Hospital.

His passing away is deeply felt by his bereaved wife, three sons, Henry T. Jr., Fort Collins, Colorado; Donald, Columbus; and Edgar, Holmsville, three daughters-in-law, two grandchildren, three brothers, three sisters, relatives and many friends.

> "E'er since, by faith, I saw the stream
> Thy flowing wounds supply,
> Redeeming love has been my theme,
> And shall be till I die:
> When this poor lisping, stamm'ring tongue
> Lies silent in the grave,
> Then in a nobler, sweeter song,
> I'll sing Thy pow'r to save."

ADAM RATZLASF, son of Benj. and Eva Ratzlaff, was born October 10, 1867, in Antonowka, Russian Poland, and died February 4, 1944. In 1880 he came to America with his parents and settled with them on a farm near Durham, Kansas. In 1884 he was baptized by Minister Benj. Schmidt of the "Holdeman" Church. He married Sarah Schroeder of Hillsboro in 1892. Failing to get a free homestead in the run into Oklahoma, he bought a farm near Orienta where he and his family have lived for many years. His first wife died in 1908. About a year later he married Bena Franz of Orienta. In 1905 the family united with the Orienta Mennonite Church. For many years he was president of the board of the Oklahoma Bible Academy. He also made large financial contributions to this school. He is mourned by his wife and seventeen children.

MRS. FRED AESCHLIMAN, nee Rosa Rubin, was born in Canton Bern, Switzerland, August 15, 1861, and died February 21, 1944. She was married to Fred Aeschliman in 1882. They came to America in 1885 and made their home near Pulaski, Iowa, for several years. In 1887 they moved to Whitman County, Washington. In 1893 they became charter members of the First Mennonite Church, near Colfax. She is mourned by her husband and the following children: Lou F., Will, Ed., Sam, Ira, and John, and Mrs. Walter Buri, all of Colfax, and Mrs. Elmer Widmer of Albany, Oregon.

LINDA RUTH STRAUSZ, daughter of Peter J. and Anna B. Flickner Strausz, died February 16, 1944, at the age of seventeen years, five months, and fifteen days. Her mother preceded her in death a little over a year ago.

EDWARD PENNER, son of Heinrich and Marie Penner, nee Penner, was born on February 14, 1873, at Warnau, near Marienburg, West Prussia. He was baptized by his father in 1890 and received into the Mennonite Church. Following the death of his father in 1890 he came to America with the rest of the family and settled near Beatrice, Nebraska. For over forty years he farmed and lived with his brother Andreas and family. He died February 27, 1944.

MRS. JACOB E. BERGER, daughter of Gerhardt and Elizabeth (Krolle) Dahlem, was born on a farm in Mascoutah Township, Illinois, on December 3, 1862. In 1877 she was baptizde by the Rev. Christian Krehbiel and accepted into the membership of the First Mennonite Church, Summerfield, Illinois. Later she joined the Garden Township Mennonite Church, Halstead, Kansas. She married Jacob E. Berger at Halstead, Kansas, in 1886. She died February 26, 1944, her husband having preceded her in death in 1942. Children who mourn her departure are: Andrew H., Erwin E., and Mrs. George Applegate of Wellington; Gustave, Reinhold R., and Mrs. Elmer Altman of Newton; Mrs. Owen Jenkins, Moundridge; and Harold H. of Carmi, Illinois.

MELVIN H. RUTH, son of Gustav W. and Anna (Hirstein) Ruth, was born near Trenton, Clinton County, Illinois, on February 2, 1914. He died as the result of an auto collision on February 25, 1944. He was baptized in 1926 by Rev. A. S. Bechtel and received into the fellowship of the First Mennonite Church of Summerfield, Illinois. He married Katheryn Grolle in 1938. Two years ago the family moved to Redkey, Indiana. He is mourned by his wife and his four children: Betty Lou, James Melvin, Robert William, Phylis Jean; his father and mother; two brothers, Le Roy and Ralph from Summerfield; and one sister, Mrs. Lucille Fiedler of Freeburg, Illinois.

JOHN G. ALTHAUS, eighty-two, died January 18, 1944, on the farm where he was born near Bluffton, Ohio. He was a member of the Grace Mennonite Church. He is survived by three sons, William and Levi of Bluffton and Calvin of Lima. Two sisters who survive him are: Mrs. Johanna Basinger of Columbus Grove and Mrs. Elizabeth Diller of Bluffton.

CORRESPONDENCE

ALBERTA COMMUNITY CHURCH
PORTLAND, OREGON

It is now almost five months since our pastor, Rev. Wiebe, and his good wife came into our midst. The meetings have been well attended, especially the evening services. God has been hearing and answering prayer in behalf of the evening serivces. In general, health has been good. Rev. S. S. Baumgartner has been failing in health and is under the doctor's care. On March 9, the women's missionary society had a potluck dinner. Rev. and Mrs. Meyer Tan-Ditter, who are in charge of the Hebrew Christian Mission here, brought messages in word and song. We have had an unusually mild winter. The beautiful sunshine we have reminds one of God's love to us and how we as his children should send it forth to others who know Him not. Even with war clouds over us we can look up and see God's sunshine of love. We are enjoying some very precious Bible study on our Wednesday evening prayer meetings. Pray that more may come to these services and that we as a church may be faithful in winning souls to Christ in our community. —Corr.

EDEN MENNONITE CHURCH
MOUNDRIDGE, KANSAS

The visitation schedule of Rev. Walter Gering is greatly appreciated by the families of the congregation. Although the visits are short it gives the members of the congregation an opportunity to discuss any pressing problems with our pastor.

We are still continuing our Wednesday evening services this year. The first part of this service is devoted to the children and the last part to older folks. These meetings are of great spiritual value and appreciated by all.

The Committee in charge of our church library is doing a fine job of enlarging our library. Some books are donated, others borrowed, and some purchased for the library. —R. W. J. Corr.

ZION MENNONITE CHURCH
DONNELLSON, IOWA

Dr. L. L. Ramseyer, president of Bluffton College was the speaker at our worship service, March 5. He said world conditions are a challenge to youth to prepare for a life of service and for the older ones to help youth in their efforts.

Our pastor, Rev. H. E. Nunemaker is visiting the Middle District churches in the interest of a stronger and more effective Bible teaching program. As he will be absent from his home church March 19, a worship service will be conducted by the laymen of the church.

The adult and young peoples' choirs of the church are planning a musical worship service for Easter Sunday evening.

The members of The Worker's Conference of our Sunday School have taken up the study of the book "The Acts." This will help them in the preparation of next quarter's lessons.

The missionary Society has completed the cut garments which it received from the cutting room at Kalona, Iowa. These are to be packed and sent to the M.C.C. in the near future. It has been decided to send another order for cut garments as the need is very great. —Corr.

WADSWORTH MENNONITE CHURCH
WADSWORTH, OHIO

The annual business meeting revealed an interesting report from the Women's Christian Service Organization. This group completed the following projects: 44 dresses; 36 slips; 9 gowns; 16 boys shirts; 6 playsuits; 6 pajamas; 12 bloomers; 1 baby shawl; 7 comforters for relief; quilted two quilts. Sent out 61 lbs. of used clothing to the M.C.C.; canned 416 qts. tomatoes.

Other projects included money advanced for War Prisoner's Aid, a layette for an American-Japanese baby, Mennonite Central Committee and the American Friends Service Committee.

Rev. Smucker, our pastor, continues to present weeky Sunday morning radio broadcasts from station WAKR, kron, Ohio. The response to these Christian messages as been a blessing. The programs are entitled "Chapel f the Air" and are heard at 9:15 A. M.

A Bible Study course has been started for teachers nd others, to be conducted each week. This weekly udy period will also be centered around a service of rayer.

Rev. Smucker completed a ten-day tour of Mennoite C.P.S. camp in the east. This speaking tour was ade at the request of the M.C.C. The purpose of the trip as to preach on Mennonite doctrine and to strengthen he religious convictions of the various persons witnessg in these camps. During the pastor's absence Rev. rthur S. Rosenberger of the Salem church brought the orning message. During this trip the pastor visited he offices of the M.C.C. at Akron, Pa., and also the ational Board for Religious Objectors in Washington, C.

John Morneweck, the new Sunday School superintenent, has provided the teachers with copies of Tarbell's nd Peloubet's teachers guides.

Speakers at Eden Church

Dr. J. Winfield Fretz

Dr. Ed. G. Kaufman

The Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, began six days of special services on March 12. Dr. Ed. G. Kaufman and Dr. J. Winfield Fretz are the speakers. Dr. Kaufman, a son of the Eden Church, is President of Bethel College. Dr. Fretz, contributor of "Mennonites and Rural Life" in this paper, is at present conducting some investigative studies for the Mennonite Central Committee, relative to rehabilitating our young men as they come back from the service, and other related problems.

Afternoon services begin at 2:30 o'clock, with Dr. Kaufman conducting a Bible study during the first part and Dr. Fretz speaking along the line of rural church work during the second part. The evening service begins at 7:45 with Dr. Kaufman giving evangelistic messages on the disciples during the first part and Dr. Fretz continuing his theme after that.

JOTTINGS

—First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California: Plans are under way for the enlargement of the basement and the remodeling of the auditorium as these plans become possible. The changing of the auditorium will give more room for the morning services, but at the same time some Sunday School class rooms will be taken up. Enlarging the basement would create more such rooms. It is reported that $2,200 is already available for the program of expansion.

—Bethel College: On Thursday evening, March 2, at the regular dinner hour, over one hundred students and faculty members gathered in the chapel for a meditation hour during which Dr. P. A. Penner spoke on the famine in India. Those present sacrificed their evening meal, and the money that would have gone for the food will be sent by the Business Office to the M.C.C. for India Famine Relief.

—The Middle District Conference last August authorized its Education Committee to contact the churches of the district in order to promote a more effective teaching program. Brother H. E. Nunemaker, pastor of the Zion Mennonite Church, Donnellson, Iowa, has been asked to visit the churches. From March 13 to 24 inclusive he is to visit the churches in Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio.

—Bulletins, Buhler Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kansas: The "Parsonage-Loyalty" supper netted over $500.00 in cash and bonds. The amount in the parsonage fund is now a little over $1,500.00.

—Burrton Mennonite Church, Burrton, Kansas: The Junior C.E. recently featured a special program. Miss Marguerite Sprunger, student at Bethel College and missionary candidate, gave a program of music and a chalk talk.

—Brother J. B. Epp writes, "All Mennonites in or near Lincoln, Nebraska, are kindly requested to send their names and address to the undersigned. Readers who have Mennonite relatives, friends, or other acquaintances here, please send me their names and addresses. Thanks. The purpose of this is to get together off and on for fellowship. This is being done in other larger cities, and is enjoyed by all who come. Have you C.O. young brethren stationed here?"

SPIRIT OF BROTHERLINESS SHOWN

A fine spirit of brotherliness was shown on March 8 when fifteen members of the Gnadenberg Mennonite Church, near Newton husked out some corn for a fellow member who was ill. On Tuesday one of the church members called upon a few others and suggested the proposition. It was accepted so enthusiastically that others heard about it. On the afternoon of the next day fifteen men with seven wagons drove into the five acre patch of corn. After two hours of enjoyable work the field was husked, and there were seven full loads of corn for Gerhard Nickel, the member who had been ill for some time.

—Bulletin, Bethel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: "We commend those families who make it a practice to have their younger children sit with them in church. In our day families are not together as often as they ought to be. For the family to worship together, not only in the same church but in the same pew, has a solidifying and unifying influence. We congratulate and encourage you children who sit with your parents during worship services."

—E. J. Neuenschwander in the "Church Messenger" says, "Can we as Christians show love toward and pray for Germans and Japanese, as well as for our own American friends? As followers of Christ we need to be diligent in our prayer life. We dare not become hateful."

—Members of the Menno Mennonite Church, Lind, Washington, gave $2,862.75 to Bethel College during its fiscal year of 1942-43. This makes an average of $19.74 per member, the highest of any church in the conference.

—The constitution (new) of the Zion Mennonite Church, Elbing, Kansas, under requirements for admittance states: "Anyone may become a member of this church who has been baptized upon the confession of faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and as his personal Savior; gives evidence of Christian character; accepts and approves of the Articles of Faith and this constitution; and pledges to support all the principles and provisions thereof." (It would be interesting to know how many of our churches actually get a committment from their candidates for membership in regard to such matters as mentioned in the last two phrases quoted above.)

—Bluffton, Ohio: The sixth annual Booster Banquet of Bluffton College will be held in the local high school gymnasium, Friday evening, March 24, at 7 p.m. Speaker for the occasion will be Frazier Reams, who is widely known as a public speaker and has held many positions or responsibility in public life, including that of collector of internal revenue of the Toledo district. Bluffton's Booster Banquest has been steadily gaining favor with friends of the college. Supported only by a few devoted friends of the school in its first year, the banquet has grown in size, until a total of approximately 350 tickets was sold last year. With ticket prices remaining the same—$3.00 for one, and $5.00 for two—prospects for a good attendance are unusually favorable this year, according to the banquet committee and the college administration.

—The new Mennonite Junior Quarterly is now used by eighty-nine Sunday Schools. Over 2,250 copies will be used this coming quarter. Rev. J. M. Suderman, Manager of the Mennonite Publication Office, Newton, Kansas, says that he is very well pleased with the response to this quarterly.

—Rev. H. T. Reimer of Holmsville, Nebraska, passed to his heavenly home on February 29, after several years of illness. Brother Reimer was one of the two ministers who throughout the years have assisted the regular pastor of the Second Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska. Rev. Jacob Wiebe is the other minister who has so served and continues to serve. See the obituary of Brother Reimer in this paper. Besides his manifold duties in church and business, Brother Reimer took an active part in the work of the Western District Conference. One of his three sons, Henry T. Reimer, Jr., is Director of the Civilian Public Service Camp, Fort Collins, Colorado.

—Mrs. J. M. Suderman, who has been assisting her husband with the large amount of work in the Publication Office, is confined to the Bethel Hospital where she is seeking to recover her strength.

—The Bethel College Bible Week, held from March 6 to 10 was very well attended. The Western District Ministers' Conference was held during the same week. Papers were read on important subjects, and we hope to present some of them to the readers of this paper.

—The Bergtal Church near Corn, Oklahoma, was the host to the recent Oklahoma Church Leaders' Conference. The women's mission society served the good meals, which included "borscht" and fried chicken. Brother Henry Hege is the school-teacher pastor of this church. With the duty of superintending a school system of 250 pupils, he has his head and heart full.

—The brethren H. P. Fast, pastor of the Mennonite Church at Orienta, Oklahoma, and J. C. Kaufman, pastor of the Emmaus Mennonite Church, Whitewater, Kansas, recently conducted a series of meetings for the Oklahoma churches. The brethren did this in behalf of the Oklahoma Bible Academy, which rendered this service to the churches in appreciation of the loyalty shown in the past.

—Correction: The per member average of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas, for 1943 was $13.13 and not $3.13 as erroneously stated in the last financial supplement of this paper.

Before You Marry, Ponder Well These Questions:

Your Religion

Are you a Christian? Do you know what it means be "born again"? If you are in doubt, see a liable minister or Christian friend about this.

If you are both Christians, have you talked to- ther about your Christian experience, your ideas God, and your fellowship with Him?

Do you find reality in prayer? Have you prayed one and together about the marriage you are plan- ng?

Have you talked about setting aside a certain ne each day for Bible reading and prayer together?

Are you members of the same church?

If not, have you counted the cost of a divided yalty and intelligently faced it? Have you seriously udied each other's denomination to find out if you ight unite with the same church and enjoy worship d Holy Communion together?

Will you pray that God will help you, through e remainder of your engagement and honeymoon ys as well as through your entire life, to be true each other as long as you both shall live?

Your Person

Have you discussed together your ideals, goals, and e work? Are you united here sufficiently to live rmoniously together?

Have you secured all the information you feel you ould about the various aspects of marriage? Do u understand each other's views about parenthood? o you entertain any fears about yourself, or about ch other, or about any of the physical aspects of arriage? If so, have you frankly talked this over gether?

Do you have any disease, or likelihood of disease, hich may affect your future? Have you seen a liable doctor about this?

Do you know each other's educational attainments, sposition, temper, and mental level?

Are you subject to loneliness and homesickness hich would frequently take you to your parents' me? If so, does the other realize this?

Your Parents

If conditions should arise which would demand that latives live with you or you with them, do both you understand this?

Is there any difficulty between you and your rents or in-laws that could and should be cleared by a friendly, frank talk before you are married?

Do either of you feel restraint by the other one carrying out your lawful and Christian obligation to your own family? If so, have you talked this over together?

Your Interests

Have you considered how you can develop your common interests?

Have you considered how you can develop your individual hobbies and recreational interests so they will not consume too much of the time and money you might otherwise spend together and use to the development of your home?

Have you discussed together your ideals of a happy home and your ultimate aim for marriage?

Your Finances

Do you understand each other's occupational history?

Do you know what your combined income will be? Do you expect it to continue as it is or to increase or diminish?

Do both of you understand how much money is at your disposal with which to start your home?

Have you organized your income so you will know how much you can spend for food, rent, clothing, doctors, church, recreation, and the like?

Have you planned any savings for future needs, such as children, education, sickness?

Do you know how much training the other one has received for a trade or profession?

Are both of you willing to work, sacrifice, and save to make your home an economic success? Do you understand each other on this matter?

Your Wedding

Have you read the wedding service, so that you know what you are to promise?

Have you planned your wedding as you yourself wish it, so that it will always be a pleasant memory to you?

About C.P.S. Boys on Dairy Farms

"I want to give you some concrete examples from among the boys now doing dairy farming in Wisconsin. These boys are scattered in five counties, twenty in each county. It is the writer's privilege and responsibility to keep in touch with these boys, to contact the homes and adjust matters if any occasion arises to make adjustments necessary and to contact us.

farmers. I appreciate the testimony I receive from the farmers. I want you to remember that the boys are in Catholic homes, and in homes representing other denominations; some are in non-Christian homes. I am giving you some of the testimonies of the farmers, hoping that these testimonies will continue.

"We have never had a man like this before. You can depend on him; he does just as good when I am not with him as when I am with him." A farmer who was taken to the hospital said, "I never worried at all. I knew everything would be taken care of at home." "The boys don't drink." There is a tavern to nearly every square mile. It is an unusual thing to the farmers to have a young man who refuses to take a drink. "The boy does not smoke." That is strange to these people to see a young man refuse a cigarette. "You don't hear him use profanity." May God bless our boys to continue to live the Gospel. One farmer told me, "I have a son, just a little younger than the boy I have; and I appreciate having such a clean boy for mine to associate with." "It will mean something to our community to have these boys with us," was another statement. Sister Short and myself were in a restaurant eating when a lady came in. We invited her to sit at our table. During our conversation she inquired what our work is. When we explained, she said, "I've heard quite a lot about these boys. We have a boy in our church who wants to take the same stand that your boys are taking." In talking to different storekeepers, the testimony we have received was that these boys certainly are clean boys. Again, may God bless our boys. May this kind of testimony continue. They are living right among those people and are proving to them that the way of love is the only way. People have made the statement to me, "After all, I believe that that is the way." Men who have made no profession of Christianity have made similar remarks."

For Better Stewardship

Sometime ago, our pastor preached on "tithing." During the course of the sermon he pointed out the sizeable amount of money that would become available for the Lord's work if all members tithed. Since most of this money did not reach the offering plates, nor the treasury, where did it go? And for what purposes?

A sadness stole over me as I realized afresh how poor is our stewardship of both Time and Money. Now if this is true in our congregation, it must be true among our sister churches, too.

Beginning with themselves, Brotherhood members can do a great deal to bring together fellow church members, whose latent talents and contributions are not fully consecrated to God, and introduce them to the program, aim, and true purpose of the Church, where there is such great need in the "fields white already unto harvest."

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT

TOPIC: SOME THINGS JESUS DID NOT FORBID

ripture: The Book of Mark

te: It is not the purpose of this topic to say that any- ing Jesus did not forbid is all right for us to do. iere are many things Jesus says nothing about at all, ch as movies, dancing, and smoking. But this topic to try to help us to see some of the ways Jesus dif- ed from the Scribes and Pharisees and even His own sciples on some questions. Let the program consist of Bible study of the Book of Mark, with ten members the C.E. each taking one of these subtopics and ref- ences and stating in a few sentences before the group e two sides of the question.

1. Mark 2:15-17, Eating with sinners. The Scribes re shocked to see Jesus and His disciples associating th sinners. Jesus said these were the very ones who eded Him most. Question for discussion: Would the ribes have been right in objecting if Jesus had been mbling with the sinners instead of eating a meal?

2. Mark 2:18-22, Fasting. John's disciples and the iarisees were fasting, and Jesus were not; so they jected. But Jesus said in effect: My disciples have und their Messiah and yours are still looking for m. Question for discussion: Is there no place for sting?

3. Mark 2:23-27, Sabbath Observance. The Pharisees id it is not lawful for you to pluck grain on the Sab- th. Jesus said it was the spirit of the law and not the ter which was important. Question: What is the dif- ence between plucking a few ears in passing, to sat- y hunger, and harvesting a field of grain?

4. Mark 3:1-6, Healing on the Sabbath. The Pharisees jected to Jesus performing cures on the Sabbath. Je- s was both angry and grieved at this foolish attitude. healed the man with the withered hand and said was lawful to do good on the Sabbath. Question: iould doctors work on Sunday?

5. Mark 8:1-10, Free Food for the Crowds. The disci- es seemed to consider the crowds a nuisance and their inger was their own business to look out for. Jesus said had compassion on them. Question: Would Jesus ap- ove of a relief program of free food for all kinds of ople? Difference between lazy people and war-suffer- s.

6. Mark 7:1-23, Eating without Washing Hands. Jews bid people to eat without washing "up to the elbow" "with the fist." This was more a ceremony than a cessity, and Jesus did not forbid his disciples to eat ith unwashen hands." Question: Does it say, "The ws saw what dirty hands the disciples had?" Why not? hat is the difference?

7. Mark 9:38-40, Following Jesus but Not with His Dis- les. The disciples forbade a man to cast out devils Jesus' name because he did not belong to their group. sus said, "Forbid him not," because he was not against irist but for Him. Question: How do we feel about ople who have a different way of following Christ m our own? Are all Christians in our own group?

8. Mark 10:13-16, Children Coming to Christ. The dis- les tried to push aside the little ones who would me to Jesus. But He said "Forbid them not." Ques- n: How young can we come to Christ for salvation?

9. Mark 14:3-9, Costly Ointment for Jesus. These that w the woman annoint Jesus' head with the ointment nsidered it a terrible extravagance, but Jesus saw her e and sacrifice and said, "Let her alone; why trouble her? She hath done a good work." Question: What ace have flowers and music and other unnecessary but autiful things in comparison with food or medicine?

10. Mark 14:43-50, Jesus Taken by Force. Judas and e soldiers led Jesus away to His death by force, but did not forbid them. He did not even let any one fend Him. Question: Why did He not call for a legion angels to kill all His enemies?

THE CROSS—A PLUS SIGN

Hymns: Mennonite Hymnary, No. 106 "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross;" No. 112, "Beneath the Cross of Jesus."

Chorus: "All the Way to Calvary" No. 3 Bible Choruses and Songs by the Evangel Press, Miami, Florida

Bible verses to be read by Juniors: John 12:24, 25; Hebrews 13:12; Philippians 3:10; Romans 6:5; and Hebrews 12:2.

Talk to be given or read by a Junior: Upon seeing a cross on an altar for the first time a little girl asked, "What's that plus sign doing on that table?" A plus sign . . . it is that! Jesus left His home in heaven to live among men. Not only that; He did more. He showed greater love. He gave His life for those who killed Him. While suffering He said, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do."

For the Leader: Draw a cross on the board at the meet- beforehand.

When Christ permitted His enemies to crucify Him he won four victories:

1. Victory over self. (Find four Vs in cross. Erase one V.)
2. Victory over the Law. (Erase another V.)
3. Victory over sin. (Erase third V.)
4. Victory over death. (Erase last V.)

Although His enemies seemed to have won, to have destroyed Jesus, we find that He lives again. Although His disciples and followers were persecuted the Christian religion was not stamped out. Love was stronger than hate, life than death!

What has become of the Cross? So, too, the victories erased the Cross. Story to be told or read by a Junior: "There is a beautiful story told that during the first World War a man and his son were walking down the street when the little fellow noticed that in many homes there were flags with gold stars on them, sometimes one or two or three signifying the number of those who had been killed overseas. The boy was much interested and then looking up into the sky he saw a star shining brightly there. 'Look!' he shouted to his father, 'There's a star in God's window. Has he had a son killed?' 'Yes,' the father answered, 'God's only Son was killed for us.' "

Poem to be read by a Junior as a prayer:

"Dear God, who shared the pain of death
With Him on Calvary
Whose Spirit made his dying breath
A word of prayer to thee,

I pray that thou wouldst fill my soul
With love, my life with grace,
My heart renew, my mind make whole,
And mold His kindness in my face."

C. P. S. CAMP NEWS

Dependency Problem

On March 17-18 a General Meeting of the Mennonite Central Committee will be held in Chicago, at which time one of the major problems for consideration will be action on a more adequate plan to help meet the dependency situation that confronts drafted Mennonite men at the present time.

Smoke Jumper Unit

Plans are being carried out to increase the camp strength of the Smoke Jumper Unit at Missoula, Montana, from 70 to 120. A total of 104 of these men will be jumpers and the remainder cooks and kitchen helpers.

IN THE MAIL

Rev. R. Weinbrenner
North Newton, Kansas

I'm enclosing two clippings which I feel bear out thoughts which not only the Catholics find applicable, but I believe can be applied to ourselves as Mennonites. The future of the Christian Church, I feel, is today in the balance and though other churches are apparently doing work in its behalf the Mennonite Church has the responsibility of showing a reeling world how to live by the commandment of "Love thy neighbor as thyself." My question is, unless we teach our future (Mennonite) generations through parochial training the precepts and values of this commandment and the heritage we connect with it, will we not go the way of our European brethren and drop the peace cudgels. Today we face the issue as our forefathers faced it. Some adhered to the belief and fled the issue by removing themselves from the scene of battle, the rest were overcome and dropped the peace standard for the sake of national conformity in their country. Are we now going to do one or the other? I'm hoping and praying that we will all decide to be true Christians and attempt to not only face the issue but attempt to do something to rectify the situation. Let us dare to do what other generations of Mennonites could or would not do. Let us train ourselves and our children in the true Christian way of living. If we do that and as the Catholic says "put our salvation in first place," then we will automatically radiate the peace spirit of Christ. That flame fed by expression in public and the printed page cannot help but spread to a war weary world, and cause it to look first to its salvation. Once that realization comes we must go on, however, to further help and train peoples to get along with one another.

Enough for now. These clippings do have some sound truths in them and perhaps you will agree. I feel we can never over-stress the value of the peace principle. Nor can we train our youth, too much.

SUNDAY SCHOOL QUARTERLY LATE

The press on which the Mennonite Junior Quarterly is printed has broken down, and copies of the quarterly will be mailed before the first Sunday of the new quarter. However, they may not reach all Sunday Schools for distribution on March 26. So if the quarterlies are not there by March 26, you may know that they are on the way. We are very sorry that this has happened.

(Here is one of the statements referred to by Brother Easu. It is released by the Catholic Information Bureau, Sodality, Sacred Heart Junior College, Wichita 12, Kansas. We present it here because of its suggestiveness in regard to parochial education by Mennonites. Try subsituting the word "Mennonite" for "Catholic" while reading the statement.)

WHY CATHOLICS HAVE THEIR OWN SCHOOLS

"It's beyond me," pettishly observed non-Catholic Mrs. Smith to her non-Catholic neighbor, "why those Murphys insist on sending their children so far to the Catholic school, with the public school right in the next block. The best I can say is it's odd."

Yes, it must seen odd to many non-Catholics, but it is very reasonable, once you see the Catholic point of view.

For the Catholic, his religion is the most important thing in life. His eternal salvation depends on his preserving it and living up to its essential precepts. He can't risk losing it.

However, he feels that his children undergo such a risk if they attend the public school. He does not say that the public school is atheistic. He does not say that it is anti-Christian or immoral. But he knows that every public has a "No Religion Wanted" sign over its entrance. If he sends his children there, they will spend a great part of every day forgetful of God. Their faith may grow cold. It's too great a risk.

No mother lets her baby play with knives or climb stepladders. It might cut itself or suffer severe injury to the body. For a Catholic child to spend its school days in a Godless atmosphere might easily result in a bloody cut to its Catholic faith.

Catholics do not belittle the subjects taught in public schools. Their own schools honor the same subjects. Nor do Catholics under value the administrative and teaching ability of those engaged in operating the public schools. It is on a par with their own. But they can never admit that religion may be ignored in the formative years of a child.

Catholics support both the public schools and their own. It makes a hole in the pocketbook to maintain their own schools. But it's worth it! Eternity is worth more than time.

IN MEMORIAM

MARIAN TOEVS, daughter of John E. and Nelle Lichtenheld Toevs, was born at Aberdeen, Idaho, on May 13, 1917. In 1931 she was baptized and received into the First Mennonite Church of Aberdeen. In 1943 she was accepted into the Woman's Army Air Force Service. While on a routine flight on February 18 her plane crashed and she was killed.

CORRECTION

On page 7 of the March issue of the "Western District Tidings" there appeared an information blank which Western District CE's were asked to complete and mail to Helen Hiebert Mueller, North Newton, Kansas, by March 15, 1944. The date on this has been extended to April 10, 1944. Furthermore, one of the projects listed on the blank read: "Western District C.E. Work, 50c per member." This is an error. It should be 50c per society. We hope that all societies in the district will help us by sending in their blanks before April 10.

Brotherhood of the Eastern District Conference 1917-'42

By Norman K. Berky

Thinking back over the years, it was interesting to ar the brethren early years carefully weigh each her's counsel in a friendly manned until the best of ch ones thoughts was put together into action. Per- nally, I deplore this carrying of every detail over to a committee room. There is great value in open or discussions. It is the simple Mennonite way of ing things.

The Committee on Church Promotion and Miss- nary work did a great deal of exploring and plan- ng for a Minister's Pension Fund. What led up to e Pension Fund was action taken at the 1921 meet- g requesting the Committee on Church Promotion d Missionary Work to make a survey of minister's laries with a view of their receiving better and more iform salaries and to provide for the care of aged eachers.

In 1922 the following recommendations were made the Committee:

To provide a suitable dwelling for the pastor. Unmarried ministers should receive a minimum salary of $1,200.00 annum; a married minister a minimum salary of $1,500.00 per year with $100.00 additional for each child.

That Conference should contribute a pension of $500.00 per year to single ministers and $700.00 per annum to married ministers. Three hundred dollars annually to single ministers and $500.00 to married ministers who may have a home.

To carry out these recommendations there was to be a Pastor's Aid Band with $1.00 to $0.50 yearly as first and second class contributions respectively.

For ten years this pension plan was discussed, and great deal of work done by the Committee investi- ing insurance, building and loan, and setting up own fund on the insurance principle. Conference ally adopted a pension plan submitted as proposed the Brotherhood in 1932. Later minutes seem to ly that it was dropped as too big a job for our Con- ence alone, although Conference has a small Pension nd now.

eptember 6, 1920, a rather interesting resolution passed to invite essays on the subject of non- istance and offer three prizes: first prize $75.00, ond prize $50.00, and third prize $25.00. Later it was decided to drop the idea.

Accomplishments in Fellowship.

he Brotherhood has indeed furnished opportunities men to become better acquainted with each other to become more keenly interested in church act- ies.

hree men stand out to whom the Brotherhood owes e than to any others since its inception, the breth- , Max Kratz, F. K. Moyer, and S. M. Rosenberger, well balanced and prospered in their separate vo- ons. Their like is hard to duplicate in many years; have had no such combination like it since and not have for a long time to come. They were true friends to one another, they loved the church and its doctrines; each was a worthy, successful individual in his chosen field of occupation. They loved the brethren and sacrificed much for the Brotherhood in time, expense, constructive planning, and prayer.

Mr. Moyer died in office. Upon him rested most of the detail work, and he was probably the most valuable one of the three to the Brotherhood. He was the best secretary we ever had. Experienced as an accountant, his minutes are precise, the data is all there, neatly, exactly recorded. One has no trouble finding the true status of things in his records.

The Brotherhood is the length of the shadow of these three. The rest of us who came on were simply smaller of stature and the Brotherhood suffered accordingly. Then too, let us not underrate the value of friendship. These three were close friends. When we are real brethren to one another, loving the brethren, we shall grow much faster as the organization.

Who can estimate the value of the Brotherhood meetings through all these years—twenty-four of them? The inspiration of them, the building up of the Faith, the arousing of desire to serve our church, one another, and above all our Lord and Saviour more faithfully, who can estimate the value of all these opportunities experienced through the Brotherhood?

Yes, these three formed a well nigh perfect team, pulling together as one. They are an illustration of what the Brotherhood can do for us all in the home churches and in the Conference, of the necessity of unselfish devotion to duty, love for one another, and a sympathetic regard for the other fellow's joys and sorrows.

Because of these Brotherhood drives many of us have learned to give. I can still see Brother Max Kratz, so deeply moved, the tears rolling down his cheeks, yes, the advocate, pleading with us for real sacrificial giving. Think of it, a Conference without even having a budget, and no real emphasis on giving heretofore, raised almost $42,000. Our people know the value of a dollar and know how to hang on to it. Today, some of us as individuals and as a Conference have learned to give in a measure as we had not in the past because of the work done by the Brotherhood under the leadership of Max Kratz. We have learned that giving is worship in its highest and purest form. Things we possess are not our own; we are but stewards and God requires of us that which He has given us. We smile scornfully at Jacob's bargain with the Lord, but even so, Jacob has been worthier than many of us have been. In these things Max Kratz led us with his ability to stir up enthusiasm for a project and to set us on fire for a cause.

Many pleasant memories rise up before me of these three men—S. M. Rosenberger, the experienced teacher. In the minutes, I am reminded again of his ability to state concisely, constructively, and with a vision, the purpose of the Brotherhood. See the minutes of September 29, 1923, and September 26, 1925. There is a standard for all Brotherhood presidents to follow. Let me quote the statement of the Brotherhood purpose of 1923 for your edification.

1. To aid your home church projects.
2. To assist in the promotion of higher morality and good citizenship.
3. To help further missionary activities.
4. To foster Christian education.
5. To seek a deepening of the Christian life and experience, especially a deepening of prayer life, and a more faithful study of God's Word.
6. To endeavor to increase church attendance.
7. To work and pray for the unity of believers, especially to seek to bring about a closer denominational fellowship.

I have mentioned Brother F. K. Moyer's ability to record transactions precisely and with an orderly mind. He was gifted to analyze and weigh all facts carefully and keep them in their proper relationship, due to his experience as an accountant. The Brotherhood owes a very, very large debt of gratitude to these three brethren, M. H. Kratz, F. K. Moyer, and S. M. Rosenberger.

Let me note also that in the minutes of the annual meeting of 1925 you will find the best analysis of the address of the leading speaker of that meeting. You read it and have the gist of the whole address. I remembered the occasion well as I read it. It is a gem and the best resume in twenty-four years. Brother Erwin Weiss must have been inspired when he recorded that portion of the minutes of the meeting.

There have been problems and one problem recurring all through the years has been that of membership—it is too small. A lot of energy was expended to improve the situation but it proved ineffective. About 1923 the mechanics of organizatio and membership drives took up too much time for th results obtained. Some of these drives for member were necessary and bore some fruit. I believ w still have this problem with us today. There i hardly a meeting through the years that it has no cropped up. Why is there so much fruitlessness o effort along this line, not only in the Brotherhood bu in our churches, Sunday Schools, and C. E. Societie as well?

This is S. M. Rosenberger. Unfortunately cuts of the other men were not available.

4. Accomplishments in the deepening of Spiritua Lives.

Here are samples of topics discussed at variou meetings: Peace and Church History by A. J. Neuenschwander, Silas Grubb, and others; Economic History of our people—How God prospers His people Relief—addresses by those who were engaged in relief work or who knew conditions—Rev. Krehbie Rev. Janz, Rev. David Toews, Orie Miller, and others Tithing—as a solution for our financial problems Church problems were always at the forefront of discussion with an eye to help in their solution; Witnessing for Christ and personal soul winning—Christian testimony by life as well as by speech; Temperance—enforcement of the eighteenth Amendment, note of warning in the resolutions against gambling ar all forms of vice, Sunday desecration, and the increase in power of the forces of evil in more recen meetings.

October 22, 1932, marks the origin of a program f monthly local chapter meetings. The need of he to local chapters in planning programs similar to C. Societies and Sunday School lessons for the stuc of God's Word led to this development. It has bee worked on ever since and is today if I am not mi taken. It is a mighty fine piece of work and if us by local chapters will certainly do them a great de of good. I tried to find some of these lessons, I u ually save everything along this line, but I have copies on hand. The minutes do not give much info mation as to the content of the lessons. A month bulletin was issued containing helps on such topics the Home, Family Worship, Missions, and Conferen activities.

Recently a committee was appointed to work o ways and means of keeping in touch with the bo in the service and in the Civilian Public Servi Camps.

5. Conclusions.

A resolution adopted at the October 24, 1931, me ing is of great importance. It is—"Resolved that t success of this organization depends primarily up the fostering of the spiritual life through private a family devotions, supporting the church in all of h regular and special services, and as the practical pression of our faith, to perform whatever servi we may be called upon to render."

Here is where our weakness has been in the pa individually, as a Brotherhood and in the lo churches. Our strength lies not in this physical ganization of a Brotherhood, but in the deeper f that we are brethren in Christ Jesus, our Lord a Saviour. This organization is but an outward expr n of what is already true of us as Christians, born ain ones. If this is the true condition in each life re today, we are kin. We love the same things, things of God; we abhor the same things, the ngs of the world; we have the same mind on things ndamental. We are in unity and here lies true urch union, the unity of the Spirit, not merely iting church organizations. Thus we have the same e, the same Book, the same Lord and Saviour, the ne God. When these things are so, men's hearts ave to each other; they lose themselves and their fishness in love for the Lord and the brethren. Build these things and your membership will grow apace; ur local chapters will increase, you will have life, d life begets life.

In view of these things, some of our needs are:

To unite for Christian service in our Brotherhood d in our churches.

For a stronger, purer, holier Christian walk and timony.

For a new sense of the awfulness of sin in God's ht, man's need of salvation, and the awful state of om without it.

For a finer discernment of and dependance upon d's Word and its application to today's needs.

News from Three Missionaries on Way to India

A few months ago Brother and Sister F. J. Isaac and ter Schrag succeeded by hairs breadth to go by air Buenos Aires. Then the revolution there stopped all os for the East. Things looked dark.

A letter from there by Mrs. Isaac to her brother in . Lake was dated February 23, and said carefully ded this much:

The clouds are lifting suddenly. We are very nkful. We know you are praying for us. Will not e time to write P. A.'s and the others; so you may them. That is as much as I can say to you. We l hoped to be at the wedding of Vernon Schmidt, is expecting his bride this week from the U. S. this may not be possible with present developits.

am afraid I am too excited to write. Shall be very y tomorrow. We commit you all and our dear son our heavenly Father's keeping. You may have r news from us before this reaches you."

hen last week the following cable arrived:

"Am well."

CORRESPONDENCE

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH
Paso Robles, California

We seem to take it for granted that nothing happens in our little church, but a great deal has occurred since you last heard from us in The Mennonite.

Rev. C. Hege Resigns Pastorate

As some of you may already know through our Y.P. news Your Home Church, Rev. C. Hege some months ago closed the morning servies by reading his letter of resignation effective April, 1944. He has served this congregation for nearly twenty-five years, for which we are thankful. At our annual business meeting the problem of replacing our pastor was fully discussed, and we hope and pray that someone may soon be found to fill this vacancy.

During the past nine months the Lord has seen fit to call four of our members out of our midst. We miss them all, especially in church as they had been active members either in Sunday School or church or both. We know they have fought the good fight and it is for us the living to carry it on. With Camp Roberts about twelve miles from here one meets Mennonites occasionally, recently from Upland, California, South Dakota and Minnesota. It is hard to contact them, unless they make themselves known, especially in such a large camp as this one. —Corr.

IMMANUEL MENNONITE CHURCH
Los Angeles, California

Our pastor, Rev. W. A. Regier, is leaving Saturday, March 18 for Paso Robles, California, where he is to conduct special meetings at the Second Mennonite Church for one week. Dr. John Hubbard from the Bible Institute of Los Angeles will be taking his place on Sunday morning. In the evening we are to have a noted missionary from Africa, Rev. Tom Titcomb, as our guest speaker.

It is the joy of this church to have one young lady and two young men preparing for full time service for the Lord. Miss Dorothy Schroeder, our church worker, at present has been accepted to go as missionary to Africa. Mr. Leonard Hanes is preparing for service in South America and hopes to go this fall. Mr. Homer Sperling, our Sunday School superintendent, is preparing for full time service and is waiting upon the Lord as to what His will is. It is the Lord's will for a church to be mission-minded. and so if every member does his or her part the Lord has a special blessing in store.

Today, the funeral of Mrs. Katherine Paulus Ortman took place at the Wee Kirk O' the Heather at Forrest Lawn Memorial Park, in Glendale, California.

The Ladies of the church gather once a month at the church to sew and patch for relief work. Also some quilting is done. This last time, after quilting all day, one of the ladies discovered a small pair of scissors hidden in between the quilt. What was to be done? Well, they had to open the nice stitches and work their way to the obstacle. Fortunately it was not far in. May this teach us a lesson in our life. The outside may be bright and shiny, but are there chances that some sin may be hidden in our heart. Sometimes the Lord speaks to us in just such cases.

The church choir is busily preparing for an Easter cantata, "Darkness and Dawn," composed by Fred W. Peace, the choir director being Mr E. E. Yoder. Many of our young people have joined the choir now, making it quite a sizeable group.

—Mrs. Elizabeth Rempel, Corr.

"If you wish to reform others conquer yourself first and say but little. Example is the better influence."

This is a picture of the meetinghouse of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Winton, California, and of some of the members who attend there. This congregation joined the Pacific District Conference in 1941. It now has a total of forty-nine members. Rev. J. P. Glanzer is the pastor. There are three other Mennonite churches in Winton. The community is a good fruit country.

JOTTINGS

—The constitution of the Zion Mennonite Church, Elbing, Kansas, states, "It is expected that every member of the congregation shall participate in a family worship and offer prayer at meals.... All parents should make the Christian training of their children their serious and sincere business, and it is required of them, that at the proper age they send their children to the catechetical instruction. . . . Each member is duty bound to keep the Sunday holy and attend all religious meetings on Sunday and holidays as often and regularly as possible."

—Notes from the annual meeting of the Hebron Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kansas: "The Relief Committee reports the sending of eight boxes of clothing to the relief depot at Akron. They also sent one box of soap, a box of rags for rugs and fifteen other pieces for the C.P.S. camps. New clothing was made and used clothes were gathered and mended; in all about 200 articles and twenty-two childrens' comforts or blankets.

"Mrs. D. H. Dick reported that 337 quarts of canned food were brought and sent to the C.P.S. camps. Fifty-nine quarts of food, one gallon of peaches and ten bushels of potatoes were brought and delivered to Bethel College."

—The Meadow Lake Bible Institute has been started at Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan. Different Mennonite groups are participating in it.

—Rev. A. S. Bechtel, pastor of the Einsiedel Mennonite Church, Hanston, Kansas, wrote on March 14, "Today we have been having a rainy day out here during much of the day. The ground is well-soaked with the moisture, and makes it promising for good spring crops here."

—The Fourth Quarterly Conference of the Eastern District is to convene at Perkasie on March 27. Rev. Walter J. Dick is to conduct a Bible study on the "First Epistle of Peter" and Dr. J. E. Hartzler is to bring a message on "Preaching in a World of War."

—First Mennonite Church, Geary, Oklahoma: On March 13, at 8 p.m. fifteen men of the church met in the service room for a supper served them by the Ladies' Aid. Brother Rufus Meshberger, Calument, a son of the late Jacob Meshberger, missionary farmer in Darlington, gave a very much appreciated talk on the subject, "What Can the Layman Do to Make the Church More Spiritual?" The men of the church discussed the possibility of organizing a brotherhood in the church. Harvey Base was elected president.

Interned Relief Workers Returning

It now seems certain that Henry Buller and wife and Lois Gunden, are included among the repatriate returning from Europe on the Gripsholm. No doubt by the time this notice is read they will be in this country The exchange liner is scheduled to dock at Jersey City sometime between March 10 and 15.

—Springfield (Pa.) Mennonite Church: We expect to have Rev. Henry Heydt, President of the Lancaste School of the Bible, with us on March 23, 24, 25. On Saturday night he will give a demonstration of the Jewish Passover meal. He will have a table set with the variou foods and dishes and will explain each.—Mrs. LeRo Meyers, Corr.

—From our mission field in India: "For some month past, potatoes were selling for around $10.00 to $12.00 pe bushel. We rejoice that they now cost only $7.50 per bushel. Rice has been selling for about three times th rate two years ago. Since rice is the stable article of die for people of our area, it means that if rice takes u half the total income, that now for rice alone the famil needs one and one half times the former income, to sa nothing about addition needs for fuel, scant clothing protein foods, salt, etc."

—Dr. D. V. Wiebe, who went to China to do relief wor with the Friends Ambulance Unit, has been release from that unit in order that he might serve in a mission hospital near Changsha. By serving in this he releases the head of it for other important relief worl Brother Sam Goering did not get to visit Dr. Wieb in China, but he learned about Dr. Wiebe's work.

—Brother J. E. Hartzler writes that he plans to giv the following lectures soon in several C.P.S. camps an hospital units: "Meeting the Crisis," "Transcending Ou Limitation," "Life's Remainders," "Spiritual Preparedness," "The Challenge of the Christian Ministry." Camp and units to be visited are those at Hagerstown, Mar land, and the following in Virginia, Luray, Grottoe and Staunton.

—Bethesda Mennonite Church, Henderson, Nebraska The young women's mission society is collecting qui patches for Arizona and Montana stations. They pla to ship clothing for relief in the near future. This churc gave $453.70 for C.P.S. during February.

—The Japanese Government has refused to agree to t exchange of any more American and Allied internes the Far East before conditions in the internment and r location camps for Japanese and Japanese-America in this country have been investigated. Gospel Messeng

VOLUME LIX NORTH NEWTON, KANSAS, MARCH 28, 1944 NUMBER 13

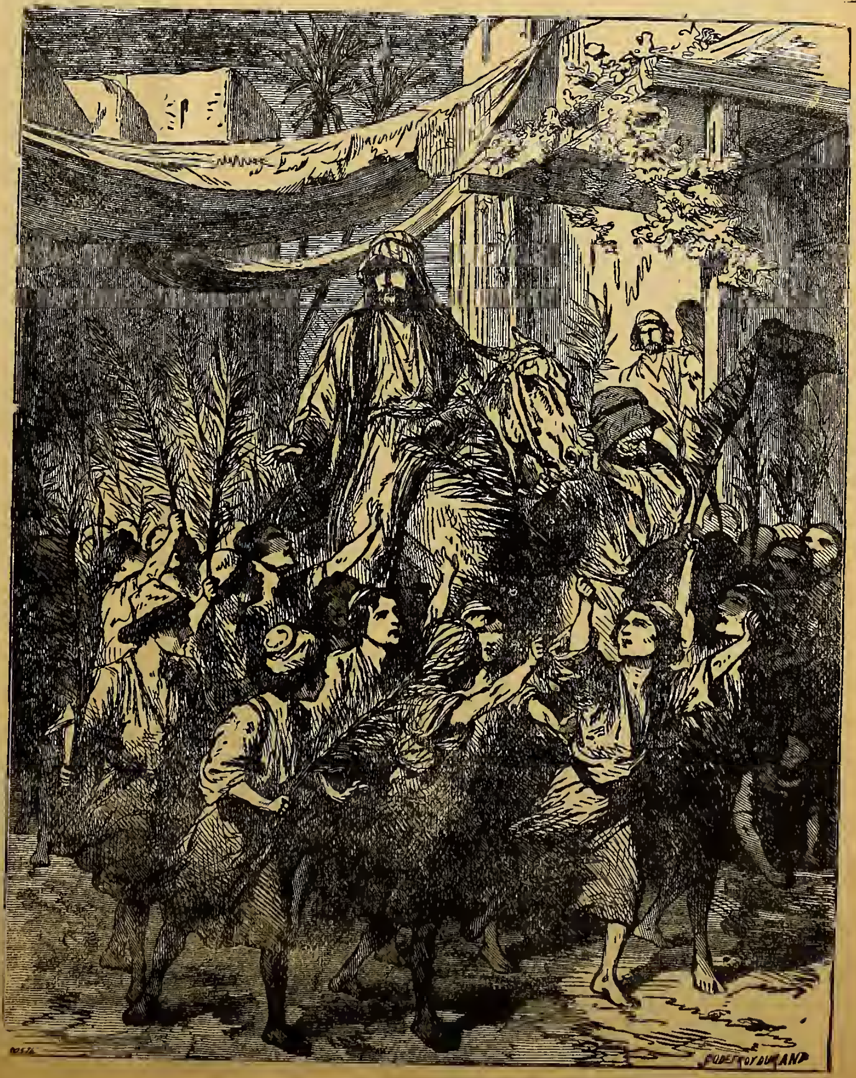
A Tragic Entry

Yes, the multitudes wanted to make Jesus King, but they were unwilling to let Him be their king. They wanted Him to fit into their expectations, and He wanted them to fit into God's will and love for them. They wanted Him to inaugurate a reign that promised a full dinner bucket, but He wanted to be the food by which they should live. They wanted Him to re-establish the Davidic kingdom as a political fact in this world, but He wanted to establish the Kingdom of God in their hearts and lives. Once they wanted to make Him their king by force, but He wanted to become King of them by their self-surrender. They wanted Him to free them from the despotism of Rome, but He wanted to free them from the far more cruel despotism of sin and self.

Yes, the multitudes wanted to make Him king on their own terms, but Jesus refused these terms. The acceptance of them would have robbed Him of His real kingship. Furthermore, He was their King. If only they would have accepted Him for what He was. But they refused. In their enthusiasm for Him, they wanted to make Him something that He could not be. They insisted "Our will be done" when they should have cried, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." They refused to surrender their hearts fully to Jesus. That was tragic.

Jesus wept over Jerusalem. It was not surrendering to Him and the peace that He could bring. That was tragic. After the unsuccessful attempt to make Him king by force," . . . many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him." That was ragic.

Any refusal to surrender one's whole heart to Jesus is tragic. Multitudes cry "Hosanna" to Jesus today. They want Him to be king—but they want to determine the kind of King he is to be. Some primarily want Him to be a deliverer from trouble. Some want Him to bless the destruction of their human enemies, while they largely ignore the enemy of sin. Some enjoy doing good in His name and crying Lord, Lord; yet in it all they are doing their own will and not the will of Christ. Some want to be respectable Christians in the sight of men, but for more they little care. Yes, multitudes proclaim him



King today, but how few really permit Him to be the King that he wants to be! That is tragic.

"O Father, we bow before Thee in deep contrition. So often we are tempted to choose our own way and to call it Christlike, while all the while we push aside the real rule of Him whom we proclaim King with our lips. Cleanse us from self and sin and help us to say with Paul, 'I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me.' "—rw.

What Shall Our Attitude Be?

The question of "What shall our attitude be towards our young men in the armed forces, now and when they return?" is a matter that concerns all of us. Because of the widespread interest in this question, we present the following editorial. It is taken from the Gospel Herald, official organ of the Old Mennonites and edited by Paul Erb. Explanation: the beginning of the editorial refers to a previous one on the subject in the same paper. The editorial follows:

"Judging from the response of our readers to a recent editorial on our attitude toward members of the church who accept military service, this question is one of the most important before us just now. There was a general agreement with the position that we ought to labor for and expect the return of these boys to the fold of the church. But there are a few points which were not made sufficiently clear in the earlier editorial (January 20, 1944).

The first is that engaging in war is contrary to the teaching of the Scriptures and not only a violation of a rule of the church. An acceptance of the full-Gospel teaching will not allow the position that one may be an obedient Christian either in or out of the army. It is not ours to say that no one has ever gone to heaven from the battlefield. We only know it is the plain teaching of our Lord and of the apostles that we should resist not evil, that we should love and not hate, that we should forgive and not take vengeance.

Our statement that the membership of Mennonite boys who accept military service "is at least in question" seemed to some to imply that one could possibly be both a Mennonite and a soldier. We fully agree that the plain teachings of the Scriptures and the stated position of the church make it impossible to retain in church fellowship and good standing one who becomes a part of the military machine. We were simply trying to describe the attitude and practice of the church as a whole. Some deal with the question by an immediate expulsion. Others leave the question open until the return of the boys. Whichever method is used, it should be a decided matter in the minds of all that a full standing in the church must depend upon a repudiation of all militaristic sentiment and participation.

There was question also concerning the nature of our prayer for these erring sons of ours. "To pray for God's continual blessing upon them" is not to pray for God's blessing upon their war effort. It should be clear that no Christian can consistently ask God to bless that which He has condemned. It is not even to pray merely that they may be spared and returned to us unharmed. If we pray for this, we should also, as one brother did, pray that no German or Japanese mother may be bereaved through the participation of our boys in the war. But the chief subject of our prayer for these young men should be that God will, as one brother says, "show them the error of their way and lead them to true repentance." The greatest blessing which God could give them would be a renewed conscience against the awful sin of war. And surely we may pray that in whatsoever situation they may come, they may with saving faith lay hold upon Christ as their Saviour.

But these clarifications, which we gladly make, are in no sense a denial of the main point of the earlier editorial, which is that we want to win these boys back to salvation, to fellowship in the church, and to a positive conviction against militarism. The danger is that their having accepted service will create between them and us a sort of strained feeling which will make us cool in our friendship toward them, and which will make them sense that they are unwanted and unwelcome in our churches and in our communities. Let us pray mightily that God will give us a breadth of love which can extend open arms of welcome to the prodigals in uniform, as well as to those who have sinned in other ways.

Who Are the Members?

Speaking of the Placement Committee of our conference, Brother H. A. Fast in his recent article stated that very few churches and pastors know who the members of this committee are. Do you know one, several, or all of the members of this important committee? Try to name them and then check yourself with this list: Chairman, Freeman H. Swartz, Norristown, Pa.; Secretary, Abraham Warkentin, North Newton, Kansas; P. K. Regier, Reedly, California; J. H. Enns, 55 Kate Street, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada; N. W. Bahnmann, Vancouver, British Columbia; P. E. Whitmer, Bluffton, Ohio.

Church without pastors can write to this committee for help in securing a pastor. Pastors without a church can also utilize the help of the committee in finding a congregation to serve.

Have you read Brother's Fast's suggestions for improving the effectiveness of the service of this committee, as given on page five of The Mennonite of February 15? You may want to read the whole article if you have not done so.—rw.

"The Christian's rule is that distribution is more blessed than acquisition; hence what wealth comes to him that is beyond the requirements of a competency for himself and his dependents, he distributes to other people and to deserving causes."

"IN JOURNEYINGS OFT"

By P. A. Penner

The camp was set up in the village Tumidih, about enty-five miles from Champa, as the crow flies. The dian evangelists were already in camp waiting for rs. Penner and the Bible Women to come. On the pointed day I took Mrs. Penner and two Bible omen to the camp in our small mission car. Because creek had to be crossed if we took a short cut, we cided to take a longer route. About 1:00 p.m. we ived in camp and found tea awaiting us.

Taking a short rest I prepared to return to Champa cause of urgent duties in the Leper Home. I said Mrs. Penner that on the return trip I intended to e the short cut because I thought that I would be e to negotiate the creek. Mrs. Penner said, rather mmandingly, "No, you return the way we came; n you are fairly sure of getting home before dark, ereas if you go the shortcut the creek may cause trouble."

should have obeyed, but I didn't. I tried to allay fears and went the short cut. Everything went ously until I came to the creek. It looked as usual. previous trips I had crossed it without trouble and incidentally saved on gas which at that time cost ut fifty cents a gallon. So I thought that there ld be no difficulty this time. Stepping on the I went into the creek. A group of natives watched I got to the center of the creek and then the er came into the car. What happened every car er knows. Promising the watchers one Rupie they ed the car up the steep sandy bank. I was again y on dry land. Examination showed me that I d have to spend the night on the open prairie. first thought that came to me after my otherwise ful Morris car would not start was Mrs. Penner's l, "No, you return the way we came." How she d, in later days, say, "I told you so!" That is ys a sweet, triumphant comeback.

ough I was fairly sure that I could not get my tarted, I never-the-less worked with it until dark. n my car knowledge was exhausted, which is ous little I must admit, I dispatched a runner to Bauman in Champa, asking him to come with eliable car, the Ford, and pull me in. But at arliest, he could not be here until the morning of ext day.

anwhile a large group of interested Indians red around my disabled Morris car. Finally one em, a perfect stranger, ventured to ask, "Sahib, you anything to eat?" I confessed that I had ng. "Would you like to have some milk?"

o, thank you, I am not particularly fond of milk."

ill you eat curry and rice if I get you some?"

h eagerness, I replied, "Yes, I will be very much d if I can have some."

he went to his village fully a mile distant. I do not know whether his wife had supper ready or whether she cooked especially for me, but at any rate, after a fairly long wait here came my man with a delicious meal of curry, rice, vegetables, and pickled lemon, covered with a cloth that the mistress of the house forgot to put into the last Monday's wash. But I can truthfully say that I thoroughly enjoyed my meal. It was well cooked and tasty. When I offered him a coin, he refused to accept it. Well, he at least got my sincere thanks. Squatting on the ground near me he further asked me where I intended to sleep." "Right here in the car."

"Alone?"

"Yes, all alone."

"Aren't you afraid of bhuts? (Evil spirits.)"

"No, evil spirits won't bother me."

"No," he said emphatically, that I will not allow, I will send you a chaukidar (nightwatchman.)"

Sure enough, about an hour later came my chaukidar with a coarse blanket and some firewood in his arms. The night was clear and cool and the stars shone their brightest. A fire was a real comfort. Squatting on the ground I on one side of the bonfire and he on the other I had a wonderful opportunity to speak of my Saviour to him. We must have talked until near midnight and then he rolled into his blanket and I doubled up in the rear seat of the car. If it is remembered that a Morris car is only slightly roomier than the Austin you will believe me when I say that

I could not stretch out and sleep comfortably. After a long night, broken by waking and dozing, day dawned. Only those who have seen India in the cool season of the year can picture to themselves the entrancing beauty of dawn. Before the sun rises above the horizon the birds praise their maker in beautiful song. The air is pure and cool and it feels as though you can hardly get enough of it.

My nightwatchman had rubbed sleep out of his eyes, kindled a fire, and sat bundled up in his blanket waiting for me to emerge from the car. When I left my uncomfortable bed he greeted me with the usual, "Salaam, Sahib."

I said, "Well, Chaukidar, (I didn't know his name,) this night I didn't sleep, too small quarters." Now, the Indian is courteous; he will never say to a white man that he lies; neither will he enter into a long argument trying to convince you that you are wrong; no, he is too polite to do that. So, this man, also, did not contradict me when I maintained that I hadn't slept. He merely said, "Hohee ho, par tor nak gajab bajaeese" which freely translated means, "It may be true (that you didn't sleep), but you snored terrifically." Then it was my turn not to argue. I must have slept some.

About 9:00 a.m. Dr. Bauman came with his car. Good Mrs. Bauman sent along a fine lunch, enough for two or three persons, for which I was and am grateful even until today.

Before noon we arrived in Champa, and because our roads are all dirt and dust paved, I needed a bath and got it.

This is not the only case where I was the recipient of consideration and kindness on the part of non-Christian Hindoos. I may add that some days after this jungle hospitality I sent to my benefactor's wife a brass drinking vessel.

PRAYER SUGGESTIONS

By Our Missionaries in India

"What wouldst thou that I do unto thee?" Jesus. Mk. 10:51.

"When once I am persuaded that a thing is right, I go on praying for it till the end comes. I never give up!" Geo. Muller.

"Ask, and it shall be given unto you." Jesus. Luke 11:9.

The missionaries in India know most definitely that God is answering prayer. They crave fellowship in power working prayer.

Praise God—

1. For the blessings the Lord showered down during revival meetings in most of our churches during period immediately after Rainy Season Bible Course.
2. For the wonderful results in Ingathering during 1943 which we could review during the last closing sessions of Mission Conference.
3. For signs of definite advance in less productive fields, Janjgir and Korba.
4. For the message on Layman's Sunday by one of our leading brothers in which he brought forth most powerfully the duties of the laymen in the church.

Pray for—

5. Evangelistic work during 1944, especially from January to May 1944, that in the power of His Word and Spirit still greater advance may be made.
6. The spread of the church in Janjgir area. He has done something, but we are convinced that He wishes to do very very much more.
7. All missionaries who may travel the high seas either from India to the U.S.A. or vice versa. There are probabilities that from India Miss M. R. Burkhalter, Miss Eva Pauls, Miss Eleanor Thiessen, anc Miss H. E. Nickel may leave India for U. S. A. durin 1944. We hope that at least four missionaries wil leave U.S.A. for India.
8. The working of the new Church Constitution,— the officers, the Governing Body, newly empowere committees, by which an enlarged church organizatio takes over work that thus far has been carried on b the mission. Pray for the seven Indian Elders an for leading laymen who stand as pillars in the churc in India, the bride of Christ.
9. Our Schools. Primary, Middle, Normal, Bibl for those in charge,—housefathers, housemothers, managers, principals, pupils and their parents and spiritu guides, that they may turn out young men and wome whose sole concern is to glorify God and serve the fellowmen.
10. For a few couples among newly organize churches of Mauhadi that they may be found to ha enough love through Christ to live with each other.
11. For many young Indian Christians that in the abnormal days when positions open up so freely take them far and wide, that a deep loyalty to Jes Christ and the church may keep many in less prom nent positions of service where their work and witne are so badly needed.

Why Don't Our Babies Live?

So asked brother Poinka when I visited him in village of Kodopoli, some thirty miles distant from t mission station. When a baby dies, that is pain to parents and friends; no matter whether that is India or in any other country of the world. The erage span of life of India's people is reported to less than thirty years. The reason for this is t so many children die in infancy. And why do they in infancy? The main reason is the lack of proper ca Mothers know next to nothing of the right care babies, so only the very hardiest live. Time and ag one asks a father, "How many children have yo Answer, two, or perhaps three. Then one asks, "H many have been born to you." And the answer co ten or twelve. Among the Christians the death is not nearly as great as among non-Christians, beca Christian mothers begin to listen to advice as to to take care of babies. Yet too many die, and B ther Ponika and others are depressed about it. C care is one of the fruits of the Christian life, and are so glad that our Christians as a whole wan learn to take better care of the little ones who are trusted in their keeping. —John Thiessen

How Shall Churches Help Returning Young Men to Make a Living?

By Henry Fransen

At the outset I must admit that I do not propose) answer this question. The problem of providing livelihood for the returning men when peace will ome is a major concern of our overnment. For quite some time has had economic experts workng on this subject. In spite of his, now and then one reads brief rticles in the paper intimating nat the men in Washington are ot too sure that this problem is lready solved. One source estiates that after the war as many s 19,000,000 men will be jobless.

1 1932 at the height of the depression it was 6,000,000. To bring the issue closer home to us, e know that the M.C.C. has and is studying the ossibilities for aiding young men in C.P.S. camps fter the war. But the question for us is what can ie church do.

First, are we aware or convinced of the fact that iere will be a problem to solve? Immediately upon eceiving the notice that I was to give a paper on iis subject, I began to question people as to whether iey believed there would be a problem in this respect. 'he general concensus of opinion was that there 'ould not be much of a problem. Some who had een drafted in the last war contended that no diffiulties had been encountered by them upon returning) civilian life. It was admitted that their stay in amp in the last war was a relatively short period of me as compared with this war. Further, from the iformation I could obtain, it appears that the men 1 C.P.S. camps and army service do not seem to be larmed about making a living in the post war era. 'heir chief worry is to come back home. They seem) have enough faith in their own initiative. The men 1 army service may to a certain extent be relying on ie help of the government will give them.

To find out for myself, whether this issue constiutes a problem, I analyzed the situation in our hurch. Twenty-three young men have been drafted 'hich belong to our church; seventeen of these are hurch members. Eight of these twenty-three are 1 C.P.S. camps and fifteen in non-combatant or egular service. If the war ended tomorrow and all ie boys came home, five would quite probably go ack to the farm from which they came. Their place 'ould be open for them. Four out of the twentyiree would probably continue their education in ollege. One would either teach or go to seminary. 'he remaining thirteen would be looking for jobs. s far as I was able to determine, none of these had een guaranteed a position after they came back. One ould have his job back if he returned within the perod of one year. This year has more than elapsed. 'nder present circumstances it would be quite easy) find employment but if times change, as they are ound to do, what will this 57 per cent do? It might be added that all of these thirteen except one, are in some type of army service. They would upon release from the army receive a mustering out pay amounting probably from $300 to $700. Furthermore, as war veterans they would receive priority ratings when looking for work. But the important question is what can the church do? That they already have drifted somewhat from the church is indicated by the fact that they entered military service. Can we win them back?

It is encouraging to note that the majority of men in C.P.S.camps are from farms to which they can go back. There will be discrimination against C.O.'s after the war. Two Oklahoma counties are or were attempting to ban all C.O.'s from having residence in those counties. Another ray of hope comes from the angle that some men in C.P.S. will continue in the detached service in which they are now engaged.

Then there is another matter to take into consideration. Most of the young men when drafted were single and were attached to the parental home. But in the meantime they have married, their wives are probably working in a nearby town. When the war is over, they'll come back, but there will be no place for them. It is here where the great need for rehabilitation comes in. But along this same line we must remember the greatest desire many of the men have is to come back to live in their home community. There is no place like their home town. Will they be willing to pioneer and establish a new colony?

But to come back to the question again as to what the churches can do for these men. The first Mennonite Church of Beatrice, Nebraska, has probably taken the most far-reaching and concrete action. At their last annual meeting the members of this church passed a resolution which provided for the setting up of a reserve fund for C.P.S. men to be given them upon their return at the rate of $25.00 per month spent in such service beginning January 1, 1944, plus $10.00 per month prior to January 1, 1944. This is a step in the right direction, but how many churches can afford to make such provisions? Many churches are struggling to keep up the C.P.S. quotas. In our church we passed a resolution to establish a reserve fund for C.P.S. dependents. Up to date no case has come up for which aid is needed. If at the end of the war there is a surplus in this fund it might be used for aiding returning men. Some of the men in C.P.S. camps have received a call and new zeal to serve Jesus Christ and their fellow men in full-time service. They would like to go to school for training. Would it be possible for the church to establish scholarship funds so that these men could go to college?

Then also the church should give complete moral, financial, and spiritual support to the M.C.C. This organization is much better qualified to deal with the problem than the church. In the past it has proved by its unselfish and efficient manner that it can give valuable aid in the time of crises.

We have thus far been considering how the church can help the men in a physical way to make a living, but Jesus reaffirmed the Mosaic law when He stated "Man shall not live by bread alone." Will the returning men not also long for the need which is greater than bread? After visiting several of the C.P.S. camps, Mrs. Willis Rich writes in an issue of The Mennonite, "These boys are not worried about the bareness of their barracks, or about curtains or no curtains; they are concerned about us at home in the churches. They don't want curtains, they want understanding; they want to know that the church at home is wholeheartedly back of them. They feel it and know it if there is lukewarmness or indifference or opposition. And our boys don't want pity. They want to feel a spirit of unity with us." From this article we detect how much value and emphasis the boys in camp are placing on moral and spiritual support. Are we prepared to give this to them both now and when they come home? They will understand why the churches can not aid them in a material way, but they will never understand if the churches will not undergird them in a moral and spiritual sense.

I was told the following incident which occurred shortly after the last war. Three Mennonite men returned to their home church. Shortly thereafter they became connected with a lodge. They were rebuked for this by the ones in authority in the church. Then these returned men testified that they had only joined because the church had failed in supplying the fellowship and sympathetic understanding they had desired. In other words the church had not made them feel at home. A challenge lies in this area!

Then also the question arises, what about those who failed to go to the peace camps. May God grant us much wisdom, understanding, and sympathy to deal with them in a similar spirit He deals with offenders. There was a time when I would have unhesitatingly been in favor of expelling them from church membership for the sake of the church. Might we not, however, by such an action do more harm than good? If the way of love, peace, and goodwill is superior to hate and force it will also operate in this case. Further it might be well to take notice of how Christ dealt with the woman taken in adultery when He said, "Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more." We, however, should not forget the emphasis on "sin no more." Could it be possible that the church shows some responsibility for the fact that all our young men have not gone to C.P.S. camps? On the question about disciplinary action by the church towards those members who have entered the armed forces, one boy in C.P.S. writes "In many cases the Mennonite church is at fault for these men going into the armed services, and rather than disciplining them it would be wiser to teach them more clearly the principle of non-resistance. By consistently supporting and helping to make the present program overwhelmingly successful we can possibly disturb the conscience of these men more than any other disciplinary action ever could take."

We have a very brief and incomplete picture of the problem confronting us. May God help us to solve it!

MEDITATION

By Walter A. Gering

"What so ever ye do, do it heartily as to the Lord and not unto men." Col. 3:23

The apostle here strikes the keynote of all Christian living: pleasing God and living for Him. Our Lord manifested that spirit in His own earthly ministry for from His lips come the words: "I do always those things that are pleasing unto Him." "Not my will but Thine be done." As Paul writes in Romans that God is no respecter of persons so also was Christ in His ministry. He had respect unto the Father and only unto Him. In like manner we read concerning Paul that he sought not to please men.

So too he admonishes us to live with our eyes constantly upon the Lord, seeking His divine approval and favour. "Let the world deride or pity—I will glory in Thy name." After all, why should we be concerned about the praises of man. They are but fickle as the crowd itself and quickly pass away. But the favour of God abideth forever and brings eternal grace. Notice how the apostle applies this to all life. Nothing is excluded, all is to be brought under the watchful eye of the Lord, for His divine approval. Blessed is the man who can do all things as unto the Lord and not unto man.

"Lord, we confess that too often we have sought the approval of our fellow man counting it of greater value than thine own. Forgive, we pray, our transgression and give grace that we may seek only thy word of approval."

Amen

Combating Juvenile Delinquency

Juvenile delinquency is a matter which has assumed serious proportions. Numerous commissions are investigating and many remedies are being advanced. After all available evidence is in a surprising number of authorities come to the conclusion voiced by the Catholic Bishop of Rochester, N. Y., who said in his New Year's letter: "We cannot see that the solution of juvenile delinquency lies in the development of extensive recreation plans—away from home. We feel that the recreation of family life and the sanctity of the home constitute our main hope for the development of upright citizens." A similar emphasis was given in a recent radio broadcast by the chief F.B.I. agent at Des Moines, Iowa. Judges on the bench in referring to the problem, frequently refer to "delinquent parents" as at least partially responsible for the situation.

Many of the remedies now being tried have a place

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

THE MINISTER'S WIFE

The Roman Catholic Church insists on a celebate clergy. The Eastern Orthodox or Greek Catholic, the Jewish, and all Protestant religious bodies uphold the practice of a married clergy. While it is not required, practically every Protestant Clergyman is married sometime during his life. The ministers as a class are known as professional men and most of them receive some kind of special training for their work.

The Minister's Partner

The minister's wife is not considered in a professional class with her husband, receives no special training, and no separate allowance for her work, but she shares more fully the work of her husband than does the wife of the doctor, the lawyer, the teacher, the engineer or any other professional man. Wives determine the success and failure of more ministers than most people ever know.

Her Work

Of course, the minister's family must be a model in the community; the children dare not do many things other children do because they are the minister's children. The Mrs. Reverend must be a good mother, a good housekeeper, a pleasant and willing hostess, and as active a church worker as any women in the congregation. If she is not all these, and more, she will surely be the constant target for the congregational gossip troops; if she is all of these she may still expect to be the frequent center of conversations in her absence.

A Critic and a Scout

But more important than this, the wife of the minister is his critic, his co-laborer and his scout to discover public sentiment or reaction to the latest sermon or a local controversial issue. Many sermons are toned down and others keyed up on the basis of suggestions by the minister's wife. Many areas of opportunity for the minister are discovered and areas of difficulty avoided as a result of keen observations and casual remarks by the minister's wife.

According to the Scriptures women are not to preach in public meetings and this custom is observed, but ministers wives are nevertheless glorifying God and preaching effective sermons in their own quiet and indirect way by being faithful co-laborers of their husbands.

Oklahoma Church Leaders' Conference a Blessing

By H. N. Harder, Secretary

In regards to attendance this might be said. Since the conference was arranged especially for ministers, their wives, and the Sunday School Superintendents, our registration revealed the following:

1. There were twelve Oklahoma Churches represented and three outside of the state.
2. There were ten ministers present and eight ministers' wives.
3. Ten Sunday School superintendents and two missionaries.

The special feature of this conference was the seminar groups, of which there were three, meeting four times each. Just what they meant for the different people we are not able to bring here, but suffice it to quote a few of them:

"A time of renewed fellowship, in the Lord, with like believers; a giving and receiving of ideas to solve problems. Above all the inspiration to serve the Lord more faithfully—to burn out, not to rust out, for Him. It was, indeed, one of those mountain top experiences. Am looking forward to next year's services already."—Mrs. L. W. J.

"The minister's discussion group did a fine thing. It was a happy thought to arrange for it. Among other things, it did these three:

1. We compared our experiences and ideas. That is always helpful and stimulating.
2. We were corrected in some of our views and methods. Mistakes occur in every minister's work, and occasions like these help to point them out to him if he is really willing and eager to learn and do better.
3. We learned. It is surprising how much is and can be done that one has never thought about in his own work." Rev. R. S.

"The meeting with the minister's wives was a blessing to me:

1. Because we all had the same interest and could share and discuss with mutual understanding.
2. It helped me to realize to a larger extent the important responsibility we have.
3. I came home with a new determination to be more faithful than ever." Mrs. J.W.B.

"The minister's Seminars proved to be very profitable in that papers and discussions were to the point, scriptural, and dealt with present day needs and problems. A spirit of love and fellowship prevailed."
Rev. H. P. F.

LENT

To some people Lent is a meatless season and a time of physical self-denial—a kill-joy sort of thing that must be endured for the sake of ecclesiastical convention. To us it should mean more than an outer demonstration. Lent should affect our inner spirit, our very lives. It is a time when we ought to think

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Rev. Gerhard Friesen, Newton, Kansas

April 1—"If we live by the Spirit, by the Spirit let us also walk." Gal. 5:25.

The Galatians claimed to have received Christ. So if the fountain of their life was Christ, their daily life ought to be proof of it. Such was the experience and teaching of Paul. This teaching holds good today. When we as Christians fail to reflect the spirit of Christ in our daily life, we discredit Him and His church before the world. Not only that, but we also hinder the coming of His kingdom, for which He taught us to pray. May I to-day and every day be a willing instrument of His Spirit.

APRIL 2—"I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go unto the house of the Lord." Psalm 122:1

For the writer of this Psalm it was a delight to go to the house of God. To be in God's presence was for him a deeply felt need. He was waiting for the opportunity and rejoiced when others encourged him to satisfy this need. Do I realize the need of God's presence in my life as keenly? Do I invite others to go to the house of God, and am I looking forward to the opportunity to worship together with others with such a joy? May I and others with me to-day find joy and blessing in His presence.

APRIL 3—"Walk before Me and be thou perfect." Gen.17:1

God has a purpose for every one of His children and He sets a high standard for them. This perfection is according to the measure of our faith, and for this faith He furnishes the light and the strength. Abraham was to walk before Him. That is the key. To walk before God we must know Him and be in spiritual contact with Him. May I this day and throughout this week use His spiritual resources to truly walk before Him in all that I think, say, or do.

APRIL 4—"For whosoever would save his life shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the Gospel's shall save it." Mark 8:35.

Am I trying to save my life, i.e., protect my economic and material advantages and my social standing by compromising my Christian convictions and my loyalty to the Master in these disturbed times? According to Him, who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, the only way to save what is truly life is to invest all that we have and are in His program—seek ye first His kingdom. May this be my choice today and every day.

APRIL 5—"In all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. Rom. 8:37

Conquerors, victors, victory— quite popular words in the political life of today. But Paul thinks of a different realm. Light and darkness are in a death struggle both in me and in the life about me. But the Christian is in Christ and Christ in him, and therefore he is more than conqueror in all that may beset his life, no not he, but Christ in and through him. Am I such a Christian?

APRIL 6—For their sake I sanctify myself, that they themselves also may be sanctified in truth. John 17:19.

Jesus sanctified or consecrated Himself fully for the work of salvation. For others, for you, and for me He did it, that we too might have that life and that devotion. He knew that this was the only way in which he could touch the hearts of those He had come to save, and move them to turn from sin to the forgiving grace, accept Him, and he in turn sanctified, consecrated, to carry this good news to the ends of the earth. Have I accepted this sanctification in truth? Am I transmitting this new life to others?

APRIL 7—Though He was a Son, yet learned obedience by the things which he suffered. Heb. 5:8.

Obedience is better than sacrifice. In fact obedience is the true sacrifice. It is the heart and will offered to Him who has a right to command its allegiance. Christ carried out God's plan of redemption by the way of the cross. He was obedient. The Old Testament sacrifice was a shadow of the real offer, Christ Himself. The only sacrifice He asks of me is my complete obedience. Have I brought this sacrifice.

APRIL 8—And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself. John 12:32.

What a drawing that is—the love of God nailed to the cross for us, praying for forgiveness for those who put Him there. He could have asked for twelve legions of angels to destroy His enemies, but He rather chose the way of suffering, of lifting, the way of love. Love lifts, enables, brings back to a glow the divine spark that is smothered and destroyed by the way of selfishness and hate. May this lifted love of God draw me evermore into His life-giving radiance and His likeness.

RELIEF NOTES

—M.C.C. Women's Relief Training Unit No.2

Training Unit No. 1 has been in operation in connection with the C.P.S. Relief Training Unit at Ypsilanti, Michigan, State Hospital since September 1, 1943. It is felt that these units should be limited to about fifteen members. Prospects now are that this capacity will soon be reached at Ypsilanti. Others are applying for temporary attachment to these units. It is therefore planned at an early date to set up Unit No. 2 in connection with the C.P.S. Relief Training Group at the State Hospital, Howard, Rhode Island. Prospective workers interested in the advantages of this training and the circumstances connected therewith should register this interest with C. L. Graber, Akron, Pennsylvania. Others who may be interested in a summer's employment with the advantages from relief training courses in mind can also get further information by writing to the attention of Director of Hospital Units, J. N. Byler, Akron, Pennsylvania. —O. O. M.

—Farewell services for Richard Weaver and Orie Gingerich, most recently appointed C.P.S. men for Puerto Rico, were held at the Akron Office, March 2.

This Subject Called Time

By Arnold Reimer

ime as a subject is generally given very little ight. We ask "What time is it?" or "It's time to this or that" or something similar, but as a sub- we give very little thought to time.

hat is time? Where does it originate? Where s it go? What shall be done with time?

aking up the first point "what is time" we find ng other things that the dictionary says time is eriod of duration, an age, an era, a season, an ortunity, the present life, etc. We cannot see, , feel, taste or smell time; yet we know it is there use we can see and feel the effects of it. When rson is twenty-five years old he knows that time elapsed, for certain changes have taken place e his infancy. A person who reaches the age of nty-five years finds that more time has elapsed. n life is over and death comes, we know that time passed—the time of life is then gone. Each of the watch means time is passing. Right now rtain amount of time has elapsed since you be- reading this article.

here does time originate? Apparently no one ws. Where does it go? Also, apparently no one ws. Someone has said that time passes into etern- and that is probably as good an answer as can ound. We do know that when time is gone it r returns. The present time—today—is gone for- when tomorrow comes. One of the pacifist lead- made the remark, "We have but one life to live on earth; we are living that life now."

time is such a vital subject, what shall we do it? Each person must deal with time. There no exceptions. Time is either well-spent or it ot well-spent. David Livingstone, for instance, t a great part of his life serving God and humanity ringing the gospel of Christ to Africa. His time certainly well-spent. Nero, on the other hand, great persecutor of the early Christians, certainly have lived an exciting and eventful life. We, urse, consider his time of life very poorly spent. are told that Nero sweat drops of blood on his h-bed. If this is true, then he himself must have zed how badly he had dealt with his time of me of the leading atheists of the last few hundred s spent the greater part of their lives trying to e that there was no God, only to find when their of life was gone that all their arguments had not God out of existence after all, and they admitted heir own death-beds that there was both a God and a hell—but their time of life was over. They had to realize that their time had been ill spent.

How many people postpone accepting Christ—often till the time of life is past—and then it is too late.

To a CO's Mother

Where is the star in your window,
Blue on a field of white?
Where is your son in the service?
Your loved one tonight?

Does he wear a gold bar on his shoulder?
Did he get a new stripe on his sleeve?
Did he tell of a North African battle,
The last time he was home on a leave?

Does he have a uniform of khaki,
Or the blue of a dauntless Marine?
Is he stationed at Camp Barkley, Texas,
Or training near gay New Orleans?

Has he shot down any Jap Zeroes,
A fortress his home in the sky?
Has he waded hip-deep in the swampland,
Daring to do or to die?

The mother stands there in silence
And silently too tries to pray;
She sees a star in the window,
Shining now at the close of the day.

A star in the window—in the sky!
Gleaming in the heaven of blue;
The home of a boy given to service,
And a work he feels he can do.

There are no bars on his shoulder,
No new stripes on his sleeve;
No trim uniform of khaki—
Blue denim for work on your knees.

The battles he fights are for patience,
The fox holes he digs are for trees;
The hammer in his hand is for building;
No bayonets for plain men like these.

A star in the night in the sky
A god in the heaven of blue
Look out, not in through the window;
Be strong, be brave, be true.

How many people spend all their time in getting rich, in seeking fame or power or popularity, or in the mad search for temporary pleasures—later to find that it was all in vain; they had not found what their innermost being desired.

Each one of us must deal with time personally. We may not have a satisfactory explanation of what time is, where it comes from nor where it goes, but we do know that time concerns each one of us. How sh we spend our time? Each one mast find the answ for himself. We have but one life to live on th earth, and that life is being lived now. Time is pas ing now. May each one of us ask himself, "Wh am I doing with my time?" Let us remember th we shall have to give an account to God for o answer.

Christian Kindness in Civilian Public Service

Eber Dourte, C.P.S. No. 107, Three Rivers. Calif.

The principles of Christian kindness and helpfulness are an integral part of Christianity. The life of Christ is a beautiful example of one who was concerned about the welfare of his fellowmen. His teachings also, reflect ideals of love and consideration. Our duty toward our neighbor is pointedly taught in the story of the Good Samaritan. "In as much as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," teaches us that in helping our fellowmen we are serving Christ. Paul also, clearly taught this spirit of Christ, for he wrote to the Galatians, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

The Mennonites and related church groups caught this spirit of concern for their fellowmen in their interpretation of Christian doctrine. Mennonites have been characterized and known for a spirit of brotherliness. Throughout their history outside groups have commented on this distinctive practice which contributes to more wholesome community living.

Opportunities to practice Christian helpfulness are numerous. In Civilian Public Service Camps many campers have realized their obligations as followe of Christ and have helped those who have met wi unfortunate circumstances.

Several incidents have taken place in our can which I would like to relate. The first experience any significance took place when our present can was still situated near Galax, Virginia. Our can was located in a mountainous area in which the nativ were quite isolated and removed from towns a cities. They were also completely ignorant of t purpose and program of C.P.S. After the camp h been located in this community for about fo months, one of our neighbors lost his only cow. I was poor—too poor to buy another cow, yet need one very badly. His problem was brought to t attention of the campers by a friend of the cam Immediately the campers organized a group to ra funds to buy a cow for the unfortunate man. T boys responded and enough money was raised to pr vide the greater part necessary to buy the cow.

This incident created a profound respect for t campers in the community in which they were worki and it also made the boys feel happy to have t privilege of helping a neighbor and to put into pra tice the principles of Christian helpfulness, which so necessary in winning others to Christ.

Mutual aid as a practice also works within t group as well as helping someone outside the grou Shortly after the moving of our camp to Californ we had the privilege of helping one of our fell campers who met with an unfortunate experien One of our group had to undergo an operation appendicitis. Members of the camp had been talki about organizing a benevolent association to aid defraying the expenses of such emergencies but h not when this took place. The organization was c ried out and started to function. Since that time t benevolent fund has been fully organized. Dues paid monthly and members receive funds to pay penses of emergency illnesses. The sick bene amount to three-fourths the total expense up to c hundred dollars.

A modern C.P.S. version of the Good Samarit took place one Saturday night at eleven o'clock. telephone call was received asking for help to resc a vacationer who was hiking in the mountains a had become quite ill. The hiker was with a party young folks who were hiking into the back-mount country to one of the highest peaks in the immedi park region. The young mountain-climber had beco ll as the party got up to the higher elevations. He ad collapsed and had become unconscious. Members f his party kept him warm until the rescue party f four from the camp arrived. Our campers had ade the trip up to the hikers on horseback, having otten the horses from the government corrals in the ark. Fortunately the moon was quite bright which ade traveling on the trail quite a lot easier.

The C.P.S. men were finally able to reach the hiker nd placing him on a stretcher carried him about ve miles on rough mountain trails in one and one-alf hours. The trip had been hard and one of the ampers fell, and in trying to keep the stretcher from lling injured his arm on the rocks and gravel. Here gain, the boys were glad for the opportunity to ren-r a service of helpfulness.

The last incident I wish to relate took place recently when one of the government foremen had his foot crushed by a large rock. One of our campers took him home which was about twenty miles from the place of the accident. Several other boys from camp went to his home and helped him perform some chores and jobs that needed attention. The jobs included hauling hay, milking cows, barn chores, cooking and washing dishes. The government man appreciated the fine spirit of the boys and told them that if they were not careful, and kept on being as kind as they had been, he too might become a C. O.

We have discovered that the practice of Christian helpfulness has helped us to win the respect of the community in which our camp is located, and also helps our camp family to live and work together better.

YOUTH BUILDING CHRISTIAN HOMES

No. 4 of Series on Youth Problems

See booklet, Youth Building Christian Homes by John Mumaw, published by the Herald Press, Scottdale,

The story of Ruth and her loyalty may be told as rt of this program. Also Edgar A. Guest's poem: "It kes a heap o' living to make a house a home" may used.

"Can two walk together, except they be agreed?"

A man is moulded into the likeness of the lives that me nearest him. The nearer people are to each er, and the more they think of each other, th greater ll be their influence over each other. It is often said at the friendship between a young man and a young man is one of the most ennobling influences that ne into the lives of a young person. This friendship, ich often leads to courtship, is one of the treasures life, indeed to be coveted.—Since it is one of the st far-reaching and meaningful of life's relationships, is well worth asking God's leading and His guidance it.

ggested Topics for Short Talks:

Love at first sight. Gen. 14:61-87.
Solomon's wicked relationships. I Kings 11:1-4.
Righteous living, an asset. Psalms 34:11-16.
Love should abound. I Thess. 3:12, 13.
True love is born of God. I John 4:7-10.

Discussion:

Is it important that young people should consider ether they have common interests when they go a- rting?

Is it essential that the other party be a Christian? s that mean church membership?

Is the home which the other comes from to be given consideration?

Is willingness to serve necessary for a happy home ?

Christian home is a haven of rest in a restless ld. Here one finds sweet companionship and under- ding. Here is good-will one for another, the will- ess "to do" for the other. A Christian home is ferent." Good times are shared, burdens are eased, k is made a means of comradeship. The great chap- on Love, I Cor. 13, finds expression in the Christian e.

the Christian home it is well to heed the sugges- s made in the following short article:

"Let Us Take Time"

t us take time for the good-bye kiss. We shall go to the day's work with a sweeter spirit for it.

Let us take time for the evening prayer. Our sleep will be more restful if we have claimed the guardianship of God.

Let us take time to speak kind words to those we love. By and by, when they can no longer hear us, our kindness will seem more valuable than our best wisdom.

Let us take time to read the Bible. Its treasures shall last when we have ceased to care for the war or politics, the rise and fall of stocks or the petty happenings of the day.

Let us take time to be pleasant. The small courtesies, which we often omit because they are small, will some day look larger to us than the wealth which we covet or the fame for which we struggled.

Let us take time to get acquainted with our families. The wealth you are accumulating, burdened father, may be a doubtful blessing to the son who is a stranger to you. Your beautifully kept house, busy mother, can never be a home to the daughter whom you have no time to caress.

Let us take time to get acquainted with Christ. The hour is coming swiftly for us all when one touch of His hand in the darkness will mean more than all that is written in the day book and ledger or in the records of our little social world.

Since we must all take time to die, why should we not take time to live—to live in the larger sense of a life begun here for eternity? —Christian Advocate

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT

THE EMPTY TOMB—A VICTORY SIGN

Suggested worship center: Picture of the women looking into the empty tomb or of Jesus appearing to Mary Magdalene. Bouquet of flowers.

Hymns: MENNONITE HYMNARY No. 452 and read in unison No. 453.

Choruses: no. 71 and 15 in SONGS AND CHORUSES FOR FISHERS OF MEN by Mary Clarke.

Bible verses to be read by Juniors: John 11:25; II Corinthians 5:15; I Corinthians 15:4; Romans 14:9.

Poem to be given by Junior who is holding an Easter lily plant which has several blossoms:

"They bring to our hearts a message, these lilies so sweet and fair;
They speak of immortal glory, a glory all may share.
They bring to our hearts a message; O list to the earth's dark mold

They spring into wondrous beauty of petal, and heart of gold.
They bring to our hearts a message; O list to the tender tone—
The love that bestows the lily will never forsake its own.
O beautiful Easter lilies, a type of the pure and blest;
As fair as the souls immortal that enter eternal rest."

Leader: Easter is a beginning; not an end. Easter brings life; Easter brings hope; Easter brings victory; Easter brings rejoicing.

Poem to be given by a Junior or Juniors:

"Sing aloud the glorious tidings—
'Christ is risen today!'
Far and wide the echoes answer,
'Death has lost its sway.'
Sing aloud the Easter message;
Live the message, too!
By His grace let Easter's triumph
Show itself in you.
Let His power and wondrous glory
Fill your heart today;
Live an Easter life at Easter—
Live an Easter life alway."

Talk by a Junior: Easter is a birthday, too; Christ's birth into a spiritual life too wonderful for us to understand completely.

Coming in the spring of the year it seems that nature celebrates with us as she, too, is decked in all her vernal glory.

Leader: Easter is the joy feast of the church. Christ is risen and His resurrection is the pledge of our immortality (Proof that we shall live again). We know that our Redeemer lives and as He lives we shall live also.

Prayer by one of the Juniors:

"I say this happy prayer, dear God,
For joy and Easter-time,
For birds that sing
And earth so fair,
For springtime beauty everywhere!
And I know why—for Jesus lives!
In all this world today
It's waking time'
And glad hearts say,
'We thank Thee, God, for Easter Day!"

Object lesson: (Leader has an egg, a brown seed, a chrysalis or cocoon and a bulb.) Most of us like to hide and hunt Easter eggs. But did we ever stop to think how an egg is in any way connected with the celebration of Easter? When we do, we find that the egg is very appropriate. An egg is a symbol of life. We soon find that out, if a hen sits on the egg for twenty-one days. So the egg is, in a sense, a living thing.

This bulb looks dead, too, but if one plants it in the ground and the rain and the sunshine can get to it it soon shows life.

"In this brown seed, so dry and hard,
I see a flower in my door yard.
You, Chrysalis, in winding sheet
Are butterfly all dainty sweet,
All life is warmed by spring's sweet breath,
And Christ our Lord has conquered death."

Talk by a Junior: The Christian religion is the only religion which has a living Saviour. In most cases the other religions had good leaders but they died as all men do. Truly the empty tomb is a sign of victory!

Prayer to be read in unison from the blackboard:

"O God, you have made so many lovely things,
Violets and daffodils and butterflies' wings;
In this month of April
When all things are new,
Help us to do some lovely thing, too. Amen."

The End of the Age

Today it is August the first, Sunday. Hindu India has had a day about which it can be said, "There has been none like it before." For several years the Hindus have told each other and us this "Kulyug" (black age of intrigue and dishonesty and fraud) would soon come to an end and "Sutyug" (the age of truth and light) would start. Finally, about a year ago, the last of July was fixed as the day o the great occurrence. Now the last few months i was settled that Sunday, the first of August, would be the great day. It would be a day of cataclysm. Terrible events would take place which would kil people. Just yesterday a man told me that by twelve noon today no one would be able to take breath anc people would die in their houses of suffocation Then the best people would be re-incarnated anc enter the new age on August second. In many villages great preparations were made. Large offering were gathered; especially coconuts, which were t be broken and burned at twelve noon; and all peopl should call on "Bhagwan" (a name for "the grea god"), and maybe he would be appeased and no kill all people.

As far as we know, very few Christians have bee perturbed about it all. A few came and wanted t take their children out of school and boarding. Bu when we called their attention to trust and confidenc in Christ, they left their children in school. Th non-Christians took their children home, except on boy who was brave enough to stay. Some non Christians, who are not so easily stampeded, hav suggested that the whole affair has been a ruse c the Brahmins in order to reclaim at least part c their waning authority. I don't know whether thi is true or not. But at any rate a mind with n anchorage in Christ can easily be led into all kinc of extremes. Our text in this morning's sermon wa Hebrews 13:8 and James 1:17.

The May Bill

A concern facing peace-loving Christians at the pres ent time is the matter of post-war or peace-time cor scription. Legislation before the U.S. Congress at th present time, known as the May Bill, calls for such program. The May Bill stipulates one year of militai training for all young men between seventeen and twei ty-one years of age. The bill, at the time of this wri ing, contains no provision for conscientious objectors. behooves Christians everywhere to consider this concei prayerfully.

The Mennonites of Germany

By Harold S. Bender

If we include within the borders of Germany he annexed territories conquered by German armed orces during the present war, namely, Alsace Lor-aine, Western Poland, and the free state of Danzig, ll of the German speaking Mennonites of Europe xcept the very small group in Switzerland and the arger group in Russia, are now (for the time being) ncluded under one political sovereignty. Even before he conquest of these new territories a general organi-ation including all the Mennonites of Germany xcept a few congregations in the south, had ben set p in the year 1936 under the name, "Vereinigung der Mennoniten im Deutschen Reich." Before 1935 there ad been a similar organization founded in 1888, which ncluded however only a shall portion of the Menn-nites within German borders.

The total present membership of Mennonite hurches within this enlarged German territory is robably about 15,000, and the total population about 2,000, including unbaptized children and adherents. he distribution of total population by geographical istricts was as follows in 1925:

russia (Including Berlin, Emden, Crefeld etc.)		14,200
avaria (Including the Palatinate)		3,200
lsace Lorraine		2,000
aden		1,300
esse		500
urttemberg		300
amburg		200
iscellaneous		300
		22,000
otal North German		15,000
orthwest German City Congregations	2,000
.E. German (East Prussian) Cong.	12,200
attered Congregations in Poland	800
otal South German		7,000

is evident from this statistical report that there e three distinct geographical blocks of Mennonites Germany. There are also historically three distinct ocks of Mennonite settlement. Let us take a look each of these three groups of Mennonites in Ger-any.

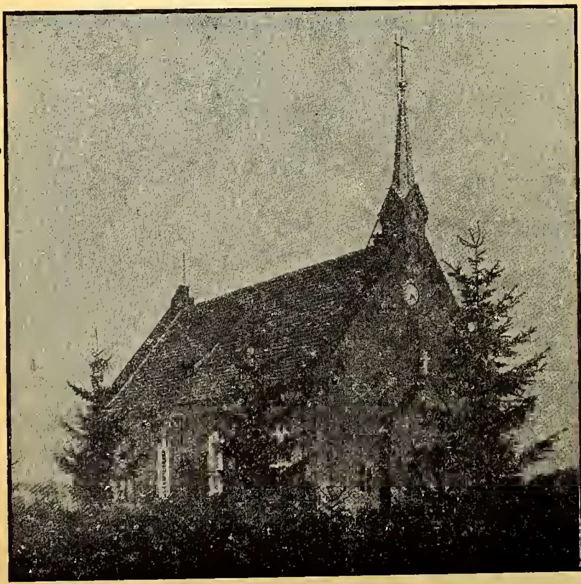
The oldest and largest of these blocks is that lo-ted in Northeastern Germany (Eastern Prussia) the valley of the Vistula River near Danzig. Only e small city church of Emden in Northwest Ger-any, supposedly founded in 1530, is older. The ttlements here which go back to about the year 1545, ere originally built up largely by refugee Mennonites om Holland. Extensive migrations to South Russia the years 1788 to 1830 established large colonies the latter country, from which in turn large num-rs migrated to the western prairie regions of the nited States and Canada in the years 1873 to 1880. st Prussian Mennonitism, as represented today the solid block of over 12,000 souls in the neigh-rhood of Danzig, is the mother therefore of large tlements of Mennonites in other parts of the world. Apart from the city churches of Danzig and Elbing, this group is predominantly rural with a splendid record of agricultural achievement in the economy of this region.

The second oldest block of Mennonites in Germany is composed of the city congregations in northwest Germany. Oldest of these is Emden founded in 1530, with neighboring Leer and Norden, while the city churches of Hamburg and Crefeld were established after the year 1600. Other smaller congregations in this area, some of long standing, died out during the past century. The Berlin church is of recent origin, having been founded in 1886 from members coming largely from the East Prussian congregations. The total population of all these churches is small, amount to only 1,500 souls. This group is exclusively urban in character, and largely upper class. In Crefeld and Hamburg, Emden and Gronau, Mennonites are active as merchants and manufacturers.

The third block of Mennonites in Germany are those of Swiss origin who settled in Alsace, the Palatinate, and Baden in the 17th and 18th centuries, from 1630 to 1750. Small and scattered settlements were established from this larger block in Wurttemberg and Bavaria after 1800. The total membership of these scattered churches is about 5,000 with 7,000 souls. The entire group is almost exclusively rural in character, even though a few of the congregations have meeting houses in cities such as Munich, Regensburg, Heidelberg, and Ludwigshafen. They have maintained for two centuries the reputation of being the best farmers in South Germany.

The three blocks of German Mennonites are distinct in origin, tradition, and spirit. Northwest and Northeast German Mennonite groups both come from original Dutch Mennonite stock have Dutch family names such as Klassen, Friesen, Epp, Penner, etc., and until the middle of the last century used the Dutch language and maintained connections with Dutch Mennonitism. The South German group is exclusively of Swiss origin, has Swiss family names such as Landis, Lehman, Fellman, Krehbiel, Kauffman, etc., and has retained the marks of its Swiss origin. So far as church organization and work is concerned, the South German group has been more active in some ways than the North German. The congregations west of the Rhine in the Palatinate and Hesse have had regular annual conferences since 1824. The congregations in Baden, Wurttenberg, and Bavaria have had a separate organization of their own known as the "Verband" for over a hundred years. The South German Conference, including most of the congregations in both groups, plus some of the churches in Alsace, was organized in 1886. The annexation of Alsace-Lorraine by France in 1918, the churches there maintained a separate conference. North German congregations by contrast had no general church organization or conference until 1929 when the Prussian (East German) Mennonite Conference was organized. The city churches of Northwest Germany never had an organization except insofar as they were a part of the all-Mennonite German organization. Part of the East Prussian churches however had occasional conferences through the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

In matters of theology the South and Northeast German groups remained conservative in every respect, whereas the Northwest German city churches, particularly those of Emden and Crefeld came under the influence of Dutch Mennonite liberalism and for several generations have followed the modernistic theological emphasis. The Hamburg and Berlin churches have followed a more conservative course. Northwest German city churches early adopted the policy of trained and salaried pastors. This plan was followed in the churches of the Palatinate in the latter half of the nineteenth century, but is unknown elsewhere in Germany to the present day except for the churches of Danzig and Elbing in East Prussia. In respect to historic Mennonitism, both the South German and Northeast German groups have remained truer to their Mennonite heritage than the churches of Northwest Germany. Even the two groups, however, with all the German Mennonites have in the course of the last two generations surrendered one of the most precious things in their heritage, namely, the faith and practice of non-resistance and peace. The "Vereinigung" in its founding meeting in 1936, officially declared that it was not nonresistant. The last to hold out were the churches of the "Verbaand" where there still is a slight lingering undertone of interest in this ancient principle of the church. They also have retained something of the emphasis upon unworldliness which is as least a remnant of the earlier practice of nonconformity to the world. This group also has had more of a sense of history. From it have gone forth the two great historians of German Mennonitism, namely Christian Neff, and Christian Hege, publishers of the Mennonite Lexicon, founders of the Mennonite Historical Society, and publishers of much historical material. The South Germans as a whole have resisted the Nazi ideology and influence more staunchly than the North Germans.



Meetinghouse of the Mennonite Church at Montau, Germany

In type of piety the South German Mennonites with their warmer and more pietistic spirit have also been somewhat distinct from the other two groups. German pietism of the 18th century found a welcome among the Mennonites of the Palatinate more than in any other place in Germany. In more recent times, however, even the Mennonites of East Germany have been much influenced by this spirit. The Northwest city churches have gone in the opposite direction, after a temporary turn in the direction of pietism in the earlier days. The missionary interest has been fairly strong both in the region of Danzig and in South Germany. The first Mennonite Missionary Society ever to have been formed was organized in Northeast Germany in the year 1817, even before any Mennonite Mission existed. Generous support has come from this district and also from the South German churches in recent years for the Dutch Mennonite Mission in the Dutch East Indies.

From the South German Mennonites also, particularly from Christian Neff, came the impulse for the convening of the three Mennonite World Conferences, held respectively in Zurich in 1525, in Danzig in 1930, and in Amsterdam in 1936. The outstanding Mennonite leader of Germany in the last generation has been without doubt Dr. Christian Neff, who for over 50 years was pastor of the village congregation at Weierhof in the Palatinate, for many years president of the South German Mennonite Conference, associate editor of the Mennonitische Blatter, historian and writer, and finally patriarch and father, widely beloved and a warm supporter of all which is good among all the Mennonites of Germany.

The future of German Mennonitism is, to say the least, uncertain. In the period after the first World War there were stirrings, both among the younger generations and the older ministers, toward a warmer, more aggressive, and more Mennonite church life. There were even signs of a revival of interest in the principle of non-resistance. Unfortunately, some Mennonites, particularly in Northeast Germany, were caught by the propaganda of the Nazis and became active members of the Nazi party, and the new militaristic emphasis overwhelmed the beginning revival. Today, caught in the cross-current of Mennonite and Nazi ideological conflict, partially detached from their historic heritage and background, confused between liberal and conservative theology, and lacking somewhat in leadership, German Mennonitism hesitates. It is difficult to forecast what future developments will be. One encouraging note is the fact that in recent years through occasional visits of American Mennonites to Germany, and cooperation in relief work, a warmer interest and sense of kinship has developed across the sea. Possibly, amid the chaos and uncertainty of the post war Europe, American Mennonites can in various ways lend a brotherly hand to their brethren in Germany and help them strengthen their church life and their ser-in the kingdom of God. Perhaps even in our it may be possible for the German Mennonites ılly recover the faith of their fathers and once ı not only possess but propagate the great heri- that Mennonitism has possessed from the days ıe reformation.

dcation, Publication, Missions and Charities

rangely, the German Mennonites have established ermanent general institutional work of any kind ıghout their history. An attempt was made to lish a Mennonite school and theological seminary e Palatinate in the latter half of the 19th Cen- but it was only partially successful. Occasional charities have been established, and for almost y years a rest home has been conducted at the ıashof near Durlach in Baden. No home or ;n mission work has been operated by the Ger- Mennonites directly although several workers been sent out to the Dutch Mennonite Mission East Indies by the South German Mennonites.

RELIEF

—Canadian Shipment to England

The following excerpt is taken from a news release made by the Branch Office of the M.C.C. in Canada.

"February 1 was a very busy day at the M.C.C. Clothing Depot at Kitchener. The Nonresistant Relief Organization, using the facilities of the new office for the first time, packed a shipment of relief clothing and supplies. The shipment consisted of eleven bales of comforters and quilts, nine large cases of clothing and 524 pounds of chocolate. The total shipment amounted to 3,303 lbs. and was evaluated at $3,396.85. On February 16 the shipment was sent forward to England."

JOTTINGS

—The Mennonite Fellowship of New York City had its monthly meeting on March 1, 1944. The Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander led in a very inspirational worship service. His topic was "Finding God in Worship" which in a particular way fitted the needs of the group. Seventeen were present. Those present for the first time were Mr. Rudy Wiens, Mrs. Neuenschwander, Miss Kathryn Willems, and Mr. E. H. Sprunger.

—Brudertal Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Cornelia Epp and John R. Nickel were married on January 26. Our pastor and family, Rev. Arnold Funk, were quarantined for a month. During that time we had visiting preachers. Dr. H. A. Fast, from Bethel College, will conduct a week of services for us during Passion Week. Our pastor is leaving today to visit C.P.S. camps and to attend a Home Mission Board meeting in Chicago.

—The Women's Association of Bethel College has undertaken the huge task of serving the people who will attend the General Conference in the Memorial Hall next August, perhaps 1,000 persons each noon and evening for a week. They count on the assistance of neighboring churches. Any meat or processed food rationing stamps you can spare should be sent in so that they can 'bank' them for use in August." —News note in the bulletin of the West Zion Church. (The Association has made arrangements with local ration board for the above plan.)

Ralph Beachy, director of the Terry, Montana, C.P.S. Camp, is the director of the school and Grant Stoltzfus, of Morgantown, Pa., is the camp director. Speakers for the first week of the school were: Phil Frey, of Archbold, Ohio; Dr. O. E. Baker, of Washington, D.C.; and Forrest Musser, of Pandora, Ohio. The school will continue for four months during which time such speakers as Dr. Arthur Morgan, of Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio; Rev. William Stauffer of Sugar Creek, Ohio; and Dr. J. Winfield Fretz, of North Newton, Kansas, are scheduled to speak.

—College Credit or C.P.S. Education: The educational division of C.P.S. has approached the presidents of Mennonite colleges with the question of getting college credit for some of the work done in C.P.S. camps. The chief problem in the matter is that of evaluating C.P.S. education in terms of college credits.

—The bulletins of the Grace Mennonite Church, Lansdale, Pa., continue to have attractive and unique designs on the front cover. Mrs. Olin Krehbiel, the wife of the pastor, is responsible for these. Rev. Albert Gaeddert of Inman, Kansas, recently brought the morning message to this church.

—Dr. C. H. Suckau of Omaha, Nebraska, is to be the speaker at a prophetic conference that is to be held by the First Mennonite Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas, April 2-5. This meeting is the annual Bible Conference.

—Bergfelder Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Recently our pastor, Rev. August Ewert, has given a series of inspiring messages on "Angels" in the Sunday morning worship services. In Bible Study and Prayer Meeting he has discussed with us the "Life of Christ" as found in the four Gospels. Many church members have favorably responded to the suggestion made by Rev. Ewert in reading through their Bibles in 1944. Rev. Daniel J. Unruh from Ohio will be with us from March 26 through April 2 for special meetings.

And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. John 12:32

“IF I BE LIFTED UP--”

ON A HILL in far Judea,
Lifted, stood a cross of pain;
Sin in all its clouded darkness
Wove for it death’s shroud of shame.
But the Dying broke the shadows
With the light of love’s pure ray,
Calling out in deep compassion
“God, forgive! Forgive, I pray.”

LOVE HAD SPOKEN; Love was drawing
With its chords unfailing, strong,
To Himself a humble sinner,
Dying now for all his wrong.
“Master!” spoke the trembling victim,
“Hast not Thou a place for me
When Thou comest in Thy Kingdom?—
Pardon is my only plea.”
Tenderly the suffering Saviour
Turned the trembling soul to see.
“E’er this day from earth is faded,
Thou shalt be at Home with Me.”

* * * *

ONCE, BEFORE my eyes stood lifted
That same cross upon the hill
And the Crucified, who hung there,
Drew my soul with love until Tremblingly I sought His pardon.
Tenderly He lifted me
Out of self and sin and shadow
To a life in light set free.

FAR AND NEAR earth’s clouds are dark’ning—
Light can come but by the Cross—
In each soul-hill planted deeply—
Counting all things else but loss—
Must arise the holy altar
Lifting high the Crucified,
Where in His divine compassion
God’s own Lamb for sinners died.
Lifted must the Cross of Ages
Stand before the hearts of men
Till, embraced, the drawing Saviour
Shall give Easter dawn again!

How One Missionary Spent Easter Day

By Mrs. J. R. Duerksen

"Just a little past 3:30 a.m. Time to get up if I am to get to all my villages today," said the missionary Sahib. And the missionary Memsahiba dutifully got up too, for the Sahib must have something to eat before he leaves and a lunch must be packed.

By 4:30, everything was ready and the Sahib set off in the brilliant Easter moonlight. The air was cool and fresh and the jungle strangely beautiful by the white light of the moon. Here and there boughs met and interlaced above the road making a patch of darkness. Suddenly, in one of these dark places there was a crash as of some large animal bounding away. The Sahib let out a yell of alarm, but the animal was evidently as startled as he and did not stop to show himself. It was probably only a monkey.

Ten miles from home he found the first group who gathered together quickly. They were happy to have a special Easter service. The Scriptograph lesson of the women at the tomb helped to hold the interest of all. On Easter day the Christian's greeting is, "The Lord is risen." And the answer comes in jubilant tones, "The Lord is risen indeed."

Service over, the lone cycler started back towards home again intending to stop at several villages on the way. Village number two had only one Christian family, and only the old mother was at home. But non-Christian children and relatives gathered so there was another opportunity to witness of a risen Lord and Saviour.

On again. Now it was noon and time to eat that lunch prepared so early in the morning. Ah! what better escape from the glaring noonday sun than that dense shade, of the wild fig tree! Lunch eaten, what so tempting as to stretch out on that smooth spot for a short nap! So thought, so done.

But one villager must have received quite a start when he came upon a white man stretched out full length in that lonely jungle spot. Several discreet coughs and throat clearings gave him the satisfaction of seeing the Sahib open his eyes. To his anxious inquiry, the Sahib answered that he was only taking a little nap and would be along in the next village before long. Satisfied that all was well he went on his way while the Sahib finished his interrupted nap.

Place number three had only six Christians. But they were happy to gather for a service. In one of the homes there was a new baby boy and nothing would do but that the Sahib should choose a name for him. "Johann" was finally the choice.

Village number four and last in the line had perhaps the best service. Here there were a number of children who had been in the boarding school and the response was quicker because there was a background of Scriptural knowledge. Four times the Scriptograph had given its message of sorrow changed to joy in the presence of a risen Lord.

As the sun sank towards the western horizon the cycler returned home, very weary in body but glad in the consciousness of having been about the Master's business. He had heard no Easter songs sung by carefully trained choirs; had been in no lily decorated church. But after all, Easter is Easter because of Him who was dead and is alive forevermore. And He, according to His promise, is there where two or three are gathered together in His name.

Love - A Mark of Discipleship

By Lubin W. Jantzen

John 13:35: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

Men are not all alike. They are not alike today; neither were they at the time when our Lord was on the earth. His followers were not all following Him for the same reason and purpose. There were those who were the curious, "see-the-next-miracles" group, to whom our Lord spoke some of His words; there were the critics, who were waiting to catch Him in His words or deeds, for whom He had a ready, unanswerable message; there was also the group who were interested in the wisdom and philosophy of our Lord's teaching for its own sake. There is, however, still another group who perhaps have passed through some or all of the above phases i their motives to follow the Lord, but who are willing to go on into a closer and more intimate walk and fellowship with their Lord, no matter what it might cost. This is the small band of disciples, whom we commonly think of as The Twelve.

Our text is definitely spoken to the latter group, and to them only when they are alone. In study of Scripture it is important to notice to whom the message is given, and at what time, as well as the message itself. Hence, it is of importance to notice that these verses are spoken to a small group. Our Lord, by this time, is all through with the throng, who follow either for miracles, criticism, or teaching. In fact, he sees this mixed multitude of followers again only after his arrest at the garden, and at the trial and crucifixion which follow immediately after. He is speaking not even to the twelve—but just the eleven. They are a small, intimate group, and the message is for them.

In noting the time of these verses, we find that they are spoken in the evening before the feast of the passover (John 13:1), which was a type of the crucified Lamb of God. The events which immediately precede these words, are briefly: the Last Supper, at which time the Lord's Supper was instituted (Matt. 26: 26-29); the washing of the disciples' feet by Christ, which is a perfect display of that which our text speaks of—love to one another; the announcement of Judas Iscariot's coming betrayal, following the events which shocked and puzzled the disciples, beginning with the dismissal of Judas into the night (John 13:30). Thus we notice that when our Lord speaks the words of our text, He has already eaten His last meal with His disciples, and is spending His last evening together with them, before His death. By the time another twenty-four hours will have passed, He knows that He will already have been killed and become "the Lamb of God, for sinners slain." Thus these words are in reality a "dying request" of our Lord. Little wonder is it that the beloved disciple, John, gives so much attention and space in His Gospel to the words of his Lord, who is about to be crucified, because he devotes some four and one-half chapters to the conversation of the Lord in that evening. (John 13-17).

It is also of great interest to note with what peculiar words our Lord addresses the band of eleven followers. He uses here a term, in verse 33, which is used nowhere else in the gospels. It is a word indicating special or particular endearment, translated, "little children," or, as in the German text, "dear little children." The closeness of the Lord to His disciples is manifested here. It is like the last, exerting hug and kiss and admonition of a dying mother to a dear child. It is an expression in words of all the love that is manifested in the death of Christ—God's supreme expression of His love to sinful men, in giving Christ to die as the substitute for your sin and mine. "But God commendeth His love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Rom. 5:8. The term "dear little children" indicates more than a friendship. It rather points out a family relationship—that these, by faith in Him, are the children of God. "But as many as received Him, to them gave He the power (or right) to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name: Which were born, ... of God." John 1:12, 13. This is to them a new, changed relationship. They have not always been sons of God, but are that now. Hence, our Lord can speak to them, and make his request of them. The new birth is the first step in discipleship. We cannot have its genuine mark—the mark of love—unless the relationship is right with God.

The first question, after this relationship with God is settled, is the relationship of one disciple to another. He asks them to love one another—not as formerly —man to man, but according to a new measure: "as I have loved you." (vs. 34). The divine love of Christ to mankind is the example of the kind of love which shall prevail. And it is even more than an example—this is divine love placed into regenerated hearts, by the Holy Spirit. "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." Rom. 5:5. There may be many human counterfeits of this divinely-given love, but there is only one genuine, and that is found in the heart of a regenerated person.

This kind of love is the distinguishing mark of a disciple. The Lord says: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." We are living in a day when insignia and dress distinctions are plentiful. The distinguishing mark of a disciple is not to be found in his outward appearance, necessarily, but in a deep-rooted, inner, God-given love, displaying itself in the life and practice of one disciple to another.

It is significant to me that the Lord calls the mark of love a mark of discipleship—not of a mere follower or believer. This term "disciple" is not an all-inclusive word, but rather is restricted to those believers who meet certain requirements and are ready to make more than usual sacrifices. Notice Matt. 16:24: "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Again in Luke 14:26, Jesus says: "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." These passages indicate the necessity of a complete surrender of all, even kinsfolk and one's own life, and the absolute supremacy of Jesus Christ. It is a challenge to us as believers in Christ, to become also Disciples. If we meet God's requirements, and become disciples, then we are giving the badge, the distinguishing mark given only to disciples of Love one to another. Is our love the true, genuine love of a Disciple?

Great Affirmations

Jesus "steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem" to suffer there because He knew it was the Father's Will for him.

The great heroes of faith were men and women who like Jesus set their face "like flint" to do God's will as they understood it.

3. The world should not be allowed to map life out for us. Only God may do that. We like Christ should "set our face like flint" to be true to the will of our Redeemer.

A life of love and loyalty to God is never lived in vain. It always influences other people for God, and has the promise of eternal happiness.

"The eyes of the Lord (still) run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him." II Chron. 16:9

The way Christ suffered is one of the outstanding evidences that He is divine and of God.

Suffering is always one of the great tests of character. But in suffering we also find a unique opportunity to make the Christian life commendable to the world.

Whenever people suffer as Christ did, innocently and with a forgiving spirit, it rebounds to the glory of God.

Suffering for the sake of Christ has the promise of a great reward. Matt: 5:10-12

Obituary of Mrs. S. S. Haury, Pioneer Missionary

Susie Lydia Hirschler was born near Trenton, Illinois, on June 16, 1861, one of seven sisters and three brothers—children of Rev. Daniel Hirschler and Maria Schmidt Hirschler who had emigrated to the United States in 1856.

Her father being one of the ministers of the Mennonite church in Summerfield, Illinois, she grew up in the atmosphere of a Christian home. Early in life she affiliated herself with the church of her parents, being baptized by Rev. Christian Krehbiel on May 16, 1875.

The deceased received her early education in Summerfield, one of her teachers being Rev. David Goerz, the founder of Bethel College. At the age of fifteen, her father placed her in the Moravian Girls Academy at Hope, Indiana, where she completed the course at the end of three years.

On November 20, 1879, she was married to Samuel S. Haury—then missionary candidate of the General Conference of Mennonites—in the Summerfield church by the elder, Rev. Christian Krehbiel, during a session of the General Conference, and the couple was ordained as the first missionaries to be sent out by this organization.

The field of labor selected by the mission board after a longer period of search lay among the Arapahoe Indians in the Indian Territory and the young couple took their wedding trip from Halstead, Kansas, to their new field of work in a covered wagon. They arrived at Darlington, Indian Territory on May 18, 1880.

Under great difficulties the first mission building was erected, which was to serve both as a home and a school. for Indian Arapahoe children. By September, 1881, the school was opened with seventeen pupils who were living in the home. But already on February 19, 1882, the building was destroyed by fire, causing the suffocation of Carl, the nine and one-half-month-old son of the Haurys, as well as that of three half-breed children.

A new building was again erected at Darlington, and a second station opened at Cantonment, sixty-five miles away, in an abandoned military outpost which had been turned over to our mission board by the U. S. government. The Haurys took over the new station in February, 1883.

In 1887 Rev. and Mrs. Haury left the mission field and moved to St. Louis, Missouri, where Rev. Haury entered the St. Louis medical school, completing his course in the spring of 1889. In the fall of that year, Dr. Haury with his family located at Moundridge, Kansas, where he practiced medicine until 1893 when he moved to Newton. When Dr. Haury retired from active practice in 1913 the family moved to Upland, California. Here Dr. Haury passed away on May 19, 1929.

During this entire period, both Dr. and Mrs. Haury were active in church work, having affiliated themselves with the West Zion Church in Moundridge, Kansas, and the First Mennonite Church of Newton, Kansas, and that at Upland, California.

In the First Mennonite Church of Newton Mrs. Haury continuously had a Sunday School class of young women and participated in the work of the Christian Endeavor and the Womens Missionary Society. She was instrumental in the organization of the first church choir under Mr. J. E. Ruth and became its director when Mr. Ruth and his family moved to Oklahoma.

Mrs. Haury was especially active in the expansion of the work of the women's missionary societies of the General Conference. It early became the established custom to turn over one evening at each General Conference session to the women's societies. For a period of years she was chairman of their program committee and presided at these evening meetings. When the societies organized at the Reedley conference in 1917, she was elected the first president of the Women's Missionary Association and the chairman of the executive committee. This office she retained until she retired at the General Conference meeting at Bluffton, Ohio, in 1933. She remained its honorary president until her passing.

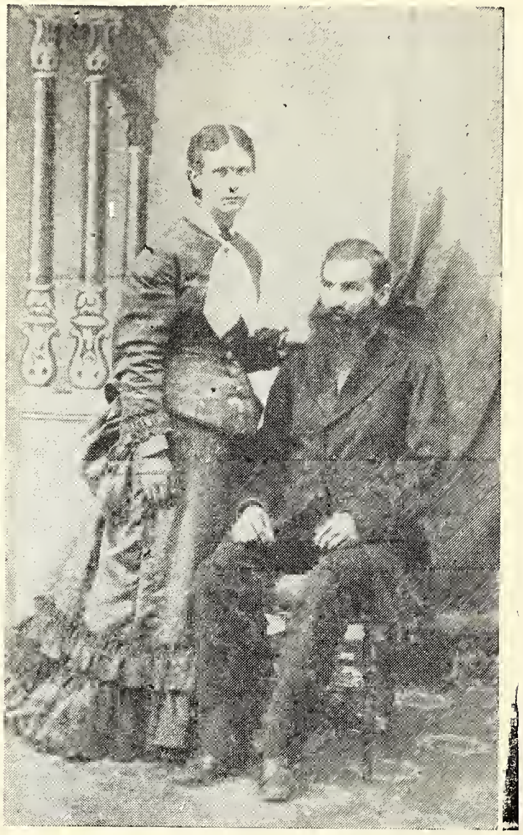
In August, 1932, Mrs. Haury went to Granville, Ohio where she made her home with her daughter Sue until August 20, 1942, when she entered the Bethel Home for the Aged. After a brief illness she fell asleep on Sunday, March 12, 1944, at 11:17 A. M. and her spirit was released to enter the presence of Him in whom she had believed and to whom she had dedicated her life. She reached the age of eighty-two years, eight months, and twenty-six days.

Of seven children born to Dr. and Mrs. Haury, two sons, Carl and Paul, died as infants on the mission field in Indian Territory. A third son, T. Walter, passed away at Newton, Kansas, December 13, 1903, at the age of almost eighteen and one-half years.

Surviving their mother are four daughters, Dora, Mrs. Jacob H. Quiring of New York City; Elsa of Wichita, Kansas; Sue of Granville, Ohio; and Helen, Mrs. L. C. Boynton of Rochester, New York. Besides these, one son-in-law, five grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, many nieces, nephews, and friends remain to cherish the memory of one who was loved and esteemed while sojourning among them.



The Haurys as Young Missionaries

A life rich in service has come to an end. It can truly be said of her that she did what she could. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord. . . yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them." (Rev. 14:13)

Relief Workers Married in Argentina

Following her arrival at Buenos Aires on February 24, Sara Histand became Mrs. Vernon Schmidt. The couple will return to the Chaco where Sister Schmidt will assist in the colony hospital and Brother Schmidt will continue with his former responsibilities.

This Business of Going to Church

By Arthur Wenger

When a minister permits his eyes to wander about over the average group of worshippers he sees many interesting things. The faces of some have an exalted expression; it is not difficult to imagine their thoughts. Some appear to be thoroughly bored; it is obvious that for whatever reason they are present, they consider their time spent in church as wasted. Between these two attitudes the remaining worshippers range themselves.

It may be quite safely said that those who receive something helpful from the worship services come expecting to receive it. On the other hand, those who find the whole proceeding quite dull very likely left home with a sigh of resignation and in a frame of mind where they expected to be bored.

Now, God has never intended church attendance to be a burden to His children. If a worshipper fails to find something in the service which sends him away stronger than when he came, his disappointment is small as compared to the disappointment of God. Something, somewhere, has gone wrong; and, perhaps, we need look no farther than ourselves to find the trouble.

To find something of value in church we must be prepared to bring something. By our presence we have shown our willingness to bring our bodies. But do we sometimes stop there? More important than our presence in body is our presence in mind and spirit. Bring your mind—your thoughts—to church and you will find that you are able to give your attention. The offerings which we bring should be further evidence that we are willing to bring something. Many Christians come to church, it has been said, like an empty pocket—just waiting to be filled. Jesus said, "For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again." Come, prepared to bring your body, your mind, and your offering in an act of worship.

To find something of value in church we must come physically, mentally, and spiritually prepared. It is hardly fair to God to expect Him to bless us if we have had so little sleep the previous night that we must exert all our energy to remain awake. We are setting the stage for disappointment if we fill our minds with trivial things shortly before we come to church. Even God cannot fill a mind that is already full. A well rested body and a well prepared mind will make an unbelievable difference in what we find in church.

To find something of value in church we must regard all parts of the service as aids God is using to prepare us to receive what He has for us. The musical prelude, the call to worship, the reading of the Scriptures, the singing of hymns, and the prayers are all for the purpose of setting our hearts in readiness for God's message. Light, falling onto a photographic film, will not make a picture unless the surface of the film has been made sensative to light. God cannot impress His truth upon just any heart. It must be a prepared, sensitive heart.

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

FARMING IS OUR HERITAGE

There is a close relation between religion and agriculture. Perhaps it is not strange that this should be so among such groups as the Friends, the Church of the Brethren, and the Mennonites because during days of persecution when they were despised sects it was their flight to isolated rural areas that saved them from extinction. During such times the soil was indeed the "good earth" because it provided the sustenance necessary for surivial.

Good Farming No Accident

If it is true that Mennonite farming areas are sometimes referred to as "garden spots," it is also true that such areas were not accidentally found. Such "garden spots" were developed by means of hard struggle and steady effort over many years. In Europe there were many discriminations against them. It was often difficult if not impossible for them to own land. On poor soil it required hard work and great ingenuity to earn a living. Ways had to be devised to improve the fertility of the soil so that maximum productivity could be realized from small acreages. It was undoubtedly under conditions of extreme difficulty that the, now famous, method of crop rotation was developed. Cattle were raised and the manure saved to fertilize the land. The brethren realized that soil, like animals and human beings, had to be fed and nourished if it was to produce. They early recognized that stewardship of God's earth required fulfillment of God's law, namely, that one must give if he is also to get. Man cannot expect to rob the soil indefinitely without impoverishing it and eventually himself.

In addition to developing skills as tillers and builders of the soil, Mennonites also achieved a wide reputation as reclaimers of land by means of draining marshes and building dykes. In the Netherlands they won distinction for their ability to convert swamp lands into fertile farming areas.

Reverence for the Land

When in succeeding centuries Mennonites were no longer persecuted and they were free to buy farms of their own and move freely from place to place, the agricultural practices that had been developed in days of trouble and hardship stood them in good stead. Farming became their chief means of earning a living. To Mennonites farming is not merely an occupation; it is a cherished heritage handed down from generation to generation; it is looked upon as the best opportunity for living a satisfactory Christian life. Farm life encourages family life; it provides the bread of life from both the material and the spiritual point of view; it encourages a reverence for the land and for the rest of God's living creation. Yes, farming is our heritage and we may rejoice with David when he says "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage." (Psalm 16:6)

What History Teaches About the C O's

By P. H. Richert

As the war drags on year after year, we all need encouragement, both the churches at home and the draftees away from home, especially the C. O.'s, who sacrifice so much for their country and their faith.

All of us want to keep and preserve the faith of our fathers. We do not want to lose it as our brethern in Europe have lost it. Do we all know how they lost it? For a while they thought that they could keep it by doing noncombatant service, and only a few were C. O.'s. It did not take long before the noncombatants took up arms, and the few C. O.'s practically also gave up their position. The fact that in the last war our churches here had more C. O.'s than our churches in Europe has helped to keep our noncombatants steady. Should the number of our C.O.'s decrease too much, the noncombatants would naturally drop their position and take the gun as their brethern in Europe have done. So without judging the noncombatants, they alone would not preserve the faith of our fathers. If this faith is preserved, it will be through the C.O.'s. This is the lesson of history, and should encourage our brethern very much. We are glad that our noncombatants mostly try to get into hospitals, which comes nearest in the army to C. O. service, and is better than combatant service. But to depend on them on the long run to uphold our position, is against the facts of history.

It is true that our brethern in Europe even after they took up arms claimed in the last war that they still kept the faith of the fathers in principle but not in practice, but since this is not consistent, we can expect that in this war they not even uphold it in principle, at least most of them. And how much vaule has such an inconsistent position? It reminds one of the position of the editor of a certain paper who says, "Of course, war is sin, but we cannot help it, and so must see it through, and depend on Christ to forgive us, because that is what he came for." Thank the Lord that our draftees are more consistent. I have discontinued this paper.

M. C. C. Adopts Statement on

Sensing the increased need for support of the dependents of C.P.S. men in Mennonite camps, and feeling the Christian obligation and privilege of bearing one another's burdens, the Mennonite Central Committee in a special session on March 17-18, adopted a Statement of Policy in Regard to C.P.S. Dependency Needs. The Statement suggests a plan whereby the entire brotherhood might share in the burden that is resting on a number of brethren in C.P.S.,

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Gerhard Friesen, Newton, Kansas

APRIL 9—"He is not here; for He is risen." Matt. 28:6.

What a joyous note! Every believer's heart that has experienced this risen life sings with joy. The earthly-minded whose interest grovels in material things experience heartbreaking disappointments. Not so the followers of the risen Lord; his life is hid with Christ in God and all his hopes and aspirations are therefore centered in God and underwritten by God, the almighty, wise, and loving Father. Easter goes with him through life.

APRIL 10—"As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." I Cor. 15:49.

I know too well that my life has reflected the image of the first Adam. But I am glad that I shall also reflect the image of the second Adam, Christ, and that He has made it possible for me to do so, "according to the riches of His grace," (Eph 1:7). Oh, that I might be willing and found worthy to bear His image today and every day, that others through me may learn to know Him and to love Him.

APRIL 11—"Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God."—Rom. 12:1

In the Old Testament a perfect lamb was required for a sacrifice. In the New Testament the real sacrifice takes the place of the symbol. Christ gave Himself for us to redeem us. Now Paul says nothing less is expected of those who follow Him. He wants me to bring an offering, the complete consecration of all I am for a service offering. Have I a right to withhold any part of what I am or have?

APRIL 12—"Oh come, let us worship and bow down, let us kneel before Jehovah our Maker." Ps. 95:6.

What a challenge by this Old Testament singer. He knew God Jehovah, and we know God the Father of our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ, who gave Himself for us that we could become sons and daughters of God. Have we begun to sense the depths of that Love? Oh, the unspeakable riches of His grace revealed to us. This moves us to approach the house of God in a real spirit of worship—worth-ship. Oh come let us worship and bow down.

APRIL 13—"Be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." I Cor. 15:58.

Does Paul mean that I shall be steadfast and immoveable in times like the present when it is not easy or safe to live my faith? He even demands that the work be abounding, overflowing. I believe he is right. In times like these it is especially urgent that the work of the Lord be carried on with ever increasing determination.

We see people so preoccupied with their earthly professions that they have time for nothing else. Has not a Christian much more reason to be so preoccupied with the Lord's work so that no dangers can deter him?

APRIL 14—"Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Heb. 11:1.

Hope is joyful expectation. What do I hope for? I hope that God's kingdom on earth may be realized. It follows that my faith must be the substance of that hope. Do I believe in Jesus' way? Then my daily life should be the evidence of the possibility of such a kingdom. If I cannot produce this evidence have I the right to ask others to do so? God help me to be a ray of light and inspiration to others to pray and labor with me for the coming of the kingdom.

APRIL 15—"I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to us ward." Rom. 8:18.

Paul had experienced a good share of suffering, but to him it seemed a small price to pay for the reward he knew was coming. One soul is worth more than the whole world. Yet how many are willing to sell theirs for worthless trash. Oh, that we could always see the values that abide, values that enrich our life now and rise to uncomprehended glories hereafter. Does it pay to be faithful followers of the Master?

and urges that the matter be considered a matter of mutual, brotherly burden bearing rather than a matter of charity.

The Statement as adopted recommends a plan whereby support for the dependents of men in Mennonite camps can be systematically, adequately and uniformly provided. The plan will become operative only when and if the several Mennonite constituent groups individually adopt it, or subject it to whatever modification they may think necessary. Meanwhile, the present provision for support of dependents will continue.

The plan as outlined provides for substantial aid to be given in the form of periodical allowances to all dependents who cannot or ought not undertake to support themselves. Those who can work are encouraged to support themselves.

THE CROWD

You knew Him only as the man of loaves and fishes—
The man who did marvelous things.
He who raised Lazarus,
Healed the lame, and made the blind to see,
Fleeing from you, He sought the solace of the garden.

He must have known
That you would cry, "Release unto us Barabbas!"
And fling your cruel words at Him
As He climbed to Golgatha alone.
Perhaps He knew
That some day you would build creeds about Him,
And lose Him in massive structures of stone,
With costly windows, dignified ritual and eloquent preachers;
While outside He waited . . .
Sad . . . and alone.

Opportunities for Christian Seavice in Medicine

By Dr. Delbert Preheim

One hesitates to approach a subject such at this because when one is close to a profession one lacks the perspective to view it objectively. If, therefore, the personal appears, it is necessarily so because of the nature of the topic.

Opportunities for Christian service are not peculiar to medicine, to teaching, to the ministry, or to any vocation. They are everywhere. Wherever a need exists, meeting that need constitutes service. Christian service means meeting the need in the spirit of Christ—ministering "to the least of these." And we may not that Christ expects all of us to be active in His service. He who has five talents is expected to use five; he who has two is expected to use them; and he who has one is expected to use it. Christian service must be done in the spirit of the greatest of all commandments, the spirit of love to God and fellowmen.

The physician has unusual opportunities for service, and his contributions are frequently dramatic. At least, he is inclined to accept the credit for the dramatic effects that occur under his ministry. Any honest physician will concede that it is not he who effects cures, but rather the powerful forces which he has learned to marshall. Whether an agnostic calls these forces nature, or whether a Christian doctor ascribes his beneficent ability to God, they both serve humanity with the same tools. The difference lies in the selfless attitude which characterizes service as Christian rather than non-Christian. Unselfishness has been observed by all of us in our homes and community. It is, indeed, so commonplace that we incline not to recognize it and even take it for granted. The Christian father who devotes his life to his family, the Christian mother who devotedly nurses an invalid child, the Christian teacher who devotes her life to teaching even at a low salary: are these not all of the finest examples of Christian service?

The doctor who engages in Christian service, then, is no different than any of the others of us. Prescribing for patients who come to his office during office hours takes no unselfishness. If his services are free, some unselfishness enters in. If it is "inconvenient" or "after-hours" more unselfishness enters in. If it requires making a call, especially on foot, even more. When he is called upon to go see a hysterical woman late on a Saturday night, has to cross an unbridged river on horseback and then walk three hours worth of mountain trails part of which are muddy, the missionary spirit does wear a bit thin. But such incidents are not common and their net drain on a doctor's resources is not large.

If meeting need constitutes service, the opportunities for service are necessarily greatest where the needs are greatest. According to such a criterion Puerto Rico certainly does offer opportunity for medical service. Out of the approximately five hundred patients I have examined here, there were scarcely a dozen that had healthy teeth. One could do an immense service in the La Plata Valley by just taking out tonsils. Most of the people in our large valley rarely eat anything except rice, beans, a few native fruits, and on Sunday or holidays, codfish. Is there any wonder that mal-nutrition and vitamin deficiencies are common? Teaching these people to raise, use, and especially to enjoy good food constitutes an enormous opportunity for Christian service.

The average house has one or two small rooms and a lean-to kitchen. No dining room is required because the family eats its rice and beans whenever and wherever it wants to. The usual thing is to take one's bowl and sit in the doorway. When through eating another member of the household takes the bowl and eats. Family life as we know it is all but unknown. At night however, the entire family, usually between eight and twelve people all crowd into the two rooms, board up the windows and doors tightly (to keep out the bad night air) to sleep. Is it any wonder that throat and lung diseases, especially tuberculosis levels an enormous toll against these people? Teaching the fundamentals of hygiene offers a big field for Christian service—more than tons of cough medicine or aspirin could possibly do.

Seeds of Christian love can be sown here as elsewhere, and we want our witness here to be fruitful. However, Jesus has said that the wayside, the stony and shallow ground, and the thorns do not yield large returns. Perhaps then, medicine as a Christian service can concern itself with deeper plowing, and the removal of rocks and thornes.

Mauhadih Mission Station No. 3 in India

By P. J. and Agnes Wiens

The church of God has inherited a commitment from Jesus Christ, her Lord and Savior, to go and proclaim the gospel to all the nations and to teach them, and to baptize the believer in the name of the Triune God-Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Evangelization of the non-Christian peoples is the purpose of all missions. Our own mission is no exception in this.

The first two mission stations, Janjgir and Champa in India, were opened in 1901 with this intent, but a severe famine had been in the Central Provinces, India, two years before, and the result of that famine was still evident by the aimless wanderings of orphans. Some of them came also to the newly opened mission stations, and when we arrived in India during the rainy season of 1906 there was a boys' orphanage at the Janjgir mission station and a girls' orphanage at Champa with the necessary schools for the education of these children at both places. Besides this there was a dispensary for medical help at each station too.

In 1910 when there were in all ten mission workers for these two places the time seemed to be there where another station might be opened, and a piece of land, six acres, was bought twenty-five miles south of Champa for the third mission station. This place you will have found referred to by two names—"Mauhadih" and Birra." Both names refer to the same place, the third mission station in India.

Some spade work had begun before the close of 1910 but the building started with the year 1911, and the dedication of the third station took place on New Year's day of 1912 when all the missionaries from Janjgir and Champa could be present. Hundreds of people from the surrounding villages came to the meetings which took place before the close of the year 1911. We recommend to the interested readers the book Twenty-Five Years With God In India for details and annual summaries.

On January 11, 1911, we with our two sons, Ferdinand and Rudolf, moved away from Champa where we had spent our first four and one-half years, and the rest of our service in India was spent at Mauhadih, except for fourteen months of our third term we worked at Basna, according to age the fifth station. The distance from Champa to Mauhadih, twenty-five miles, takes a full day to drive by oxcart.

One must not think of the time spent in building all the houses necessary as a monotonous time, no, just the opposite, often too varied, because you have to produce about all you need for building. One place the bricks are being made and burnt, at another place the logs that were brought out of the forest are being sawed into whatever is needed, at a third place lime is burnt, at a fourth place a distance away stones for the foundations are being quarried, and quite a number of workers are new and have to be watched and shown how to do the work, etc. . . . and many details too numerous to name, but they are there nevertheless.

The purpose of the mission is never forgotten, and while building work is carried on, the gospel is being presented in the morning services with all the workers and the Sunday services and Sunday School. A very large Sunday School flourished at Mauhadih for a number of years till the southern mission field required much time and the lack of workers was manifested in the decrease of attendance. Till 1921 all the meetings were held in the schoolhouse or in the open under the trees whenever the weather permitted it. During 1920 the building of a large church was started. It was dedicated during 1921 when our mission inspector, Dr. J. W. Kliewer, and also J. P. Habegger, Brother Kliewer's travelling companion, were present.

This church building, erected by Brother Wiens at Mauhadih, seats comfortably 200 people.

This bungalow for missionaries at Mauhadih is the oldest of the two there. It was built by Missionary Wiens. Two families have lived in it quite frequently. The veranda is used for sleeping most of the year round.

During the early time of the mission work in India the missionary had to do much medical work, and usually the forenoons, when at the station, were spent in helping as much as we could. People even from beyond the area of our mission field came for medicine. Much help could be given, but now with our mission hospitals and our missionary doctors, many of the "Don't know" cases can be directed to them, if the person can be persuaded to go there. The medical work helped to open many homes to the gospel.

A Brahman friend of ours who frequently came to the dispensary to watch us at work told me once, never to say to a sick man you do not know or cannot help him, because in the first place he does not believe it, and secondly, anything you give him will cheer him, although it may not help him. Christ never refused any help and should we do differently? No, not if we can help.

Now the work that was carried on at Mauhadih till 1937 when we left India was the evangelistic work in the church at the station and at outstations in the district; educational work through primary schools and the Boys Middle School at the station connected with the industrial branches of carpentry, weaving, tailoring, blacksmithing, vegetable and fruit gardens, farming and a small dairy herd; the boys boarding with a few orphans along with the boarding boys from the other mission stations and children from the village Christians. The dispensing of medicine is being kept up and the evangelistic effort goes hand in hand with it through the tracts that are used for writing the registrant's number on it.

Before the close of 1923 the southern field was transferred to Basna and organized as a separate station. A total of 464 church members from the Mauhadih church register were transferred to the Basna church register. This left the Mauhadih church 113 members only. At present there are quite a number of people being added to the church in the Mauhadih area. After the flood in 1937 with the transfer of the Middle School later to Basna, the Thiessens transferred there too, and since then the educational centers of our mission are Basna for the boys and Janjgir for the girls.

The following missionaries have served at Mauhadih for a shorter or longer time: The families P. J. Wiens; E. B. Steiner, S. T. Moyer, John Thiessen, J. R. Doerksen, Miss Martha Burkhalter, Edgar Franks, F. J. Isaac, P. W. Penner.

There are in all twenty-four buildings comprising the station. Three good wells supply water for irrigation and use in the homes. Besides that there are two large rivers adjoining the station, a great blessing and also a hindrance. With all the facilities this station has it has become the place for retreats and the Indian Church conferences. May God richly bless the influences that are radiating from these gatherings.

This is the dispensary at Mauhadih where many outpatients and quite a few inpatients were formerly taken care of by Brother Wiens. The work is now smaller and is taken care of by an Indian helper.

The above buildings are now used for the Primary Day School. Formerly they were used for the Primary and Middle Boys' Boarding School. These and other buildings suffered injury in the great flood of 1937.

Through Life to Death

With the coming of spring Jimmie helped his father plant some seeds in the ground. After a nice soft rain and several warm sunny days, small green shoots pushed their way up out of the earth. As time went on these grew but there were also some weeds that put in their appearance in the garden. So Jimmie and his father had to work hard to keep these out and give the peas a chance. One day while pulling up weeds Jimmie pulled out a pea by mistake. He was surprised to find the shell of the planted pea at the root. His father explained how through the death of the pea that was planted many new pods of peas came to life.

Yes, in many ways nature proclaims the Easter story, that Christ died and rose again and through His death multiplied thousands have been given new life. Jesus said, "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it." (Luke 9:24) So we must die to self in order to live unto Christ. Paul write, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." (Galatians 2:20) The old wicked life comes to an end and a new life emerges, the Christ-like life. Lust, hate, selfishness, greed, strife, pride, cruelty, bigotry, suspicion and lying are put to death and in their place there is resurrected love, joy, peace, trust, justice, truth and grace.

Have you passed through death to life?

—Olin A. Krehbiel in C. E. Witness

BE PREPARED

"Watch ye therefore, for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning." (Mark 13:35)

Jesus was a very thoughtful person. He knew it would be hard for His disciples (that means us, too, as Christians) to be faithful. He also knew that at times we would fail.

Jesus gave the parable of the watchful servant to His disciples in His last week on earth. There was a certain rich man who had to go into another country. He left his house to his faithful servants. Each servant had a special duty. The porter was to watch the gate. The porter was faithful and watched for his Master's home coming. This refers to us, as we are God's servants. Are we always faithful? We know that Jesus is coming back, but do we always watch?

Jesus doesn't want us to watch idly. He gave each of us talents and He wants us to use them. Let us not wrap our talents in a napkin and bury them, but make the most of what we have. Some of us have many and some of us have few, but let's make the most of what we have till He comes.

Easter Beatitudes

Blessed are they of the Easter faith,
For theirs is the risen Lord;
For them He lives, and to them He gives
The fountain of life restored.

Blessed are they of the Easter cheer,
For theirs is the burning heart;
For them the tomb is bereft of gloom,
They wait with their Lord apart.

Blessed are they of the Easter hope,
For theirs is the open gate;
It swings through the tomb to that other room
Where the Lord and our loved ones wait.

YOUTH JOTTINGS

—The Sunshine Girls of the First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California, collected about 100 geranium slips which they sent to Florence Auernheimer, a member of the Reedley Church who is serving as a government teacher for Japanese interned at Tule Lake Project. The sixty-four first-graders which Miss Auernheimer teaches will plant the slips and take care of them till Mothers' Day. They they will be presented to their mothers. There are no trees and no grass at the internment camp.

—Carl Stucky, Junior at Bethel College, placed second in the State Anti-Tobacco Oratorical Contest held March 10. Five Kansas colleges competed in the contest. Carl's oration on the subject "Looking Ahead" won a twenty-five dollar prize offered by Dr. J. W. Fields of McPherson. Carl is a member of the Hoffnungsfeld Mennonite Church, Moundridge.

—Arnold Nickel, ministerial student at Bethel College, recently visited the First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, and gave a message at the afternoon meeting that followed the noon fellowship meal. Arnold is at home in Mountain Lake, Minnesota.

—The Oklahoma Young People's Retreat is to be held August 9 to 13.

—Robert Kreider, son of Rev. and Mrs. A. E. Kreider, recently brought a much-appreciated message to the First Mennonite Church, Allentown, Pa. Robert was formerly a member of the ill-fated relief unit which was bound for China, but had to return because of congressional action.

—The young people's C.E. of the Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota, recently had a C.E. program in which they heard topics sent in by absent members.

—The C.E. Union of the Eastern District had a fellowship meeting at Lansdale on March 18. Dr. J. E. Hartzler was the speaker. There were also musical numbers, a play, games, and refreshments.

—First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California: Last Friday evening three socials were held by various groups of the Church. The Young People met in the Grant School Gymnasium for an evening of recreational games, devotions and refreshments. The High School group met in the church library rooms for an evening of games and refreshments. The Sunday School class of Herman Neufeld met in the Church basement and enjoyed an evening of games and other activities.

—On March 12, after the evening service, the young people of the Alberta Community Church, Portland, Oregon, gathered at the home of their C.E. president, Burt Russell Jr., who was to leave for service March 22. There were songs, scripture, talk and prayer by the pastor, Rev. Wiebe. Burt was active in church, Sunday School, orchestra, prayer meeting, and C.E. The Dorcas Hi-Girls meet every first and third Thursday at 7:30 P.M. They recently sent a box of first aid supplies to Rev. Habeggers, to be used in their work among the Indians. They also collected clothing for European relief. At present they are making quilt patterns for the Montana Indian field and mounting pictures for the Kindergarten Sunday School room there. They are also making pot holders, aprons, and tea towels for the new missionaries, Rev. and Mrs. Malcolm Wenger. —Church Corr.

—Bertha Fast, a member of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, and a niece of Dr. H. A. Fast, has been accepted as a member of the relief unit that the M.C.C. plans to send to the Near East in the near future.

Dependency Problem

Dearly Beloved:

More than ever I have thought in these last days of Deut. 8:2, "Thou shalt remember all the way which Jehovah thy God hath led thee these forty years." (R. V.)

Forty years ago, in March, 1904, I was elected to the ministry. I think that no one except those who have been elected to the ministry, can imagine how I felt. I felt like Jeremiah, who said, when he was called: "Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child. But the Lord said unto me, Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak." (Jer. 1:6-7) I have tried to obey God as His servant as you all know, but I will say little about my work because our text was spoken by a servant of God to the children of Israel.

I shall try to help you to remember some of the things that happened in these forty years for which we should be grateful to God. Since the organization of the congregation in November of 877, sixty-six years have gone by.

We all admit that God led us out of the old country, where religious freedom was not granted, into a good land where we have enjoyed this religious freedom. He also blessed the labors of our hands so much that we could enjoy home life and were enabled to support church and conference activities. For sixteen years, seven ministers served in our three churches and hospital. But since 1920 one of our ministers after another passed to his heavenly reward, until only Brother Cornelius Penner and I were left to serve the congregation. But for English services, Bible school teachers and visitors were called to serve, until in 1940 when my health failed and Brother Dyck was called o serve as our pastor.

The Lord has led us these forty years through times of prosperity ad through times of crop failures and depression. He never failed to lead us by His Spirit and His servants. The Lord has been just as faithful in leading us as He led the people of Israel with the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night. Therefore the words of Moses are meant or us: "Thou shalt remember all the way which Jehovah thy God hath led thee these forty years." The spiritual leadership is so important that we may know that man liveth not by bread only, but by everything that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. We were led by the Word of God as it was preached and taught all these years. But willingness to follow and o do what God teaches us in His Word is just as mportant as proper leadership. God punished disobedience and murmering against Moses and Aaron severely, but forgave them as they repented and turned to God in prayer. We, too, shall remember our failures and sins, because the Lord is trying to humble us as he humbled his people. May we remember Him who forgiveth all our iniquities.

At the end of the forty years the children of Israel were to enter the promised land, the land of Caanan, where they should live and labor as a holy people and worship their God who so graciously led them out of Egypt, through the Red Sea and the wilderness. He also gave them the Ten commandments and made a covenant with them. And all the people answered together and said, "All that Jehovah hath spoken, we will do." Similar to the children of Israel, the greater part of our congregation is doing the same: they live and labor where God wants them to do so. They, too, have said, "All that the Lord Jesus Christ hath spoken we will do." In doing this, we all worship and serve God.

And some of us are like Moses at the end of our life. The Lord showed him the earthly possessions of his people, but he was not permitted to enter. For us:

"There's a land that is fairer than day,
And by faith we can see it afar;
For the Father waits over the way,
To prepare us a dwelling place there."

Sooner or later everyone of us will come to the end of his journey. May we then all meet in heaven above, and be with the Lord for ever and ever. This is my prayer for everyone in our congregation at the end of these forty years.

With love and greetings to all of you,

Franz Albrecht

Franz Albrecht is Pastor Emeritus of the First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, which is now eing served by Rev. Walter H. Dyck. Brother Alrecht has been ill with heart trouble for several ears. The above message by him was read to the ongregation on March 19.

Relief Workers Return on Gripsholm

Among the many repatriates on board the Gripsholm, when it docked in Jersey City, on the evening of March 15, were the three Mennonite relief workers, Henry Buller and wife, and Lois Gunden. For over a year they had been interned in Southern Germany. Although they were eager to return to the United States, they were in very good health and had received good accommodation.

Brother Buller and Sister Gunden were sent to France as relief workers in 1941. Their relief activities came to a close after the Americans landed in North Africa in November of 1942. They are in possession of reliable reports that the work which they started is continuing, although on a reduced scale.

Relief to Victims of Argentina Earthquake

According to the announcement made some time ago in these notes, opportunities were being sought to bring relief to the earthquake area at San Juan, Argentina. However, relief efforts for the victims of the San Juan earthquake were completely controlled by the Argentine Army which militarized the earthquake zone. Investigation made by the Mennonite missionaries in Argentina revealed that the catastrophe was as disastrous as first reports indicated. Acting upon this investigation an appropriation of $2,000 from the War Sufferers' Relief fund was sent to the missionaries to be used as they thought wise.

Training School for Side-Camp Leaders

Several of the C.P.S. camps, particularly those in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast areas, have side or branch camps. In these side camps a group of men live and work apart from the base camp for a considerable length of time. Because such groups have unique problems of their own and in many cases lack adequate supervision for religious and educational activities, steps are being taken to provide a period of training for a number of qualified campers to act as leaders of side camps. The school will be set up at Downey, Idaho, Camp and will continue for a period of approximately eighteen days, beginning April 10.

Report on Relief in Bengal

Brother J. D. Graber, who has returned from China and is now assisting in India, reports on the famine-relief project in Bengal:

"I am getting deeply into the work here in Bengal. This is significant work and I am happy to have some part in it. . . . So far our work consists mainly in the distribution of rice to destitute families. We visit villages and investigate poor homes. . . . On Friday, for example, I distributed rice to 207 people, i.e., to 207 families. This is perhaps the lightest day of the three so you see we are at present distributing to at least 650 or more families per week. This meets a genuine need for people who are destitute in this area. Quite a lot of cloth has also been distributed free as well as sold at a cheap, control rate."

Besides the work of food and clothing distribution in the famine area, our workers there have also been given full responsibility for the distribution of quinine in the section in which they are working.

Isaac's Secure Passage

Ferdinand J. Isaac, Relief Director for the Bengal relief project, who was detained for some time in Buenos Aires, was evidently able to secure passage to South Africa sometime toward the end of February. A letter from Buenos Aires, written by Vernon Schmidt, provides the information that Brother Isaac with Sister Isaac and Alida Schrag embarked for Montevideo, Uruguay, for an unnamed port.

Director for Canadian Office Appointed

Cornelius Rempel and wife of Kitchener, Ontario, have been appointed as manager and matron of the M.C.C. Canadian Headquarters located in Kitchener. The Rempel's will assume their new responsibility as soon as Brother Rempel can be released from his present employment.

Camp Shifts Planned

Because a number of camps are under their normal camp strength, as a result of the large number of transfers to special projects during the past fall and winter, a number of shifts will be made during the early spring months. Thrity-nine men will transfer from Sideling Hill, Pa., to Hill City, S. D. A carload will transfer from Grottoes and Luray, Virginia, to Belton, Montana, and twenty will transfer from Denison, Iowa, to Three Rivers, California.

SAM GOERING ON WAY HOME

According to a telegram received recently by Mrs. Sam Goering, North Newton, Kansas, Brother Sam Goering left Colombo, Ceylon, on March 27. The telegram read, "BOTH WELL STOPPING EIGHT DAYS HOW ARE YOU REPLY AMERICAN CONSULATE COLOMBO." Ceylon is an island just south of India. It is supposed that Brother Goering's next stop on his way home will be Africa.

CORRESPONDENCE

ST. JOHN MENNONITE CHURCH

Pandora, Ohio

Our winter, comparatively mild for the most part, gave us a bit of a "fling" just as it was about time for it to leave. During the past week (written March 23) it has been quite cold and there was much snow and wind. Today the weather is milder, and a gentle rain is washing away the last traces of the heavy snow, and already the green grass appears, showing that spring is really at hand.

Health conditions have been fairly good all winter, except that there was much of mumps, measles, and colds for a while.

Our missionary society has found opportunity to do sewing for European relief and helping with the work in the Cutting Room in Bluffton. Beside the sewing that was done in our homes, a day was spent at the church making quilts, comforts, and sorting and mending quantities of used clothing, to be sent to relief centers. Our monthly program for February was given on a Sunday evening as a C. E. program, at which occasion Dr. Mabel Silver from Africa, of the same mission under which the Walter Schutzes of this community are working. For our April meeting we are to unite with the other Mennonite missionary societies of the community for a joint meeting in the Grace church here in Pandora.

A number of us availed ourselves of the opportunity of attending a school of religion at Ottawa, sponsored by the Putnam County Ministerial Association. A series of five sessions took place on Monday evenings, running from 7:30 to 10:10. The following courses were taught: "Ways of Teaching" by Prof. Strattin of Findlay College; "The Church and World Order," consisting of lectures given by Professors Smith, Bauman, and Pannabecker of Bluffton College; "Prophets and their Messages" and "The Life of Christ" by Rev. A. C. Schultz of the Ebenezer Church and head of the Bible department of Bluffton College. Interest was good and the classes well attended.

We have been blessed and inspired during the past year by having in our midst "off and on" our Sister Irma Schneck. At present she is anticipating returning to her field of labor in Africa. With traveling conditions uncertain she has been holding herself in readiness to leave for some time, passport in hand. Her latest communications request that she be in New York ready to sail by about the middle of April. On the evening of March 22 the Women's Missionary Society sponsored a farewell "pot-luck" supper in her behalf with almost eighty women and girls attending. During the supper there was instrumental music, and in the heart-warming program that followed, there was a short talk by Irma. Gifts that in the course of the evening had been accumulating in a fairly good sized "ship" on an adjoining table were then opened. They consisted largely of tinned groceries and soap goods, things hard to get in Ethiopia where she hopes eventually to labor. There were gifts of money, also. On March 26 Irma is to bring the Sunday morning message. Anyone unacquainted

INMAN MENNONITE CHURCH

Inman, Kansas

The Inman Mennonite Church recently had the privi-ge of sharing in the blessings the following visitors rought to us.

On Sunday evening, March 3, the Mennonite Bible cademy gave an inspirational program with Rev. Arnold egier as chairman. Principal Ted Schmidt gave a ort address. Sunday morning messages on March 12 nd 19 were brought by Dr. J. Winifield Fretz of the C.C. Akron office, and Rev. Henry Toews of North ewton, respectively. Dr. Kirby Page, noted author and cturer, conducted a service in our church Tuesday fternoon, March 21, and spoke in the evening to a large dience in the high school. On Sunday evening, March , Rev. H. A. Fast presented informational slide pictures ken on his trip to South America.

Rev. J. E. Kaufman attended the joint meeting of the eneral and Central Conference Unity Committees and special session of the M.C.C. in Chicago March 14 and respectively. On this trip he also visited the C.P.S. nits in mental hospitals at Ypsilanti and Kalamazoo, ichigan. —Corr.

EINSIEDEL MENNONITE CHURCH

Hanston, Kansas

Your correspondent will send a few news items from ur somewhat isolated point in Western Kansas. Indeed, e often do feel quite isolated when the itinerary of a issionary or conference worker appears and we of Wes-rn Kansas are not included.

We meet regularly every Sunday morning and also ch Sunday evening, alternating Christian Endeavor eetings with a Bible study course covering the life of rist. As our evening attendance is small, our meetings e held in the homes, where good fellowship follows e study of the evening.

This winter has been one of testing and sorrow for any of our group. Death and serious illness so unex-ctedly entered several of our homes and took away our most faithful and loyal workers.

Just before Christmas we were able to have the in-rior of our church building repainted. The Ladies Aid sented to the church a large picture of Christ praying the garden. This now hangs on the wall behind the lpit. These changes have been refreshing and help to eate a spirit of reverence in our church house.

Our Ladies Aid continues to meet regularly each onth. A part of each meeting is spent in the discussion sets of Bible questions which have been previously stributed among the members, a study which all feel be very helpful. Other activities then include various wing projects, and during the winter they have twice cked and mailed sizeable packages of clothing for re-f purposes to the Mennonite Central Committee at ron.

We are now looking forward to our Easter Sunday orning service which we hope to observe with a special vice of music and Scripture.—Mabel Bechtel, Corr.

First Mennonite Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: The Down-Idaho, C.P.S. camp gave us a sacred concert on rch 19. A group of twenty men sang. On March the Executive Committee and the Evangelization ard of the Pacific District met in Portland to decide portant conference issues.

JOTTINGS

—Rev. Elbert Koontz of Bonebrake Seminary, Dayton, Ohio, has accepted a call from the Second Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska. Brother Koontz completed a four-year college course and also graduated from the music department at Bethel College. He will graduate from the Bonebrake Seminary this spring. While a member of the Bethel College Quartet he visited many of our conference churches in the United States and Canada. It is our hope and prayer that God will richly bless Brother Koontz and make him a blessing to many. W.C.A., Corr.

—Alberta Community Church, Portland, Oregon: On March 19 Rev. Albert Schultz, field representative of the Grace Bible Institute of Omaha, Nebraska, brought us two very inspiring messages. —Corr. In the bulletin of this church we read, "Do you know that our bulletin is being mailed to families in this neighborhood? If you know of a family that could come here, and you wish for them to have a copy, give the address to Mrs. Benson."

—St. John Mennonite Church, Pandora, Ohio: On March 12, Rev. Jacob Haas, a member of this church, and Mrs. Isaiah Welty of the Ebenezer Church, near Bluffton, were united in marriage. Both had previously been widowed, and Mrs. Welty was a sister-in-law to Rev. Haas, she having been a sister to his first wife. Of interest also is the fact that each has a daughter serving as a missionary, both in the same mission in Africa. The daughters are Mary Haas and Viola Welty. —Corr.

—Members of the First Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas, gathered in their church basement on the evening of March 24 and surprised their pastor, Rev. H. T. Unruh. After a short program he was presented with a large birthday cake and other gifts. All enjoyed the refreshments served and the social hour that followed.

—Members of the Menno Mennonite Church, Lind, Washington, recently gave $1,238.00 in one week for C.P.S. This was the hearty response to an invitation to give for this part of God's work.

—Rev. John Bartel is reported to have resigned as pastor of the Immanuel Mennonite Church, Delft, Minnesota.

—First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California: Dr. J. H. Langewalter gave a series of sermons on the theme, "The Way," from February 6 to 15. Our pastor, P. K. Regier, spoke to the C.P.S. boys at North Fork on March 19. In his absence John Strain of the local high school brought the message. On February 27 the congregation met and approved the recommendation to proceed with the enlargement of the basement to provide more rooms for Sunday School classes. —Mrs. C. A. Warnock, Corr.

—A recent bulletin of the Buhler, Kansas, Mennonite Church carries a reminder by the pastor as to how the church stands in its C.P.S. contributions.

—"Word has been . . . received from Dr. and Mrs. Richard Jantzen that they will be returning to this country at the earliest opportunity. Necessary medical treatment for Richard and the health of the two children is the reason." Thus states Oak Leaves From Home, a paper of the Second Mennonite Church, Paso Robles of which Rev. F. F. Jantzen is pastor. Richard Jantzen is a son of Rev. Jantzen and is serving as missionary in Africa. (Last minute news: The Richard Jantzens have left Africa on their way home.) Rev. W. A. Regier of the Immanuel Mennonite Church, Los Angeles, California, conducted a week of special services before Easter for the Second Church, Paso Robles.

—Brother W. F. Unruh, pastor of the West Zion Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, recently visited a number of the Oklahoma Churches in the interest of the Home Missions Committee.

—Rev. George Stoneback, pastor of the Fairfield, Pa., Mennonite Church spoke at the Hagerstown, Maryland, C.P.S. camp on March 27. Previously he had visited other C.P.S. camps and units.

—Correction: Jotting number three in the last issue referred to the Women's Association of Bethel College and said in part, "Any meat or processed food rationing stamps you can spare should be sent in so that they can 'bank' them for use in August." Please, disregard the statement just quoted, for this plan had to be changed. However, the Association is still counting on the assistance of neighboring churches and will make clear to them just how they can help.

—Rev. Herbert Miller, pastor of the Deer Creek, Oklahoma, Mennonite Church, wrote on March 22, "We had another good 'soaker!' " Referring to a history of the church he says, "Most of the charter members are still living and attending church. Six different groups of the church are to participate in an Easter song service. They are the children's group, intermediate girl's group, young people's choir, ladies' chorus, men's chorus, and mixed chorus. Thirty-eight young and old people sing in the mixed chorus.

—The bulletin of the Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota, appears in printed form. Brother Willard Claassen, the pastor, does the printing on a hand press.

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Geary, Oklahoma: Lubin W. Jantzen, President of the Oklahoma Bible Academy, was the speaker at a youth conference held on March 31. An item in the bulletin reads "The Mennonite is bringing every week splendid articles every member of the church should read. Did you subscribe to the paper when you last made up your mind you were going to do so?" In his Sunday night services Rev. Harder, the pastor, is dealing with various phases of the Mennonite Church and its doctrines. He writes in the bulletin, "We do not appreciate the things we possess as long as we do not know their worth and the circumstances by which they have come to us. Might that be the case with the heritage of our faith?" Furthermore, this pastor uses available space in the bulletin to give information about the conference, this information being gotten from the booklet, Our Church.

—Brother William Stauffer showed 125 colored slides of life in C.P.S. camps to the First Mennonite Church, Upland, California, on March 19. He also brought the messages of the day.

—A much appreciated improvement was made in the Memorial Hall of Bethel College recently when venetian blinds were installed in the windows of the auditorium.

—The First Mennonite Church, Hutchinson, Kansas, at its annual business meeting asked Rev. and Mrs. C. H. Dirks to continue their services for another term of three years as provided by the constitution." So reads an item from the annual report of this church.

—West Zion Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas: The trustees have installed another cooking range in the kitchen of the meetinghouse. The choir is planning an exchange program with the Alexanderwohl Men's Chorus. Rev. W. F. Unruh recently attended a joint meeting of the church unity committees of the General Conference and the Central Illinois Conference. This church recently received a new grand piano. Anne Krehbiel gave a concert of dedication.

—Alberta Community Church, Portland, Oregon: The Sunday evening services are being attended very well. The singspiration with the orchestral accompaniment at the opening of the service has been a real inspiration and contribution to the evening services.

—Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, Wichita, Kansas: Dr. H. A. Fast showed pictures of C.P.S. camp life on March 19. This congregation is working steadily to enlarge its church building fund. Members are requested to give at least fifty cents a Sunday for this in addition to other gifts that they make for this purpose. Miss Augusta Schmidt, returned missionary from India, spoke at a recent meeting of the Friendship Circle.

—Subscribers to "The Mennonite" constitute about 11 per cent of the membership of our conference. The 100 Per Cent Church Paper Plan has produced a substantial increase in subscribers, but there are still many homes which do not get one of our church papers. The Church of the Brethren, which has used such a 100 per cent plan for its paper for a number of years, has a subscription list that totals about 22 per cent of its conference membership. This indicates the possibilities in the plan.

—The Board of Publication is sending "The Mennonite" free of charge to all Mennonite C.P.S. camps and units.

—"There are over 10,000 that are listed in IV-E class; of these some 7,000 are in C.P.S. camps. There are around 2,400 C.O.'s in prison. Although the figure is not known, it has been estimated that about 75,000 C.O.'s are doing non-combatant work, most of these in the Army Medical Corps." —Grace Church Messenger

WOMEN'S ADVISORY BOARD LISTS PROJECTS

The Women's Advisory Board of Bluffton College wishes to make mention of their appreciation for the cooperation of the women's groups of the various churches. Our hope is that we have the interest and support of all the societies in our conferences. As church women we can in this way have the wonderful privilege to further Christian education. Our projects for the coming year are needful and most interesting

The 100 Per Cent Church Paper Plan

What Is It?

The 100 Per Cent Church Paper Plan is a means of providing either The Mennonite or the Bundesbote, or both, for every home on the church-roll. It is a plan by which either or both of these papers can be had at a reduction of 50 cents from the regular renewal price. It is a plan by which the church makes itself responsible for the payment of all subscriptions each year. Thus far it is the best plan that we know of for putting a church paper into every home of a church.

Why Have It?

Let the pastors of three churches which have adopted this plan and a young man in C.P.S. give you the answer:

Pastor No. 1 says:

"I believe the 100 Per Cent Plan has a number of important advantages. For one thing it helps every household of the congregation to feel that it belongs to a larger fellowship than the local church, and it helps to keep before it, all the various interests and undertakings of the conference.

Secondly, it helps to keep the entire church awake to the dangers and problems that confront the Mennonite Church. The editorials often point out problems that face Christendom and especially the Mennonite Church.

Thirdly, it is a great help in molding Christian sentiments and convictions. When people read of the united stand which large Mennonite groups are taking it comes as an encouragement to each home to stand true.

Fourthly, when a church paper goes into every home, we have the assurance that every home may be informed on the important conference matters if they will but take the time to read the paper.

Fifthly, our church papers carry many helpful suggestions on improving ourselves in our church work. As people read these they are being prepared for forward steps in the church.

Sixthly, the jottings in the paper keep the church people informed on what other churches are doing and this helps to keep up the bond of interest among the churches.

In the seventh place, there is so much spiritual food that is brought to every home each week through the paper that in case a family cannot attend church services on Sunday for some reason, it still may find spiritual encouragement through reading the paper. It gives the pastor the feeling that some definitely helpful reading material goes to each home every week."

Pastor No. 2 says:

"The thought of introducing the 100 Per Cent Plan at our church began with a survey made of the congregation by the pastor in preparation for his annual report to the business meeting. One of the items in that survey was decidedly enlightening, for it revealed that only a small percentage of the families represented in the congregation were subscribers to one of our church papers. When this matter was called to the attention of the deacons, it was decided that an effort should be made to improve along this line. In fact, a motion was made and carried that the church be urged to adopt the 100 Per Cent Plan.

There were several reasons why such action was taken. In the first place, we felt that we could hardly expect to maintain our Mennonite heritage without an informed people. The only means whereby we can keep abreast with our Mennonite work and activities is by reading reports concerning it. Evidently our people were not getting this information, since they did not subscribe to the papers. Then also we have people who feel that other denominations are doing all the great things in carrying on the cause of Christ and that our own Mennonites are doing little. Reading the paper would give them an opportunity to see evidence of real work by our own people. Another reason which might be advanced in support of the 100 Per Cent Plan is that it gives our people a more intelligent basis for constructive, helpful criticism. Knowing what is happening and what is not being done helps in one's judgments. Reading the paper certainly ought to help bind together a congregation, for it should help to mould the thinking of all along the same line and also should give a common basis for discussion of the problems of the conference."

Pastor No. 3 says:

"When Paul admonished Timothy to 'attend to reading,' he had, no doubt, the Scriptures in mind. But next to the Scriptures today should come the church papers, not the newspapers. The daily newspapers have their place, and we need them, but they are not next to the Bible. The best home mission work that a church can do is to provide each home with one of our church papers and to urge young and old to read it in order that they may get a taste for such solid Christian food.

Unless we succeed in this, our conference work will suffer, especially, home and foreign missions. We have tried the plan for one year, and we like it. Should our church fail in this for the next year, it would be a great disappointment to me as pastor, because I would have to take much time in my sermons to tell of the conference work, and still the church would not get it all, because many cannot attend church regularly. (This church has not failed; it's continuing the plan.) "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he.' If the secular dailies absorb too much of our thinking, we become secular in our heart and starve spiritually. Too much secular reading even spoils the taste for Bible reading. Not so church paper reading. It increases the taste for Bible reading, and oh how we need this!"

A Young man in C.P.S. says:

"Our pastor for years has been trying to create in us a desire to read our church papers. Time and again at every opportunity he urged us, especially the young people, to read them more. Now while in C.P.S. our church papers have begun to mean very much to me; not only do they help me to keep informed on our church activities, but I also appreciate the spiritual thoughts that are expressed in the articles."—rw.

"I Had to Become Small"

There was a mixture of earnestness and kindness in his look and tone. His friendliness seemed to be rooted—not in selfish desires—but in genuine love for God and man. He talked simply and he acted simply. There was no attempt at pretension. His eyes sought the center of yours.

Soon our talk was about the things of the spirit; he seemed hungry about them. Thus his invitation to me for a meal and a time of fellowship in his home came quite naturally. Happily I accepted, for I yearned to learn from him.

That evening I came to a small, pretty house. Inside it was neat and clean. No magazines of un-Christian tone struck my eye. The conversation was soon at the things that really matter.

Yes, they had been church members and professing Christians for many years, but about three years ago they had been saved. Pieced together with what he had said in the morning, his story was: He used to go into the beer-joints." His wife and he used to go to the movies. They were too restless to spend the evenings quietly at home. Now they enjoyed being at home in the evenings. They had so much to talk about. He would sit reading the Bible, and then they would talk about it. Now they enjoyed talking about their religious experience. In their approaches to others, they sometimes were rebuffed. But they felt a deep concern for the souls of those that gave no evidence of being saved.

About three years ago the change had come into their lives. At least three times before in his life he had been under deep conviction by the Holy Spirit, but he had not yielded. When he would wake up in the morning and see a minister walk, he would think to himself that he still had time. In those days he and his wife tried to avoid ministers. Special services were held in their church, and he again came under deep conviction. He wrestled within himself for a number of days, and his wife wanted to know what was wrong with him. I saw clearly that "I had to become small," the husband now related.

And "small" he had become. The selflessness of this man now was good evidence of the change that he described. He had become "small" and now one felt the kingdom of heaven in his home. His wife too had become saved after his experience, and their daughter too had yielded herself to Christ. During part of our visit, the daughter, who is in the sixth grade, played hymns on the organ upstairs. As she sang while playing, her voice rang sweet and clear in love to Christ. Happy home where Christ is loved!

If I remember correctly Dwight L. Moody once said that pride keeps more people out of the kingdom of God than any other sin. Jesus said, "Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." ."I had to become small." what an inspiring testimony!—rw.

REPRESENTATIVES OF CHRIST

The eleven Mennonite Conscientious Objectors at the Lima State Hospital for the Criminally Insane, Lima, Ohio, like those in many similar institutions for the mentally ill all over the United States are endeavoring to show as best they can Christ's attitude toward those whose minds are ruled by unclean spirits.

This hospital is the only one of its kind in the state and to it are sent all of the state's criminals found or believed to be insane and also those deranged persons in ordinary mental hospitals who become too violent to be handled there. Practically all of the crimes a diseased mind is capable of conjuring up have been committed by one or more of the 1100 patients here.

Two of us were assigned to office work and come in contact with the patients only when given special duties but the remainder were given jobs in which they supervise patients at work of some kind, some highly skilled.

We are also grateful for the opportunity to render more service to the church than we could at camp. We have presented programs in a number of churches in the vicinity and taken part in other services, as well as teaching Sunday School classes, and have made friends in this way. Lima is located in a section that has many Mennonite churches and is only twelve miles from Bluffton.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

CHINESE CHRISTIANS CARRY ON KAICHOW, HOPEI PROVINCE, NORTH CHINA

The following is an extract from Miss Marie J. Regier's letter written to me November 30, 1941, but received about two months later. I had mislaid it and so could not make use of it until now, when I placed it again. I think the following is of interest to us all, since it comes from our own General Conference field and shows how the Lord has prepared for Himself workers in His so needy field. —Aganetha Fast.

High School Prayer Group

Miss Regier writing: "You know I suggested to some of the girls in Hua Mei High School that we have an informal little prayer group in my office, praying especially for Hua Mei. I said I did not want anyone to be urged, merely give the invitation. The first few Sundays there were four or five who came. I said that we wanted to pray for a larger attendance but we wanted only those who really wanted to and believed there was power in prayer. After some of the girls had been baptized, I suggested that these girls be invited again. The next Sunday there were seven or eight, and the following Sunday, when I could not be there, there were eleven. They had their prayer meeting all the same, whether I was there or not. The next Sunday there were fourteen. I was so thrilled and so much impressed with the fact that, after all, I wasn't doing anything. All I did was to give the opportunity for quiet prayer. God's Spirit does the rest."

Chinese Pastor Takes Responsibility

One day I went out with Rev. Li Kuang Ming to San Li Tien, where Mr. Wang Chi An is Evangelist. There were both baptism and communion services. A little bit of a church, but everything was so reverent and the messages and ceremonies so impressive! Rev. Li Kuang Ming usually gives good messages. He preached for the communion service and Mr. Wang Chi An preached for the baptismal services. (Wang Chi An is third year English). While the baptismal candidates were still on their knees we three and a Mr. Li, who is a student of the Bible school, but comes from this place, sang a song. Then just after communion we sang another song, but in parts, base and soprano. The latter was "My Jesus I Love Thee."

Thus far Miss Regier's letter. I think it will give us a glimpse of the capability of our native workers to go on with the work, begun by the missionaries and which they now must carry on alone. We want to continue to remember them in our prayers, for they are our brothers and sisters in Christ and our co-workers in the same work we have been called into.

MISSION FIELDS AT HOME

Frazer, Montana

Dear Brethren in the Lord:

Of late I have had a special burden for a particular mission field and I am writing this hoping that some one else might share the burden with me and that the possibilities of the field might be investigated.

So often our thoughts are in the foreign mission field that we forget that the source of missions is at home.

We have in our nation a number of large relocation centers for Japanese. Many of them are still following the pagan customs of their ancesters. What are we doing about bringing them the gospel.

It is a known fact that the native missionary is the most effective and efficient missionary. The majority of the young Japanese are still very able to speak their mother tongue. Would it not be entirely in accordance with God's missionary program if these Japanese were at the present time reached and trained for Christ to go back to the land of their ancestors, after this war is over, and bring them the gospel?

And what about the prisoners of war located in our nation? Would it be possible to do something for them spiritually?

According to my information we have a number of missionary candidates for the foreign field who are waiting for the doors to open. Why not give them some actual training here at home? It seems to me that the Lord has made it exceptionally handy for us by sending the needy ones right into our home territory. If there is somebody who has some definite information concerning these fields would he be so kind as to pass the information along?

Sincerely in Him,
Rev. Elmer J. Dick

Dear Lord, the world has known so many wars,
It bears such bitter, deep and lasting scars,
Reach out Thy hand, O Maker of us all;
Bend down Thy listening ear and hear our call
In this, and every other threatening hour.
Only Thy might, dear Lord, only Thy power
Can change the hearts of men—can bid them cease
Their avarice and greed—and bring us peace.

Lord of the nations, let no nation reign
To crush another. Free us from the stain
Of blood and slaughter—let us not forget
The living, kind example Thou hast set.
God help us live the Golden Rule so high
That its bright words will flame against the sky:
'Do Unto Others As Ye Would That They
Do Unto You,' and then will come the day—
The crushed will rise, the bound will find release,
And we shall know the blessedness of peace.

Post-War Needs And Plans Of C.P.S. Men

J. Winfield Fretz

(Brother Fretz presented some of the facts in the following article at the recent Bethel College Bible Week. Thereupon he was asked whether the same material couldn't be presented in our church papers. Upon the editor's request Brother Fretz writes, "Enclosed is the special article you asked for, dealing with the preliminary survey of the C.P.S. men's post-war needs. This is the first release of the official findings of the survey. The material in the M.C.C. Bulletin several weeks ago was not final. I hope you will find this of interest and likewise I hope that it will be of value to the readers.")

I. Mutual Aid A Scriptural Principle

It is a Scriptural principle that Christian people should bear one another's burdens both spiritually and materially. Galatians 6:2 says, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." When certain widows in the early church were in need the Apostle said, "Look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business," Acts 6:3. When the Christians at Jerusalem suffered from a dearth those at Antioch brought them relief, Acts 11:27-29. In I John 3:17 we are told "But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" In I Timothy 5:8 we read, "But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."

II. A Traditional Mennonite Principle

From the very beginning of the Mennonite church concern for all members of the brotherhood was characteristic of our church. In early days in case of property loss by fire or other losses, the brotherhood raised the money necessary to help the one who suffered. Likewise, assistance was given in times of sickness and death. Only within the last century has this plan of Christian mutual aid been increasingly more neglected within our church.

III. Survey Results

Since the men in C.P.S. camps receive no pay from the government either for themselves or their dependents, and they will not receive any financial assistance in the form of mustering out pay, bonus, pension or aid toward vocational guidance and future education. Therefore if the C.P.S. men are to be given any assistance, the brotherhood to which they belong must do it. The Mennonite Central Committee through its representatives has been instructed that the Mennonite church throughout the country wishes to assume this plan of mutual aid and Christian responsibility for those of its members who have consistently testified to the faith during this war. A preliminary survey as to the needs and the plans of the men in the C.P.S. units has been completed. Of 2,870 questionnaires sent out 2,191 or 76 per cent have been returned and tabulated to date. The following are the questions and the answers for both the General Conference men and for the total returns of all C.P.S. men in M.C.C. administered camps. There are a total of 496 General Conference men in the CP.S. program as of January 31, 1944, and 394, or 79 per cent, answered the following questions:

Are you planning to continue your education after CPS?

	Gen'l Conf. C.P.S.		Total M.C.C.-C.P.S.
	No.	Percent	No.	Percent
Yes	103	26%	472	21%
No	234	59%	1327	61%
Uncertain	16	4%	84	4%
No Answer	41	11%	308	14%

Check the one occupational classification which comes closest to the field in which you want to do your life work.

	No.	Percent	No.	Percent
Farming	242	61%	1308	60%
Business	36	9%	194	9%
Teaching	27	7%	123	5%
Religious Work	29	8%	135	6%
Office Work	5	1%	42	2%
Skilled Trade	24	6%	192	9%
Factory Work	5	1%	60	3%
All Others	16	4%	61	3%
No Answer	10	3%	76	3%

As anticipated, the largest number of C.P.S. men prefer to return to farming for their life work. It is worthy to note that the experience in C.P.S. camp away from home and in contact with other influences did not result in turning many from the occupation of their parents and their previous life work. Another factor of significance is the large number interested in religious work. It is evident that C.P.S. experience had a decided influence in leading men to choose this form of service because if these men had had this interest before entering camp it is likely that most of them could have had a 4D classification as ministers or ministerial students. Twenty-nine men, or 22 per cent, of those interested in religious work are General Conference men, distributed by conferences as follows: Western 17; Middle 7; Northern 3; Eastern 1; and Pacific 1. The fact that only 3 per cent of the total want to engage in factory work and 3 per cent in various forms of other work is also significant because it indicates that there has not been a large shift of interest from rural urban areas and occupations.

Do you need financial assistance to get started in the work you want to do?

	Gen'l Conf. C.P.S.		Total M.C.C.-C.P.S.
	No.	Percent	No.	Percent
Yes	213	54%	938	43%
No	148	37%	973	44%
Uncertain	16	4%	101	5%
No Answer	17	5%	179	8%

Would you welcome financial assistance from your branch of the Church if available on a loan basis, at a low rate of interest and to be repaid over a long period of time?

Yes	246	62%	1107	51%
No	98	25%	614	28%
Uncertain	14	4%	88	4%
No Answer	36	9%	382	17%

The last two questions are related but they are not identical. The first simply asks whether the men need financial assistance. It was asked to reveal the size of the financial problem of C.P.S. men. Many of these men may have sources from which they can secure the assistance needed. The second of these questions was asked to find out how many men would welcome assistance from their church or from any other agency designated by their church, such as the M.C.C. The question does not say that the church will give assistance on the condition stated. It was meant to show the churches both their opportunity and responsibility for rendering assistance to the C.P.S. men. The answers to these two questions will enable churches to develop plans in accordance with the situations that confront them.

If you need financial assistance check for which of the following purposes:

	Gen'l Conf. C.P.S.		Total M.C.C.-C.P.S.
	No.	Percent	No.	Percent
To further my education	66	17%	253	11%
To buy stock and equip. for farm	131	36%	608	28%
To buy a farm	49	12%	240	11%
To get started in business	29	7%	157	7%
Other purposes	4	1%	28	1%
No Answer	148	37%*	1049	48%*

*The reason the totals are more than 394 or more than 100% is that some gave more than one answer.

The answers to this question simply indicate the areas of greatest need. A large number of men felt that they did not need assistance.

Do you need guidance and information to help you get started in the work you want to do?

	Gen'l Conf. C.P.S.		Total M.C.C.-C.P.S.
	No.	Percent	No.	Percent
Yes	109	28%	496	23%
No	232	58%	1293	59%
Uncertain	3	1%	33	1%
No Answer	50	13%	369	17%

If you need guidance or information, check for which of the following purposes:

Where to find a job	20	5%	105	5%
Where to find a farm to rent	29	7%	125	6%
Where to find a farm to buy	30	8%	124	5%
Where to find business opportunities	12	3%	79	4%
Where to continue education	25	6%	103	5%
Others	6	2%	25	1%
No Answer	272	69%	1630	74%

The last two questions were asked to discover the number of men needing other than financial assistance. It is significant that a large number of men thought they needed no assistance. Those who did express a need should be given careful consideration, especially in such situations where the investment of funds is required to satisfy the needs. Educational institutions will want to take note that over a hundred men want guidance as to where to continue their education.

After you are released from Selective Service would you prefer to settle in:

	Gen'l Conf. C.P.S.		Total M.C.C.-C.P.S.
	No.	Percent	No.	Percent
Your home community	268	68%	1566	72%
A non-Mennonite community	5	1%	45	2%
Any Mennonite community were there is opportunity to earn a living	84	21%	337	15%
A newly established community primarily of C.P.S. men	17	5%	67	3%
No Answer	20	5%	176	8%

The answers to this question should be very encouraging to the home churches and communities. It is evident that C.P.S. has deepened the love of the home community. Many of the men expressed a preference for other Mennonite communities only because they might offer a better opportunity for earning a living. The number wanting to settle in a non-Mennonite community was to a large extent determined by non-Mennonite men in M.C.C. camps who filled out the questionnaires. A reflection on the value of the C.P.S. experience in terms of a way of life and the friendships that were developed is indicated in answer to the question regarding the establishment of a new community of C.P.S. men. In addition to those who gave that as their primary preference an equally large number indicated a secondary preference in such a community.

This preliminary survey will be followed by a more intensive study of the particular needs of those who expressed a preference for some form of assistance. The results of this study should impress upon the Mennonite Church the general areas of its young men's needs. Each local congregation would do well to discuss these findings and see how it could best fulfill the Scriptural injunction of bearing its brethren's burdens and so carry out the law of Christ.

THE ORIGIN of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America. On May 28, 1860, the first session of conference was held at West Point, Iowa. Only three churches participated in this first conference. In the course of time other congregations from various States of the Union and Canada joined. From this small beginning has grown the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America. By God's grace this body is constantly growing. The statistical report shows that the conference is now made up of 180 congregations with a total membership of 36,032.

The Founders of Our Faith

By J. C. Kaufman

I believe in God the Father Almighty: Maker of heaven and earth: and in Jesus Christ his only Son, our Lord; who was conceived by the Holy Spirit, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried; he descended into hell; the third day he rose again from the dead; he ascended into heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. I believe in the Holy Spirit; the holy General Church; the communion of saints; the forgiveness of sins; the resurrection of the body; and the life everlasting. Amen.

If we would go out on the street and would inquire of any amount of people we could meet, do you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, we would get an affirmative answer. There is a general belief in the person of Jesus Christ. With many it is a mere profession, while with others it is a conviction of the heart; it is a living experience.

The foundation of our faith rests in God the Father Almighty, the creator of heaven and earth. In this foundation we find one word which arrests our attention, it is the word "Father." How did a sinful man come into this relationship with the creator of this universe? Who told us that this holy, righteous eternal God is the Father of a poor lost sinner saved by grace? This relationship has been effected through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Who is this Jesus of Nazareth whom you call Christ your Lord? If some one should say I do not believe in the Bible and I do not believe in Jesus Christ of Nazareth how would we answer and what argument would we use? In such a case I would offer three facts.

First, Jesus Christ is the most conspicuous person in the human race; secondly that there is a mystery involved in his peculiar fame, and thirdly that there is an explanation to the mystery.

I. Jesus Christ is the most conspicuous person in the human race.

Suppose we begin with our investigation of the person of Jesus Christ in the world's greatest historic work, The Encyclopedia Brittannica, which we might say is a library of secular wisdom. The greatest historians and literary men have made this work possible. These men do not represent any one religious faith. Do these writers give us a record of Jesus Christ? They certainly do. Such who have investigated this record say that the record of Jesus Christ receives more space in that great work than any record of any other man living at any time in the history of mankind. They tell us that great statesmen, kings, military leaders, artists, and scientists all fade into the background when compared with Jesus Christ.

The periodicals and the papers of our day have often asked outstanding literary leaders for the names of ten or twelve outstanding men of all time, and in most instances the name of Jesus Christ heads the list. Today it is true that we have more literature concerning Jesus Christ than we have of any other person who ever lived on this earth.

The historians are not able to write a history of the human race without giving Him the first place. The artist and the poets find Him the center of their inspiration. If we spend several hours in our own art institute in Chicago we will find that Jesus of Nazareth demands a place in almost every room. This is my personal observation. The same, we are told, holds true of all the art galleries over the world.

In the field of painting Jesus of Nazareth demands the most prominent place; we have pictures covering his entire life:

1. We have a picture of the Angel and Mary. The Annunciation.
2. We have a picture of the stable and the manger. His birth.
3. We have a picture of the shepherds worshipping Him.
4. We have a picture of the wise men doing him homage.
5. We have a picture of Mary and the Child. Madonna.
6. We have a picture of Jesus in the temple, a lad twelve years old.
7. We have a picture of him in the carpenter shop under the shadow of the cross.
8. We have a picture of Christ in Gethsemane.
9. We have pictures of his trial, the crucifixion, the resurrection and the ascension.

I maintain that in the field of painting Jesus Christ occupies more space than any other man in any age of human history.

If we enter the field of music we do not only find that Jesus Christ occupies more space in the songs and hymns than any other man in human history, but think of the revolution he has brought about in music even if he never composed a song. Compare our beautiful hymns adoring Him with the doleful wailing of heathen darkness in the minor key. In history, in literature, in art, in music Jesus Christ stands alone, he has no competitors.

II. There is a mystery involved in His peculiar fame.

Why should Jesus Christ be such a widely known character? What do we know about Him that makes Him so famous? Let me enumerate what we know about Him.

1. He was a Jew, and the Jews in his day were a poor downtrodden and despised people who lived their life mostly in bondage.
2. His parents were just common and poor people.
3. He lived in a little despised town of which it was said: Can anything good come out of Nazareth?
4. He lived among the common people.

What My Internship Meant to Me

By Jacob T. Friesen

In II Timothy we read the words of a veteran minister of the Gospel directed to Timothy. "Study to show thyself approved unto God a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth." These words contain the tender feelings of a fatherly counselor arising out of an intimate fellowship during years of joint ministry. The letters to Timothy suggest to me a typical pastor and interne relationship. During my days of internship I have often placed myself in Timothy's position and I have read with great profit the words of instruction coming from the heart of the early minister of the Gospel.

My brief experience as an interne has been challenging and most enriching. I have had opportunity to do many of the tasks that normally fall to the minister. Teaching daily vacation Bible school and Young People's Sunday School classes has given me an opportunity to work with the children and young people. Conducting the regular Sunday services in the absence of the regular pastor has challenged the best that I in God's strength had to offer. My schedule on these Sundays consisted of teaching the Young People's Sunday School class, conducting the morning worship which included a children's sermon and a regular sermon. The evening service included a regular worship service with special music or a special program. One Sunday I remember in particular it was about 100 degrees F. It seemed unbearable, but that was a part of the menu since we couldn't have good fruit without hot weather. However, the physical discomfort never rivaled the spiritual benefits. God was very real to me in those days and in addition to the practical experience of doing a minister's task my personal Christian life was stimulated and enriched through prayer and meditation.

During the week I did everything from picking peaches to making sick calls. I well remember my first call. It was on an elderly lady who had been bed-ridden for many years. It didn't take long to get acquainted. She soon discovered that I would gladly carry on the visit in the German and when she discovered that I could speak Low-German, she was completely at ease and all barriers were removed. During that brief visit she told me of her brother who was very sick. All I could do was to lend a sympathetic ear. After a short scripture and prayer I left, greatly encouraged by the experience but feeling that I had been able to do little for her. God spoke to me as I made these various calls, and usually I left the bedside of the sick one enriched in my personal Christian experience.

Though I feel keenly my inability to properly evaluate my experience I want to say that work as an Interne has given me an unusual opportunity to experience pastoral work under the direct supervision and constant counseling of an experienced minister. It has shown me the challenge of the ministry and my inability to meet it apart from the power of God that we have in Christ Jesus. Above all it has deepened my conviction that inspite of difficulties and disappointments involved, God has chosen me to be his messenger. With this assurance I trust my future to Him, pledging myself to do His will to the best of my understanding.

It was requested that I devote a large part of my paper to my impressions of serving as an Interne, and to spend some time giving what I think are the advantages and disadvantages involved in this type of training. My general reaction to the idea of Internships has been very favorable. I think every young minister ought to have the opportunity of serving at least in one church as an Interne or assistant before he accepts a regular charge. If you will pardon my boldness, I would like to say that I think the experienced ministers of our conference owe their fellow ministers of tomorrow a period of instruction and personal counsel. The fruits of such an experience will be fully realized only after these young ministers assume their individual charges. It is true that the minister must have the cooperation of his church before he can sponsor such a plan, but the first step in this direction is to speak a word in favor of such arrangements.

Internships do, of course, involve some dangers and difficulties. There is danger that the Interne may assume the role of a handyman giving occasion for other members of the congregation to shirk their responsibilities. There is also danger of developing a sense of competition between pastor and Interne. It does involve some expense which each church must arrange for in some way. It also demands some special effort on the part of the regular minister.

The advantages, however, are much more numerous:

1. It gives an inexperienced minister first-hand experience under supervision.
2. It brings new life and spirit into the church.
3. It challenges the standing minister as well as the Interne for more thorough-going work.
4. It gives the pastor an opportunity to emphasize fields which he was formerly too busy to look after.
5. It relieves the pastor of some of his duties. This might have the same effect as playing the handyman in the church, but it need not.
6. It introduces the young minister to the Mennonite constituency.

Jacob T. Friesen, a member of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, participated in his first interneship last summer. Now he is serving in another one sponsored by the First Mennonite Church, Halstead, Kansas. Brother Friesen plans to attend seminary next year.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Rev. Gerhard Friesen, Newton, Kansas

APRIL 16—"And if Christ is in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the spirit is life because of righteousness." Romans 8:10.

Where Christ is in control the body, i.e., the selfish desires, is dead. The spirit, because it is one with Christ, is life. It wills what is right before God. The spirit wills what Christ wills. It is moved by His love, His desire to save, to help, to lift. Is Christ in me? Does my life show that His program is my program? May His grace work in me that all I do is not I, but Christ in me.

APRIL 17—"This is my Son, my chosen; hear ye Him." Luke 9:35.

God's command was to listen to Jesus. There are many voices to which we can listen, but the highest authority directs us to the only one that is safe to follow. We either may listen to Jesus, the Christ, have faith in Him and live, or refuse to hear his voice and follow the road to destruction, as the world today demonstrates so gruesomely. Am I willing to hear His voice and let Him enter my life to rule it completely to His glory?

APRIL 18—"If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." Mark 8:34.

Jesus calls us to follow Him. He had just told His disciples that His was the way of the cross. To this Peter objected. Then Jesus makes the above statement, indicating that following Him means doing just what He did; living the will of God with a passion for souls without regard to the opposition and suffering that inevitably will follow. That is each one's cross. May I be found a willing follower of this way.

APRIL 19—"What manner of person ought ye to be in all holy living and godliness." II Peter 3:11.

Peter reminds his readers that it is the grace of God which has delayed the judgment day, but it will come unexpectedly. This grace, therefore, should prompt us to be the kind of persons we would want to be when He appears. Holy living and god-likeness is what Peter recommends for such a person. Is this true of me? May the Christ that leads into all truth remind me continually of the high calling in Christ Jesus and help me be the person I ought to be.

APRIL 20—"For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus made me free from the law of sin and of death." Romans 8:2

How strikingly Paul has described this experience in one short sentence. Free from the law of sin and death, but not until one has discovered what slavery sin causes and what joyous freedom there is through the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, who would ever want to go back to that slavery? Life in Christ Jesus—would that all men could see it in me, and be drawn to Him, the fountain.

APRIL 21—"They that are of Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with the passions and the lusts thereof." Gal. 5:24.

They that are of Christ—am I one of them, or do I only pretend?—they that are of Christ Jesus have, not would like to, but have crucified, nailed to the cross, outlawed, the lower, the selfish cravings and desires. Does that include the desire to be in good standing with my so-called patriotic neighbors at the cost of being faithful to Christ in times like these? Christ has no hands but mine do his loving deeds. Christ has no lips but mine to tell the world its needs.

APRIL 22—"For the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth Life." II COR. 3:6.

How grateful we are that God has spoken to us through His Son. The law spoke only in terms of commands and condemnation and had no power to help us. But in Jesus we experience the inflowing power of the spirit of grace, forgiveness, and love, and the believer become one. That is the power of the spirit of love. With His spirit in us we receive life, a life that finds joy in fruit-bearing. May this union with Him evermore increase in me.

WHAT MY INTERNSHIP MEANT TO ME

7. It gives the church a direct and conscious part in the training of their future ministers to which they point back with a sense of pride, which I think is usually wholesome.

I believe the time has come when the Mennonite church may launch out on a program of giving their young men in training experience in the field. No time seems more appropriate than the present. With many of our ministerial students required to stay in training for the summer months it would be possible to do creditable work during the summer as a part of his ministerial requirements. Why can we not make a one-summer internship a requirement for ordination into the gospel ministry. Our young men need the best training to meet the problems of tomorrow and this experience as an intern is a vital part of that training. There seems to be an unusual opportunity to make organized internships a vital part of our ministerial training.

(The above was given as a paper at the last Western District Ministers' Conference.)

THE MESSAGE FOR THE HEATHEN

First, it must be the gospel. Second, it must be a gospel experienced and witnessed to by those who have experienced it. Third, it must be a gospel declared by men who stake their lives on its truth. Fourth, it must be a gospel declared in language and thought-forms intelligible to the people. Hence, the necessity of a trained, native ministry. Fifth, it must be the gospel declared in the power of the Holy Spirit, who alone can convict the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. Sixth, it must be a gospel supported by believing prayer.—Selected

Christian Ideals of Social Purity

By a Sister

When we think of social purity we usually think it in connection with young people—boys and rls, young men and women.

When God created man He said, "It is not good hat the man should be alone; I will make an help meet for him." So man was created a social being. n the normal development of boys and girls, the de- re for companionship of the opposite sex grows with ears. Brother John Mumaw, in his book, Growing in- Life and Love, says this, "This craving for compan- nship is nothing unworthy. Love itself is pure and corrupted only by lust. The cultivation of a pure ffection makes a large contribution to the fine art f living. Love enhances the personality. It paves he way for the enjoyment of life and is the source f much happiness."

Christian boys and girls should choose their as- ociates from those of like faith. This Christian ackground should give them much in common. In he Christian home, children receive their first lessons n purity, obedience, and reverence for godly things. odly young people will not enjoy themselves in the ompany of impure or unclean associates. Parents hould set the example for their children in speech nd conduct.

"In the social life, the character of young people s brought out. A good character is, 'a pearl of great rice.' It is not a virtue that can be put on for pecial occasions. It is not simply learning a few ules of etiquette. It is a spiritual development. It riginates in the inner soul of man. It is written on he human countenance. It is the essence of courtesy nd the father of human kindness. Character is uilt by God."

Girls quite often set the standards for boys with whom they associate. Some girls are deceived into hinking that boys admire a lightminded, frivolous ype of girl. But they are usually mistaken. A ight-thinking young man wants only a pure girl for life companion.

Many a young man wants to be pure in mind and action, but he may fail because of the influence girls yield, perhaps ignorantly or unconsciously. I wish all young girls might realize that dress has a great deal to do with the problem of social purity. We often hear it said these days, that young and good- ooking girls are not safe on the streets, especially at night. Yet they tell us that Salvation Army girls are never molested in such places. Can you tell why? One writer says, "Plant roses in your garden of life, girls. Plant them early so that as your memories take you back to the time of your girlhood you need not fear the sting of the thorns." "Young people should never sell their purity for a mess of pottage."

"Strive to keep pure. First because God demands it. Second, you owe it to yourself and to your posterity. Third, your friends will appreciate it. Fourth, that your conscience may be clean before God and your life strong before men."

"Five good rules for Christian young people are these:

Read good literature.
Discipline your thinking.
Guard your conversation.
Be careful what you do.
Keep in vital touch with God.

The last rule is essential for the other four. It will determine your reading, your thinking, your speech, and your behaviour."

"Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." Prov. 4:23.

Youths Christian Companion

Civilian Public Service

IN A MENTAL HOSPITAL

By Glenn Gering

There seem to be a great many people who have erroneous ideas concerning work in state mental institutions. The work, though different from any kind of work most C.P.S. men were doing before they came to places of this kind, is not really unpleasant or revolting. Our days are filled with service to people who are less fortunate than we, and one gets a great deal of satisfaction from doing work of this kind. We can see the results of our efforts almost as soon as any particular job is completed. And the amount or good we can do any day of the week is limited mainly by how hard we try and how much good we actually wish to do.

There is something about helping others, working with people—and doing something for them which they are unable to do themselves—that gives one a certain sense of satisfaction. Maybe it just serves to prove the old idea that to be happy you must make others happy. I think it is this principle that makes our work here so satisfying.

Our days are not easy—We work long hours and we work pretty hard. In normal times this hospital has at least one-third more employees than it has now, and in normal times there were fewer patients here. This means that we have to work just so much harder to get everything done. We report for work at 6:00 a. m., and are on duty until 6:00 p.m., though we actually work only nine hours during that time, discounting time off and time for meals. We work seven days and have the eighth day off—that means we work Sundays too, except for every seventh week, when Sunday happens to be our day off. In the period of a year we have the same number of days off as though we had had every Sunday, because every seventh week we get two days off instead of one.

The state hospital here in Harrisburg has about 2,800 patients on the grounds, and covers approximately 1,000 acres of land. Much of this acreage is farm land which is worked by patients, and which supplies the hospital with most of the garden stuff it needs. There are eleven wards on the male side, and thirteen wards on the female side, including an infirmary and a tubercular ward for each side. The patients are classified and put into the proper ward for treatment, where there usually are more patients of a similar type. At present I am working in the violent ward and find it highly interesting. Most of the time the patients are very quiet, and seldom do they seem to deserve the classification of "violent." It is gratifying to see the patients treated so well here. They are dealt with kind understanding and with infinite patience.

Several of the fellows here have told me that they would like to make this kind of work their vocation. Though I don't feel that way myself, I can say this is a wonderful experience, and that I am glad for the opportunity to spend this little while working in a mental institution.

THE CHURCH AND SOCIAL LIFE

"There is not a man in this world but what he needs social contacts in order to be a well-balanced personality. When we think of social life, we think of a friendly, companionable life. For the Christian, in other words, it would mean fellowship. 1 John 1:7

Taking the word 'fellowship' in this light then how can there be such in a church? Who is responsible for it? Is the church supposed to put up all sorts of parties or form clubs so that friendly conversations may take place? Are the young people of the church supposed to put on plays and pageants so that they may learn to know each other better and thus be more sociable? Or are programs going to supply the needs for young people's social life in church?

All these are valuable if carried on in the right spirit. However, there is no better way of having social contacts than by working together with young people. Just as any leader of any organization usually has more work than he can do; so the pastor, the superintendent of the S. S., the choir director, and other leaders in the church surely will have many, many tasks which could be carried on by those who are willing to help. If such tasks, even though small and insignificant at times, wer carried on by the young people of the church, thei interest in church matters would grow because o mutual understandings and church would becom to them a living thing rather than just another social form. Phil. 1:3-5; 2 Cor. 8:1-5."

THESE THINGS ARE OURS

There are some experiences and opportunities Civilian Public Service gives us which can't be taken away Truly God opens doors.

1. To know and to appreciate other denominations
2. To more conscientiously practice returning good for evil.
3. To live with others of our own age group.
4. To learn other men's ways of doing things.
5. To learn how others solve some of the same problems we have.
6. To learn the reactions of a group, to study human nature.
7. To learn to lead and to learn to follow.
8. To learn to accept group standards.
9. To be where one must solve many problems because one cannot evade them without going to prison as a deserter.
10. To build lasting friendships.
11. To worship with others.
12. To study varying levels of mental, physical and spiritual development.
13. To learn to be patient and understanding.
14. To learn to make the best of a situation.
15. To have the benefit of teachers and books.
16. To hear and meet leaders in many walks o life.
17. To learn to be tolerant.
18. To learn to do things—driving a tractor, double-clutching a truck, to do simple surveying, to properl plant a tree, to make a form, to pour good concrete to work safely, to care for the sick, to type, to run a lathe, to build a septic tank, to iron a dress shirt, to bake a cherry pie, to care for a lawn, to build a good fence, to check erosion, to keep irrigation ditches from cutting, to use an axe, to teach a class, to develop a film, even to darn socks and patch trousers
19. To learn to serve others.
20. To learn to be a better Christian.

HELLO BOYS

I can imagine by now some of you boys are saying "Reverend, those are nice ideals you preach but war is hell. You don't know anything about the bloody mess." Well you are right. I don't know anything about it first hand and can only imagine what it is like from those who have been in it. However I do know that the devil is the originator of war and that it is my task to fight against the devilish business, using the weapons of truth, love and justice that God has given me in His Word. I also know that what we need is an army of Christians who will go and spread the gospel of Christ. If one-tenth of the time, money, energy, manpower and goods that we are now using for destruction would have been spent in Christian work for the glory of Christ during the past ten years, I am convinced that we would not have this war. So far people have not been willing to pay the price for peace.

In fairness to you fellows who are compelled to go through these trials, I will in the days ahead put forth my energy to impress people with the need of greater sacrifices for the cause of Christ as the greatest insurance against war.

Denison Selected for Relief-Training Unit

C.P.S. Camp number 18, Denison, Iowa, has been chosen as a relief-training unit for C.P.S. men. Plans are being made to assemble at Denison fifty to seventy-five men from the base camps who have expressed a primary interest in relief service abroad. Denison is the first base camp selected for such a training center. Similar units have been set up on special projects at Ypsilanti, Michigan, Howard, Rhode Island, Beltsville, Maryland, Durham, North Carolina, and Chicago, Illinois.

On Entering Camp

"The following is the testimony of one who knew nothing of C.O.'s, historic peace churches, or C.P.S. when he filled out his questionnaire. He met his first fellow C.O. when he arrived at the camp to which he was assigned.

"This morning I am looking back. Two years ago at this time I was bounding along eighty miles an hour in the City of Denver. It was a cool morning, that June 23, that I boarded the train at Sterling. When the train started to move, I felt my eyes become moist. I looked straight ahead and clutched the papers from the local board sort of like an invoice attached to a shipment.

"I couldn't think because there was nothing to think about. I seemed in mid air. The past was a dream and the future seemed so empty that it almost echoed. Besides, I had been thinking day after day as I stood high on the ladder at home, painting. And I was sure! A few weeks before I had filled out my questionnaire. I can still see the printed words at the bottom of a left-hand page: "ARE YOU CONSCIENTIOUSLY OPPOSED TO WAR?" It was the first time I had ever thought of the issue. If I had ever heard about conscientious objectors in the last war, they meant nothing to me. Civilian Public Service was as foreign as the "Zwiebach' rolls I was to eat and learn to like in camp.

"Are you conscientiously opposed to war? It was a simple question and I answered it. There has never been any doubt in my mind about whether I answered it the way I should have.

"On the train I knew only that someone would be waiting for me in Colorado Springs or I was to call the Civilian Public Service Camp. A certain Albert Gaeddert was to be in charge of us. In my suitcase were packed new work clothes. I figured I'd have plenty of opportunity to use them.

"Wide-eyed I stepped from the train at Colorado Springs. I called information and stammered the name which I had difficulty in remembering. I checked for sure on the Bulletin Selective Service had put out about what to bring along and so forth. Someone from THE CAMP answered. That voice seemed almost like an electric current. I had no idea how far away the camp might be, but I would soon be a part of that camp.

"In fifteen minutes a young fellow, a hand, and a voice came forward with "I'm Roland Bartel." He mentioned something about the camp so I knew who he was. I think he preceded the word, camp, with the letters "C.O.," but that didn't mean anything to me. He said there were thirty-five more men coming that day which made me feel better. We picked up Ezra Shenk and the three of us talked like everything. I wondered about Goshen and Hesston and Bethel. I had never heard of them before.

"We arrived in camp with greetings, bed making, clothes marking, sending of cards home, and then soon heard the supper bell. The process of bells was duly explained. I was still lonely. That evening, though, we gathered together outside and from the Problems of the Sunday School

By Ernest Voth

I shall treat some of the present-day problems of the Sunday School as they affect its purpose and effective execution.

Since time immemorial the home, the school, and the church have contributed their part to the religious instruction of the child. This child becomes in a short time the man and woman and it is only as their instruction is sufficient that they can properly take their places in our churches and communities. Among the Jews we find that father and mother and Sabbath teacher reinforced one another in instruction.

We observe, however, today first the passing of the teaching pastor. The rabbis were not preachers but teachers. The greatest teacher of all times was Christ. He was addressed "teacher" oftener than with other names. In "the Great Commission," His last charge, our Lord twice commanded to teach. The Apostle Paul stipulates that he (the pastor) should be "apt to teach." (I Tim. 3:2). Luther went so far as to say that a clergyman was not fit to be a preacher unless he had first been a teacher. The manifold duties of the present day pastor, coupled with few opportunities because no parochial school is associated with the church, have contributed to the passing of the teaching pastor.

The second problem is that of the passing of the teaching parent. We do not want to underrate the home as a field of Christian education. The home is the world's greatest university, and the most important study in its curriculum is the Bible, but the tragedy in America is the passing of the home.

Our American home was once an industrial center. Today much of this work is done in factories. Thus, the family must seek occupation elsewhere, generally the city, and for that reason the home has lost a great deal of interest. The home often becomes a place to bathe, eat, sleep, and read the newspaper. Amusement places all bid for their share of participation and an evening spent at home becomes a rarity.

But the greatest loss the home has yet sustained, due largely to irregular hours, is the passing of the family altar. A serious failure of parents to provide the all important elementary instruction in the Bible, and direct their family to Christ, is one of the weaknesses of the modern home. Once the home inspired by the church was the center of the spiritual and religious life of the family. This greatest and most sacred of privileges has been delegated to others, one agency being the Sunday School.

Some people, however, who would hold the home responsible for the alarming child delinquency of today—and the home certainly is responsible—must remember that the parents of today were the children of a former generation. Therefore, in thinking of the problems confronting our Sunday School, we must realize that it is much easier to shape the destiny of a child than to change the nature of a parent.

We observe in the third place that one of the problems of the Sunday School is the passing of the Bible from the public school. There was a time when the school teacher was a religious instructor. It is almost unbelievable that our public school system owes its origin to the religious Puritans of colonial days. They came not only for religious freedom; they had that in Holland. They came to America for political reasons such as would enable them to establish their own schools, not only where religion would be taught, but where the end of all secular instruction would be religious growth. The first textbook was the Bible, and large portions were considered "profitable for instruction."

Since those days, however, there has been a quiet influence at work, passive if not active, against the Bible in public schools. Even though constitutional action permitted the reading of the Bible, but, the effort to compromise with the various sects represented, practically nullified its teaching values. Bible stories have left the school readers; Bible memory gems, religious hymns, and daily prayer have gone with the Bible. We find our schools are practically secularized, and anything of a religious nature is rarely found in its curriculum.

The blame for the public school's lack of Christian education must be borne by us who have built them, furnished them, planned the curriculum, appointed the teachers, and instructed them in the things which they were to teach. We have permitted the Bible, the most important subject of all, to slip out of our public schools. The very success of our own educational system is in danger of becoming a menace, for it is a dangerous thing to train a generation mentally and neglect its moral and spiritual culture.

Thus, it is the Sunday School that will give our youth their Christian education and because many a person will have no more than offered here, we must put special emphasis as to what our purpose of maintaining a Sunday School must be.

(An article on the purpose of the Sunday School is to follow.)

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

PLAIN PEOPLE

Originally the Society of Friends, the Church of the Brethren, the Schwenkfelders, and the Mennonites of Eastern Pennsylvania were the people known as the "plain people." Their origins all root back to Europe. They were all small evangelical Christian persecuted bodies who came to Pennsylvania in colonial days in search of economic opportunity and religious freedom, the latter being the most cherished treasure for which they lived.

What They Stood For

They came to be known as "plain people" because of their quiet, industrious, neat, peaceful and simple ways of conducting their affairs. Their primary concern was to do the will of God in every walk of life. The search for the holy life was a daily pursuit and their hunger and thirst after righteousness seemed never to have been satisfied. The fruit of their religion was a way of life characterized by high thoughts and plain living. There was sin and strife, change and confusion, wars and panics in their day, as in ours, but their lives were simple because their philosophy of life was simple. It consisted merely of being obedient to the will of God. Plain living, plain eating, plain clothes were the inevitable result of plain thinking. What the world thought of them, said to them, and did to them by way of ridicule, disdain and scorn mattered little because they were not looking to the world for approval and applause; for approval they looked only to the Almighty. Fashions and fads have no fascination for men in search of holy life, and holy living is what the "plain people" sought after.

Are They Still Plain?

In external matters the Friends have almost completely surrendered their plainness, I know of no Quaker community where distinctive garb is still worn although most of their meeting houses are still plain. Most of the Brethren Churches have conformed to conventional customs except in some cases the head coverings are still worn in worship services by the women. Schwenkfelders have completely surrendered all ear marks of plainness including the principle of non-resistance. Mennonites and Amish are still more plain in externals than any other American religious body but large sections of this body have lost this distinctiveness and the process is still continuing. It is not the loss of plain dress that is so serious as is the loss of that for which the plain dress originally stood. It is the loss of the high thinking and plain living that is serious; it is the desire for conventional fashions and fads and shallow theological ideas rather than the simple practice of holy living that should gravely concern us. The Christian Church was for centuries made up mostly of plain people with a plain theology and a plain way of living. When it gave up those viritues began planting the seeds of the Reformation.

The Foundation of Our Faith

5. He worked at the carpenter's bench or trade.

6. He was uneducated because he was not trained in the schools of his day.

7. The last three years of his life were spent going about ministering to these common people in company with twelve common fishermen as his followers.

8. He never did anything the world calls great.

9. He wrote no books.

10. He composed no songs.

11. He painted no pictures.

12. He fought no battles.

13. He never organized any reform societies for the uplift or salvation of society.

14. At the early age of thirty-three his earthly life was ended by those of his own nation who insisted that He should be crucified.

15. Even more than that: In His crucifixion he was classified with criminals.

If the human story of Jesus of Nazareth is the only story of his life as even some so-called Christians believe then men certainly must have been misled. Our historians, our artists, our literary men, our musicians are grossly deceived. If I look at his human history of thirty-three years and the prominent place he holds in the history of the human race I am mystified. I fail to be able to reconcile it, and I would indeed like to understand this mystery.

III. There is an explanation to this mystery.

Let us consider first of all some of the explanations men have given before we give the true explanation which alone can stand.

(a) The legendary theory. This theory teaches that after Jesus was crucified and buried, the disciples realizing that their reputation was at stake, discussed ways by which they could redeem themselves. They had left their homes and all and had become his disciples because it was their belief that Jesus was the Messiah. They expected he would establish his kingdom and rule on earth and they would share his glory, and now he was dead and all their hopes were shattered. What could they do to justify their faith in him before men? So they concluded to write a story of the life of Jesus setting him forth as a supernatural character. They would say that he came into this world by the way of the virgin birth, and they would claim that he arose from the dead and ascended into heaven. If they could convince the people they would retain their self-respect. Does a theory of this kind satisfy? How long must a man be dead before you can start a legend about him among the people? Can you do it during the life time of his contemporaries? When John Mark wrote his gospel many of his contemporaries were still living. Is it possible that men would make up a legendary story like this and then go forth and die in defense of it?

(b) The second man-made theory is the mystical theory.

We are told by some that Jesus of Nazareth never existed in reality. There was a young Jew by the name of John Mark who went by the name of Mark, who had a great literary ability and he took it upon himself to write a short story or novel and the hero of that story was to be one by the name of Jesus Christ. They say that Mark's story was so realistic that after a few years people actually began to believe that Jesus lived and thus this fictitious character became such a famous character.

Since in those days stories were, most likely, not copyrighted and since others saw how well this story was taking they copied most of Mark's story with a few alterations and additions such as his conception and his birth. The author of this meditation wonders if this is the reason why those who do not believe in the miraculous conception and the virgin birth always ask the question when cornered: Why did Mark not mention the virgin birth?

If Christ was only a fictitious character as some educators claim, then I would ask how about the other characters such as Pontius Pilate, Herod, the Jewish Sanhedrin and others mentioned in Mark's story? Is it not a fact that history records the work of Pilate and others?

(c) Now for the last, the best and the only explanation of this mystery.

The disciples were convinced that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, He had given them ample proof, by His power over disease, nature, the devil, and death. They had seen Him die as no man ever died; they had seen and touched his resurrection body. One day they saw him taken up into heaven, and one day they experienced the marvelous fulfillment of his promise, the coming of the Holy Spirit. And so they lived and served and suffered and died in the blessed faith in the Christ of the Scriptures. Let us not question the Christ of the Scripture, for only from this viewpoint can we understand why He became the outstanding character in history, literature, art, and music. In all His work, past, present, and future He demands the attention of the world.

If we follow up the Apostles Creed concerning our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ we read: Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary.

One of the basic truths in the foundation of the Christian religion is the virgin birth of Jesus Christ; therefore, Christianity is based upon the supernatural. The prophets received supernatural visions and foretold supernatural manifestations of God, and as a fulfillment of their supernatural prophecies Christ came by a supernatural birth.

We are living in an era of scientific rationalism. Men are trying to explain away the supernatural element in the Scriptures. If we study the history of the Christian church we find that in every age there were those who rejected the Bible because of its supernatural claims. But never before were these rejections as bold as in our day. We find this rejection coming from the pulpit as well as the pen.

Bob Ingersol and Thomas Paine would have a theology sound enough for many congregations. In their day they were considered infidels. Christian ministers are called to preach the supernatural message that all men everywhere should believe in the Saviour who was wonderously born.

In our meditation thus far we have recognized Jesus as the outstanding character of all time in history, literature, art, music etc. whose right to this important position is based on the fact that He is God's only begotten Son. But someone will ask, is He God's Son in a more special sense than we? If so, how can this be?

With this question before us let us consider the statement: "Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary." We are always interested in sources, if a man strives for a high and responsible position we ask, who is he?, where does he come from? What is his ancestry and his background?

Questions of this nature in regard to Jesus Christ lead us to the study of the Incarnation. The time when the Word became flesh and dwelt among us. The question before us is: How did the eternal word become flesh? We turn to the Word of God for the answer and there we read how he was conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary.

The earthly life of our Lord Jesus Christ is a divine chain in which no link is to be left out. This divine chain of His human life begins with His miraculous conception; leaving this link out makes this divine chain incomplete. If we begin the life of Christ with his virgin birth we stand before unsolvable questions. How could this be? If He was very God from the beginning how could He be born of a virgin and finding no answer some of us may say: "All we know about Him is that Joseph is his father."

The mother of our Lord was standing before this very same question as you and I, and she asked of the heavenly announcer: "How shall this be seeing I know not a man?" Upon this question the angel bridged the gulf between God and man and said: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

What answer would we give to an honest seeker for truth, based upon our doctrinal statement as to how it came about that Jesus, very God was born of a woman! It is a sad fact that there are an alarmingly large number who call themselves by the name of Christ and admit freely that Mary was the mother of our Lord, but what about His father? There is a current belief that the Holy Spirit is only an influence and that this influence was only connected with the birth of our Lord in so far as it influenced Joseph to become His father.

I. Let us consider then the meaning of the doctrine the Virgin birth.

When God created the human race He created :m male and female and in the process of procrean there must be a union of the two. When Jesus ne into this world this law was set aside; the gelic message is very clear on this, He was conved without a human father; He was supernaturally nceived by the power of the Holy Spirit. This was course a miracle but what of that? If we believe a God omnipotent the creator and sustainer of this at universe then we should have no trouble to beve in the miraculous conception of our Lord.

It is needless to state that the virgin birth is posiely stated in the gospels of Matthew and Luke and you read both of these accounts meditatively you l notice how carefully they have chosen the words d how they change their phraseology to avoid sunderstanding.

II. The reason why we believe in the virgin birth.

I am glad to give you the reason for my own belief this supernatural event. It is the common reason all the Christians of all times. It satisfied their arts; it satisfies mine and I hope yours also, my dear der. We believe because the Scriptures say so.

We said that the only reason we can give why a spised Jew, of low birth and very common surroundis should come to be the most prominent person history, literature, art, and music is because the iptures point him out to be the Son of God. Theree the only reason I can give for my belief in the gin birth is because the Scriptures tell me so. One ument is as good as the other for we have many erences in both the Old Testament as well as the w Testament.

There are some who say that since only two evanists tell us about the virgin birth and the others silent about it, therefore we cannot accept the ord as sufficient proof. To this we must answer it where all is inspired it is not necessary that God uld speak many times. It can easily be explained y Mark and John do not speak of the virgin birth, we want to apply this term to both.

Mark begins his record with the baptism of Jesus. presents Jesus to us as the suffering servant of hovah, and who cares about the birth or genealogy a servant. And as to John, he wrote his gospel eral years after the synoptics were written; he ew what they had written and if they, Matthew and ke, were wrong in what they said about the virgin th, it would surely have been up to him to correct m. But he does nothing of this kind; he gives us ecord which is in perfect harmony with what the ers had written. Furthermore John, upon the reest of Jesus, had taken to his home the mother of Saviour, and without question he had heard from own lips the record of this marvelous conception. may be safely assumed that John with Mary, the ther of Jesus had closely examined the records of tthew and Luke and thus he could write these prond words: "And the Word became flesh and dwelt ong us."

Again some tell us that Paul was silent on this subject and therefore rejected the virgin birth.

Did you ever notice that there is a remarkable silence in the teachings of Paul concerning the parables that Jesus spoke, the miracles he performed, the sermons he preached, and Christ's conversation in general.

Paul, in all his writings is interested mainly in three great facts regarding Christ, his death, his resurrection, and his return. But if we study Paul's writings we cannot conclude otherwise but that he firmly believed in the virgin birth. Read carefully Gal. 4:4 and you will find that only a woman is involved there. And to Timothy he speaks of the mystery of Godliness: "He who was manifested in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, etc. Surely, Paul teaches the virgin birth.

We begin our existence by the way of birth; we do not understand that mystery. Yet it is before our eyes daily, beautiful life at first given to us by the father; then we see that same life later but all marred by sin. Why? Because all that are born by natural generation have inherited from the father a sinful nature, a fact that cannot be denied. In the process of procreation it is proven scientifically that life always comes from the father and the body from the mother. Now if Jesus would have received his life from a human father he would also at the same time have inherited his father's sinful nature. But having been born of the virgin without the intervention of a human father He had no sinful nature. Thus He came into the world not as the son of Joseph, but according to His mother the Son of Man and according to His father the Son of God. For the body comes from the mother but the life from the father.

If we study the Apostles' Creed which is the basis of this article, we find that this creed takes us from His birth directly to His death and here again we find our Lord as an outstanding character different from all others who walked on his earth.

IN MEMORIAM

EDWARD E. MILLER, son of Samuel and Fanny (Luginbill) Miller, was born near Columbus Grove, Ohio, on July 28, 1885, and died January 19, 1944. He was a farmer and sorghum mill operator near Pandora. He was baptized in 1909 and accepted into the St John Mennonite Church. In 1925 he married Mary Wenger, who with the two children, Selma and Paul, now survives him. Living brothers and sisters are: Mrs. David Niswander of Pandora; Mrs. Robert Hartley of Flint, Mich.; Mrs. V. A. Robertson of Rochester, Mich.; Wilbur Miller, of Van Wert; Cyrus of Piper City, Ill.; Samuel and Albert both of Ft. Wayne, Ind.; Charles of Flint, Mich. and Dennis of Detroit.

JOHN J. GRABER, son of Jacob and Marie Graber, was born November 14, 1860 at Kotosuwka, Russia, and died March 12, 1944. With his parents he migrated to America in 1883 and settled with them in the Freeman, South Dakota community. He was baptized in Russia. Upon his arrival here he joined the Salem-Zion Mennonite Church. He married Anna Schrag in 1884. He leaves to mourn his departure his wife, four sons, Jacob of Draper, S. EDWIN LEISY, son of Abraham Leisy, was born February 25, 1870, at Dover, Iowa, and died February 11, 1944, at Paso Robles, California. In 1882 he was baptized by Rev. Christian Showalter. In 1895 he was married to Lena Hege at Wisner, Nebraska. The following year he moved to a farm near Paso Robles. He was active in the First Mennonite Church there and served it as trustee for a number of years.

HENRY H. FUNK, son of Rev. Jacob and Maria Heinrichs Funk, was born on March 8, 1867, in Konteniusfeld, South Russia. In 1875 he migrated to America with his parents and with them settled in the Brudertal community, near Hillsboro, Kansas. In 1885 he was baptized by the Elder Wm. Ewert, Sr., and received into the Brudertal Mennonite Church. He served the church on various occasions as Sunday School teacher and as superintendent, as trustee and as song leader. He served in the latter capacity to the time of his death or nearly fifty years. In 1893 he married Anna Kasper. She now survives him with the following children: Paul, Albert, Jacob, and Frank, Mrs. C. R. Deurksen, Mrs. H. D. Duerksen, and Mrs. Herman Reimer.

JOTTINGS

—First Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, has the largest catechism class in twenty-four years. So states Rev. I. J. Dick, who has been Elder of this church since 1920. There are nineteen in the class. This is encouraging for some churches feel a dearth of young people. Twenty-five to thirty young people also take part in the choir. The church has a pipe organ, loudspeaking system and a full basement. In the basement there is a kitchen with modern sinks and also the necessary "Meergrubbe" (The spelling may be off on that word.) I. J. Dick, the pastor, graduated in 1913 with the second graduating class of Bethel College. His classmates were P. J. Boehr and J. John Friesen. Upon graduation he returned to his home community and served in his home church as one of four ministers. In 1920 he was elected Elder. Since then he has served the church while also engaging in other occupations. Now the Dicks have rented out their land but they still live on their farm. Brother Dick rejoices in the extra time that he can put into his ministerial work. In 1940 the congregation gave him a Plymouth car as an expression of appreciation. Brother Dick also serves on the examining committee of the Northern District. Mrs. Dick is a sister to the late Rev. P. R. Schroeder who was widely known throughout our conference. The Dicks have two sons-in-law. One teaches and the other one is the assistant and educational director of the C.P.S. camp at Belton, Montana. Their youngest daughter attends Bethel. The editor recently had the privilege of visiting in this home while serving the First Church with messages.

—Brother and Sister P. A. Penner spoke to the Mennonite group at Burns, Kansas, on the evening of March 19. They told about the mission work in India. The group at Burns has evening services every third Sunday. Henry Goossen serves them as pastor. He is a ministerial student at Bethel College.

—Rev. Erland Waltner was the speaker on Palm Sunday at the Hill City C.P.S. camp. He spent several days visiting the camp and bringing messages.

—Rev. D. J. Unruh began pre-Easter services for the Bergfelder Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, on March 26. Brother August Ewert is the pastor there.

—The First Mennonite Church, north of Butterfield, Minnesota, began its pre-Easter services on March 26 with Arthur F. Ortmann of Warroad, Minnesota, as the speaker. Brother Victor Sawatzky, the pastor of the church mentioned, also teaches in the Bibl School in Mountain Lake.

—Dr. Ralph W. Sockman will speak in Memorial Hal North Newton, Kansas, on April 12.

GENERAL CONFERENCE

At the session of the General Conference at Souder ton, Pa., in August 1941 a resolution was adopted, whic instructed the Conference Executive Committee to ap point a committee of six to act as a "Ministers' Ai Committee."

The following have been asked and have consented t serve:

The Foundation of Our Faith

By J. C. Kaufman

If we examine the gospel record we find that out f eighty-nine chapters making up the four gospels, wenty-six are occupied with the last week in the life f Christ or His suffering and death. This is a strange way to write a biography. The method man usually mploys is to make as much as possible of the life of man, write a book about the life and close with one hapter at the most, if not with only a few sentences bout his death. It was Christ's death rather than his life that concerned the writers of the gospels. Why his difference?

Let me state it in a few words: Because Jesus was born to die; that was the main and only object of his ife. You and I are born to live. Man is created and procreated to live. God's plan was not that man hould die. That's why we write lengthy biographies of the life of men but not of their death. In this regard he was different from all others, for we work o live. He worked to die. Why did He work to die? Because this was the only way He could save man from sin. He planned this with the Father before he came to earth. He talked about this with Moses and Elijah on the mount when he spoke with them about the decease which was to be accomplished at Jerusalem. For our sins he was to be punished, and because He loved us he took the punishment.

Secular history tells us that He died; sacred history tells us that He died for our sins. And this is the real meaning of His death. His death like the death of other great men in history would long have been forgotten had it not been for the fact that He died for our sins. The prophets speak much about his suffering. He was the man of sorrow and acquainted with grief.

We could dwell for some time on His suffering, suffering as we do and yet quite different from our suffering. We suffer in our bodies because of sin, but the sufferings of Christ were in a sinless body. He could not suffer in his body the ravages of the suffering caused by sin. Yet His suffering was not less severe. Just one example. There was the anticipation of his suffering. We often hear the comment: "God in His kindness has hidden the future from us." It was not so with Christ. To him were not graciously hidden the trials and the tragedies of His life as they are hidden to us by the gracious act of God in drawing a curtain over the future. He knew beforehand all the woes, the heartaches, the trials, and the tragedies of His life. He saw them drawing nearer and nearer as His life was drawing to its close. We gather out of His own words that from His early youth He knew all that was to come. He said to His mother when she found Him in the temple among the doctors: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" He knew what the Father's business included—that it meant suffering and death.

When He read in the Old Testament about the Lamb slain He knew whom the Lamb signified. He knew that He was to be the answer to the question of the saints all through the Old Testament which was voiced in the words of Isaac when on the way to Mt. Moriah with his father: "Behold the fire and the wood but where is the lamb for a burnt offering." Throughout the Old Testament this question: "Where is the Lamb?" occupied the hearts and minds of the saints until John the Baptist answered the question while standing on the brink of the river Jordan: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." John 1:29. "In other words, pointing to Christ he said, the Lamb is here, behold him, who is to carry away the sin of the world for which the blood of the sacrifice only served as a covering. Christ knew that through his suffering he was to be the central figure of human history.

He knew that He was not only the answer to the question of the Old Testament "Where is the Lamb?" He also knew that the proclamation of the Gospels: The Lamb is here, meant suffering and death in the immediate future, and beyond this He saw what the book of Acts and the Epistles would proclaim, namely: "The Lamb is coming again." The sufferings to Christ were as real to Him in their anticipation as they were in their experience. How deep the sufferings of Christ were, no human soul will ever be able to understand, but the Church fathers tell us in the Apostles Creed that "He descended into hell."

When we think of the death of our Lord we associate it with His resurrection. It seems just natural for the believer to immediately look beyond the grave to that glorious resurrection but when we turn to the Word of God as the Church fathers did in the Apostle's Creed we find that there was an interval

A Matter of Prayer

The publication work of our conference ought to be a matter of prayer in the hearts and minds of the Christians in our churches. The importance and the need of this work has perhaps not been made as clear as it should have been. Inasmuch as this has been true, the Holy Spirit has been blocked. Naturally, as a result there have not risen for this work as many and as fervent prayers as God desired. Considered as a side issue this part of our conference work has undoubtedly failed in many instances where God expected much greater fruitfulness. Therefore, we appeal to you, dear Christian, to make this work a matter of prayer.

This work ought to be an expression of the Great Commission (Matt. 28:19, 20) in a very definite way. (For the sake of illustration let us think of the Bundesbote and The Mennonite in this article.) Today the gospel is being brought to millions over the radio. The radio is a means of putting into effect the Great Commission. Our conference papers are also such a means. By means of them thousands and thousands of people can easily be reached. Although primarily intended for readers who are saved, our papers can and ought to carry that which will lead the unsaved to Christ. Our greatest responsibility in our papers, as I now see it, is to put into effect Christ's command of "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Paul writes, "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." (Rom. 14:19) "And I myself also am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye also are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another." (Rom. 15:14) Our church papers enable Christians from the various churches of our conference to teach, edify, and admonish one another.

All of us need this Christian nurture, for no Christian knows the full depth of all of Christ's teachings. Paul says, "For we know in part, and we prophesy in part." One Christian or one church has a very strong light on one of Christ's teachings and another Christian or another church on some other of His teachings. These need to share and thus benefit from the strength of each. This is one of the glorious privileges and purposes of the Church. Our papers make such a sharing possible among the churches of our conference.

Christians are to divide the word of truth rightly, but it isn't always divided in that way. The whole truth is in the Bible, but we fallible human beings do not receive it perfectly. Hence, the Christian Church continually faces the danger that some will take the attitude of knowing the whole truth and having little or nothing to learn from other Christians. Christian nurture is a matter of give and take and not a matter of giving only. It is wrong for a Christian to possess one-half of a truth and claim it to be the whole. What he needs to do is to confess that he does not know the whole of God's revelation and to be open to that other part of God's revelation that he needs. The more we come to such a sharing and presentation of the whole of Christ's teachings, the more God will bless our church papers.

Love must undergird all Bible teaching. (I Cor 13:2) Where there is a lack of this love, there is ofte fear. (I John 4:18) Where there is fear there is ofte a choking or mutilation of the doctrine that ought t be presented. May a lack of that love partly accoun for an inadequate presentation of doctrine among us If that is true, then the greater that love is in th hearts of those who write for our papers, and in th hearts of those who read them, the greater will b God's blessing upon what is written.

The teaching, edifying, and admonishing of ou church papers is of great importance every week t perhaps as many as fifteen to twenty thousand readers. The whole Gospel needs to be presented clearl and fearlessly. However, it is very important tha Christ and His Commandments be presented with great love, born from His shed blood and broke body. Prayer is needed for this and other parts o our publication work.

Firstly, prayer is needed for those who contribut regularly. Pray that missionaries, relief and peac workers, correspondents, and others may be led t say exactly that which God would have them say To hold up regularly that which is extremely important is not an easy task. Pray for them.

Secondly, prayer is needed that the right person may be led to contribute articles on the right subject in the right way. Contributions full of grace an salt (Col. 4:6) are needed. Frequently I have talke to individuals who imparted to me a heart-warmin message in conversation, but a request for that message in written form has frequently failed. Undoubtedly, some time could be better utilized by providin in written form food for a multitude of thousands o readers. Pray that the right contributions may b made.

Thirdly, pray that more of our church member may be led to read one of our church papers. Ho can Christians pray definitely and effectively for th work of our conference if they know little or nothin about it? Pray that many may be led to see tha there ought to be a Christian paper in every hom where there is a secular paper and that the Christia paper ought to come first.

Prayer for the publication work of our conferenc is like digging around the roots of a tree in order tha it might bear more fruit. As our papers present th right material, and are read more widely, added blessings can and will come to our conference work as whole.

Dear Christian will you let the Holy Spirit lea you to make our publication work a matter of praye —rw.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

Announcement of the Foreign Mission Board Meeting

The Lord willing, this Board will meet on April 18 in the Memorial Hall at Bethel College, Newton, Kansas. All mission friends are herewith requested to remember the Board and the whole mission work in their prayers.

We have just received the reports of our delegates to South America who looked for a new field there. They have made some recommendations and the Board will have to act on them, for which the Lord's special guidance and wisdom will be needed. We also expect a report from our delegate to China about possibilities for mission work there. Then there is the India field with its problems of relief and labor shortage. We will have four missionaries ready next September to go to India, if passage for them can be secured. Let us pray for this. Then there is the plan for cooperating with the Congo Inland Mission in Africa which has to be completed. May the Lord also continue to lead in this.

In the name of the Board,
P. H. Richert

Part of a Letter from Mrs. Isaac, Capetown, Africa

(Mrs. Isaac's relatives have received a letter from her, part of which will interest all mission friends, and we quote here the following:)

Capetown, South Africa
March 10, 1944

Dear Ones All:

Greetings from Capetown! How wonderful it is to be here. We cannot praise God enough for the way He has guided us thus far.

Accommodations were much better than we had dared to hope. We sailed under the flag that you, P. A., love next best to your own. I was violently ill for two days, but after that I could always be up, though I never feel perfectly well on water. We are hoping to proceed to Durban tonight. We were told that trains are so crowded that you sometimes have to wait for a month before getting reservations. We were told we would have to wait eleven days. We had definitely prayed that we might proceed quickly, so I went to the reservations department personally, while Ferd did other business, and succeeded yesterday in getting reservations for the 13th. This morning we took courage to ask whether there might be any cancellations so we could get off today—and were successful. We are so thankful. We also have another lady with us.

On the way over we had very congenial companions, mostly missionaries. This morning we met the Enns', Sprungers, and a Miss Friesen on the street. They are all African missionaries vacationing here. Enns said they had a card from Miss Pauls dated February 13 saying that she and Eleanor Thiessen were waiting for word to leave any time.

This letter is hard to write because I can tell you nothing. Suffice it to say that we are well and happy to have come thus far. The future is unknown to us, but there is a thrill in knowing that God is leading us step by step. The journey thus far has not been a lark for me. I have much headache, etc, but there has always been strength for the next step. We greatly appreciate the prayers of the churches. Please write to Donald as well as Mt. Lake.

Love to all,
Anna and Ferd

Draft Trends

Within the past week, a number of steps have been taken to make additional registrants available for the Armed Forces of the nation. The large number of suggestions from various departments of the government were a bit confusing to the average citizen as to what changes would be made. The following trends are evident:

1. The tightening of the 18-26 age group. With very few exceptions, young men under 26 will be subject for call.
2. The dropping of the unit scale as a basis for farm deferments leaving the decision entirely with the local board.
3. The continued policy of drafting fathers, particularly those in the 18-26 age group and those not in essential work.
4. A suggestion that was received favorably in government circles was the drafting of the nation's 3,500,000 IV-F's for work in essential war work under army direction.

RELIEF NOTES

Glenn Miller writes from England

Glen Miller, who recently went to England as a relief worker has sent his first report to Akron. Excerpts from his letter follow:

"After a little over two weeks in England, I shall attempt to write a bit of my reactions and activities. In the first place, I had a very pleasant and rather uneventful crossing being particularly fortunate in having excellent cabin mates. They were all English and proceeded to educate me in the ways and language of England.... I arrived in London just in time to experience a series of raids with the heaviest anti-aircraft fire of the war. I will admit that one thin tile roof and a ceiling overhead do not give a very high sense of security....

Relief Clothing

Mrs. Lydia Lehman reports that clothing at the Ephrata Depot is arriving in unusually large amounts for the late winter and early spring months. The workers at the depot are encouraged to note this increased interest and response, and to process the clothing against the day when large amounts will be needed for distribution. At the present time, plans are well under way for a large shipment of relief clothing to the Middle East. During the months of December, 1943, and January and February of 1944, 21,613 pounds arrived at the Clothing Depot.

MENNONITES and RURAL LIFE

By J. Winfield Fretz

WHAT IS RURAL LIFE?

For the past two years I have been raising questions and discussing problems under the general heading of "Mennonites and Rural Life." In the concluding article of this series it may be well to point out again the sense in which this term has been used.

Agriculture and Industry

Rural life does not mean country life in the sense of farming and agriculture alone, it means business and industry too. Rural, in contrast to urban, refers to population centers of less than 2,500, while urban refers to population centers of over 2,500. When the term "rural" is used, therefore, it is in the sense that people may be engaged in any occupational pursuits but they must be settled in small concentrations of population. Of course, the number 2,500 is arbitrarily chosen by the Censor Bureau for the sake of convenience. It might have been 3,500 just as well.

Community Life Possible

The reason we have paid so much attention to this problem is because rural life makes community life possible, and community life is an extension of family life, both of which are essential to Christianity and the Christian Church. Modern cities do not permit the development of wholesome community life and they are destructive to strong family life. Their proper management and control exceed human ability and wisdom. Not all is sweet and pure and sinless in rural areas, but the size and the nature of rural communities lend themselves more to the nurture of Christian ideals than do the size and nature of modern cities.

The Power of the Gospel

The question is raised as to whether the Gospel of Jesus Christ is not powerful enough to save the souls of men under any condition whether urban or rural. The answer is of course, "yes." Jesus Christ can and does save souls everywhere; God is more powerful than the devil and can and does triumph constantly over him. That, however, is no reason why men should sin or permit conditions where sin can flourish so that they can witness the power of Christ to overcome sin. This would be asking for evil that good would have opportunity to overcome it.

Community Life Necessary

Christ can save sinners in the city as well as in the rural areas but human beings, whether Christian or non-Christian, are still subject to temptation and they yield to it in greater numbers in urban than rural areas. Crime, delinquency, divorce, vice, gambling, and many other forms of sin have always and do now, abound to a greater degree in cities. We know that Christ can shine brighter through an individual who is nurtured in a Christian family than in a family that is disorganized by a drunken father, a wayward brother and a divorced mother. By the same token the power of the Gospel can flourish more among men who have a wholesome Christian community life than in a disorganized community where sin abounds and vice flourishes.

Gifts in Kind for Civilian Public Service Camps

The response of the people of our churches last summer to the Canning Program for Civilian Public Service Camps was very generous and gratifying. The Mennonite Central Committee is again trying to sponsor a similar program.

Leaflet folders outlining this year's "Gifts in Kind" program for Civilian Public Service and War Sufferers Relief needs are being sent abroad to our churches. We hope that our people will again respond with the same generosity born of a spirit of Christian concern as they did during the past summer.

This canning and drying program was of great help in supplying vital foods to our men in camp and also in helping to carry the financial load. Furthermore, to our young men in camp it was a genuine token of the abiding interest of the members of our Conference and of our churches in them and in their testimony to a deeply held Christian conviction which they were trying to bring to a world at war. Letters of appreciation came to the Mennonite Central Committee Office in considerable numbers.

Signed,
Henry A. Fast, Representative on M.C.C.

The Foundation of Our Faith

of three days. What happened during those three days? Jesus own words give us the answer: Rev. 1:18 I am He that liveth, and was dead: and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell or hades and death. We say therefore first of all, he descended into hades so as to be victorious over death and hades. As a trophy he has the keys of hades, or the victory.

The battle in hades is graciously veiled before our eyes. When we speak about Hades (Greek) or Sheol (Hebrew) the question comes to us where is this? What is this? In answer we wish to say that according to the Old Testament and also Christ's own words; it is not always the place of torment. In Gen. 37:35 we read that Jacob said while grieving about his son Joseph: For I will go down into Sheol unto my son.

Christ tells us in the incident of the rich man and Lazarus that in Sheol there are two departments and we see Lazarus in one and dives into the other, Lazarus in peace and rest, dives into torment; these two departments were divided by a great gulf.

Having brought to our mind the fact of a place for the departed souls, let us prayerfully proceed. In Leviticus 23:9-11 we read about a remarkable ceremony: "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

Brother J. C. Kaufman, author of the series, "The Foundation of Our Faith" is Chairman of the Committee on Doctrine and Conduct of our conference. As chairman of the committee he contributed this series of articles. We would especially call your attention to this series. It is the first of its kind to be contributed to The Mennonite by this committee since the conference last convened. Might more of our conference boards and committees make greater use of this paper in carrying on the important work that is theirs.

'Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the Land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a sheaf of the firstfruits of your harvest unto the priest: And he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord to be accepted for you.' "

This was called the sheaf of firstfruits. The children of Israel had to go through their fields and gather the ripe ears and tie them in a bundle to be presented to the Lord by the priests. All this was typical of the finished work of Christ. Now with this ceremony in mind we turn to I Sam. 25:29. There Abigail, who later became the wife of David, speaks prophetically of her lord David: but the soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God. Here we have the bundle of life and the sheaf of the firstfruits. Now let us read Matth. 27:50-53. "Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost. . . And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose. And came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." Here we have the bundle of life as symbolized by the sheaf of the firstfruits. Was it not to this that Abigail referred prophetically, and may we not conclude that David was among this number? Let us turn now to I Cor. 15:22-24: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order." (group or company) 1. Christ the firstfruits; 2. afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. 3. Then cometh the end. The resurrection of the dead. Rev. 20:11-15.

The aforesaid leads us to the conclusion that while the body of Jesus rested three days and three nights in Joseph's tomb his soul went for three days and three nights into the heart of the earth. We have Christ's own words for this. When certain of the Scribes and Pharisees demanded a sign from Him, Jesus answered, Matt. 12:39-40, "But he answered and said unto them, 'An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall be no sign given unto it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas: For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly (not the mouth); so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.' " (not the grave).

The 100 Per Cent Church Paper Plan

How to Introduce It

In the first place, inform your church board and then your congregation on: What it is, why have it, and who already has it. This prepares the way for an intelligent decision on the plan at a specially called business meeting or the annual meeting. Secondly, send a list of names and addresses representing all the homes in your church to the Mennonite Publication Office. For your information the office will check off on the list every home which gets a church paper and for how long. In connection with this you might request sample copies of our church papers for all those homes which are not getting a paper. Thirdly, with this knowledge in hand you are ready for planning a way to finance the plan. This can be done in a number of ways. Every home represented in the church can be asked to contribute the whole or part of the subscription price. Some can be asked to contribute extra for those who fail to pay the whole price. However, a better way is for the church to pay directly out of the church or Sunday School treasury, just as is done for Sunday School literature, hymn books, janitor services, etc. Fourthly, when the plan is adopted at a business meeting appoint or elect an efficient committee that will be responsible for carrying out the plan.

When Introduce It?

This plan can be put into operation at any time, although it is most convenient if all family names are submitted in November or December and the subscriptions begun with the new year.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Gerhard Friesen, Newton, Kansas

APRIL 23—"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven but he that doeth the will of my Father, who is in heaven." Matt. 7:21

Jesus expects fruit. Salvation is not just a fire escape. It is not the fire that drives us to accept the Christ, although the burden of sin must be felt. But it is more the Love of Him who died for us that draws us to Him, and where there is response to that love there are deeds, not only words. In fact, it is this love and this devotion to Him and those whom He loves that does not leave us unfruitful.

APRIL 24—"I desire goodness, and not sacrifice, and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings." Hosea 6:6.

The prophet evidently had observed people trying to buy off God by some sacrifice, and then go and enlarge their fields by removing the landmarks (5:10). Such conduct does not fit into God's program. He desires goodness, a goodness growing out of their intimacy with God. Oh, that we might truly know God and live so close to Him that he might work His good deeds through us that men might see them and glorify our Father who is in heaven. "This is life eternal, to know Thee and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent."

APRIL 25—"Know ye not that ye are a temple of God? . . . for the temple of God is holy, and such are ye." I Cor. 3:16-17.

The temple of God, a place where God dwells and is honored—is that what my body is? To Paul it seemed that the Corinthians had forgotten this. I wonder how many Christians to-day have forgotten this too. Can we smoke and drink and otherwise compromise Christ's teaching and still be His temple? Is not that the way God's kingdom comes, by His being supreme in our lives? What a different world this would be. May I be His temple.

APRIL 26—"For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but faith working through love." Gal 5:6.

The Galatians had been told that they had to accept circumcision if they wanted to be right Christians. They had fallen for this false teaching. Paul makes it very clear that such is not the case, but rather faith in Christ, which worketh by love. In Rom. 8:9 he calls it the spirit of Christ. Are we misled to accept any outward form that threatens to displace the faith that works through love? Would to God all Christians were possessed of this faith. Am I?

APRIL 27—"So then let us follow after things which make for peace, and things whereby we may edify one another." Rom. 14:19.

Are we not often too prone to seek our own advantages and claim certain rights instead of the things which make for peace and things which edify? The writer of Psalm 85 says that "righteousness and peace have kissed each other." He knew that righteousness is on good terms with peace. It is evident that unrighteousness is a stranger to peace. But the righteousness of the New Testament is still of a higher degree; it is the righteousness of grace; it is the righteousness of love stooping to serve. This edifies, this builds. This we need in our homes, our churches, and everywhere.

APRIL 28—"Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." I Cor. 16:13.

Watch! Stand fast! Be a man! Be strong! What a challenge for a Christian. What is there to watch? The roaring lion type of tempter I can hear from afar. But the angel of light type who whispers in my ear and says; you are wise and tactful; this is not the time to take a stand for Christ; you might hurt your reputation, is more dangerous. Get thee behind me satan! "Watch!" Christianity is not only a Sunday religion. It takes a man to live it seven days a week, and strength which comes from on high. Do I have this faith?

APRIL 29—"He that doth not take his cross and follow after me, is not worthy of me." Matt. 10:38.

Has it ever occurred to us that Jesus wants us to be worthy of Him? Worthy of Him, so that he need not be ashamed when found in our company. He emphasizes one mask of worthiness here, take up the cross, his cross, my cross, each one his. If we take our stand for Him against the world, especially in times like these, that spells a cross. That means disrepute or even worse. And that goes against the flesh. Oh, how ingenious we often are in avoiding the cross. Are we followers of His? Am I worthy of Him?

APRIL 30—"Everyone therefore that heareth these words of mine, and doeth them, shall be likened unto a wise man." Matt. 7:24.

Can it be that these are Christians who think that going to church, listening to preaching, and talking piously is all that is necessary to be a Christian? Christ saw this danger and warned against it. Are we ever in danger of parading piety yet fail to live in accord with Christ's teaching? Saying, Lord, Lord will not count with Him. Christ came to change our whole life, to make it new. He speaks much about doing and following. But this we can do only through and in Him, as branches on the Vine. Without Him we are at best sounding brass and clanging cymbals.

Certificates for Ministers of the General Conference

The conference session of 1938 at Saskatoon, Sas- atchewan, adopted the following resolution, No. 17: Resolved, that the General Conference, through its Executive Committee, offer Certificates to the ministers of the Conference.

In order to carry out these instructions, the officers f the conference, on instructions and approval of e Executive Committee, sent to all of our then nown ministers letters and blanks to fill out and turn within thirty days, in case they desired such rtificates. Thirty days were mentioned so that the umber of certificates to be purchased might be esti- ated more exactly.

To date 255 certificates have been issued, and be- w we are printing the names, but omitting the addresses, as there have been many changes in these.

In the past six years a number of young ministers have been ordained. These likely were not all aware of the fact that certificates are available if asked for. There may be others who failed to respond before, but desire them. Any ministers who are members of any one of our General Conference churches are kindly invited, if they desire certificates, to let the writer know, and he will be glad to send the necessary blanks together with the conference constitution, so that the information required to issue certificates may be at hand.

FEEDING THE SOUL

By Walter J. Dick

"What is he harping on this time?" you must ask. Well, it's simply this: We must find time to worship God. "But," we say, "I haven't the time I used to have." That's just the reason we have to TAKE time to spend with Him. One of God's saints was heard saying, "I have so much to do today, I have to spend three hours in prayer this morning." What morning was that for us? Certainly, week-days are too busy for this and when Sunday comes around—that's the only day we have to rest and take it easy.

But let us be reasonable with ourselves. If we were as irregular in our eating as we are in our church attendance we would soon have a grand case of indigestion. Bad weather and war work have been the cause for much of the irregular church attendance; but through it all I haven't heard of anyone going without meals for a whole day, yet many haven't darkened the church doors for weeks!

We may be gaining the victory for our country with our week-day work, but we are losing the victory in our own souls by neglecting our church life. Heaven and earth and all things therein shall pass away but our souls are immortal. How are we preparing our souls for eternity? It behooves us to look after our soul's welfare with the greatest of care. Don't starve it; feed it!

Before the Easter season closes make a covenant with God to come to church "right regular" not "right often."

OUR FOREIGN MISSION WORK

First Section of the Spring Mission Number

In view of the lateness of the Board meeting this year and consequently of the regular mission number with the Board reports, we have decided to print a part of the mission number before the Board meets and a part after it. Another reason for this is that it keeps some reports from getting too old. Besides, there would be too much material piling up for one issue if we left it all till after the Board meeting.

May all mission friends be encouraged by these reports to continue to praise the Lord for his blessings in the past and to keep on praying for still greater showers of blessing.—P. H. Richert, Secretary.

Report from Rodolphe Petter

Lame Deer, Montana, January 8, 1944

This week, the first of 1944, Christians are reminded of the Wise men of the long ago, bringing their symbol offering to the "New born King," whose star had guided them to Bethlehem.

Outstanding men, although not of the chosen people of God, were used as instruments of His high will and purposes for the whole mankind. Men like Job, Melchizedek, Jethro, Bileam, Ruth, Hiram, the queen of Sheba, Naeman, and the Wise men were chosen by God to use them as fit witnesses of His ways and wonders. Out of the pagan night of eastern nations came the Wise men to bring homage to the "King", of whom ages long before, Bileam was inspired to say, "I see him, but not now: I behold him, but not nigh: there shall come forth a star out of Jacob." Thus out of pagan night and ignorance, personalities rose like stars, pointing to the true Light. Were these persons not also of those mentioned by Jesus, when he said, "I sent you to reap that whereon ye have not labored: others have labored, and ye are entered into their labor?"

What the wise men did, impelled by God's guidance, should be held in thoughtful remembrance these days by all mission-minded Christians, for it was the beginning of millions and millions to also come out of the night to the Light as personified in Jesus Christ, offering to Him not merely gold, frankincense, and myrrh, but their own heart and life. At the same time those wise men are also the many, who like them, brought their treasures to the Master, opened them to Him for the cause of His glorious Kingdom. For my part, I see in mind and spirit how our churches and mission friend, during the past year, have come and opened their treasures for the sake of the mission work. These treasures being the heart interest, the faith, love, prayers, sacrifices, self denials, sympathy, collaboration, and consecration. All this and much more was brought and opened to the homage of God and His Christ for the growth of His glorious Kingdom. The preciousness of these "opened treasures" not only ascends to the throne of God, but surrounds us on our field of labor and lifts up our heart and soul to look with hope and assurance into the future, even now when the results of the plowing and sowing in 1943 are less than expected, here on our Cheyenne mission field.

Against the powers of darkness (as mentioned in Eph. 6:12) we mission workers are powerless, but we have also experienced that God is powerful and in His own time will dispel all heathen night with His Light. For today as of old the Gospel of Jesus Christ is a power of God unto salvation never mind how powerfully this salvation be opposed.

During the past year the heathen Indians seemed to have made up their minds not to attend to any proclamation of the Gospel, really fearing it in their hearts. The reaction among them against the "White man's religion" has grown in so far that the old heathen ceremonies paired with the mongrel peyote religion have lifted their heads, insisting that their ways of worshipping God was the best for the Indians, they wanted nothing else. Thus they have banded together against Jehovah and His anointed. Just the same, their hearts, minds, and life are empty, finding neither comfort nor rest. They know that their "cisterns" give them no water, alas they are still too proud to confess it and come to the true fountain of water. And yet it was never closer and more accessible to them than now. They can hear or read the Word of God in Cheyenne or in English, they have Christtian witnesses in their own tribe, the house of God is ever opened to them. Still they shun all that God offers to them. Not only that, but they endeavor to have their will and power bear upon the Christian tribal members. On that they feel sustained by certain voices of Whites who have told them, "You need not listen to missionaries, just hold fast to the inheritance of your fathers."

That is the night, but it tries in vain to obscure the Light, it cannot put out the stars; the few that have been enlightened by the light of the Gospel of Christ and shine, never mind how deep be the surrounding darkness. So at the end of the year of mission labor, if we cannot report of great results, we know that no darkness can overcome a tiny light. We cannot sweep away the night with a broom, but can light "candles." God does use them, as He did before, to shine in the darkness until "The dayspring from on High shall fully appear."

It is not at random that the Christian Church has chosen the portion of Isaiah 60:1-6 to be read in connection with the remembrance of the wise men's visit at Christ's days: "Arise, shine: for thy Light is come! . . . and nations shall come to thy Light and Kings to the brightness of thy rising." This promise pointed to its realization for the Cheyenne people, when some of its outstanding leaders and those who became Christians rejoiced our hearts. Never mind the present changed attitude, that promise is still precious and trustworthy, for it does not change, it abides. Yea, it cannot but become realized in God's time for He has said, "My Word shall not return void unto me, but shall accomplish that which he pleases, and shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."

So we labor and continue laboring for He is faithful that promised. More details of the mission work done here will be presented to you by Mrs. Petter, so I close this letter in expressing heartfelt thanks to the Mission Board for the Christmas message written in the names of the brethren P. P. Wedel and P. H. Richert. Yes, "God is faithful, by whom we are called into the fellowship of His Son Jesus Christ our Lord."

Yours in this Faith and Service,
Rodolphe Petter

Reports from India

In recent months so many encouraging reports have come to us from India that I feel the urge to share them with the readers of our church paper. Foremost among them are not only the many open doors and opportunities to preach the gospel but the number of conversions from among the non-Christians. One missionary writes: "Early in the year I baptized fifteen; last Sunday another fifteen, two of whom are over 35 years old. Later, in August, another ten." Then he goes on to say that because of many other pressing responsibilities, he is unable to respond to the many other calls for Christian instruction. Another missionary writes: "In our area 76 baptisms took place. During the year 1943 in all 395 baptisms could be performed." The Christian church, according to latest reports, now numbers 2,983 converts. The Christian community will be approximately 4000. Another missionary writes: "At least four villages of the area have baptized Christians in them domiciled and eager to do work amongst their relatives and neighbors where two years ago there were none. Our gospel team never went out with more power than in these days." In the B. Leper Home something like 60 were added to the church during the last year. That does not sound as though "there are no converts in our India Mission field." These reports "hot off from the wire" ought to encourage our cheerful giving and praying constituency.

Again among the reports I must mention the healing ministry. Dr. Dester, the only white doctor at present on the field writes NOT complainingly: "I had 75 patients yesterday, 58 inpatients, four major operations. At 5 P.M. I left the hospital leaving some patients unregistered." I think one can read between the lines,—"I was tired." If the hospital about which he writes the above, were the only one under his care one might say that not every day, perhaps, is so full of work, but Dr. Dester in the absence of Drs. Bauman, has two hospitals in Champa under his care. One of these is the general hospital and the other the hospital in the B. Leper Home. To get to these hospitals a day's journey by rail and by bus is required. The load is heavier than one doctor can carry and do justice to the work. We urgently need two medical men. May God, even during this time of war, touch the heart of young CHRISTIAN doctors to come over and help us. This healing ministry is a part of God's program for his son Jesus Christ who later transferred it to his disciples. Matt. 4:23 and John 17:18.

Still another encouraging report is that in our Mission we now have 11 organized churches and practically all with Indian leadership. Together with this, and this is most important, the inner growth of the church in general and that of the church leaders in particular. More and more responsibilities are assumed by these leaders and the churches. Just now, while writing this brief report, I received the following letter from one of these leaders in India. Though written on the 23rd of November, 1943, the Lord directed it into this office in time to incorporate it in this article. He writes:

"Dear Friends—

We, the delegates of the Indian Church Conference send you our Greetings in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We are glad to let you know that our Church Conference has been regular in its sessions once a year. This meeting has done much good. We are stimulated for service and so we go back to our stations with new zeal and ambitions.

The different standing Committees have gone far ahead in their work. The Home mission field has expanded and the Conference thought it necessary to ordain one worker to act as Pastor in the north. (Kendai and Jilda) The Joint Education Committee has taken the management of the primary schools in its hands. The Evangelistic Com. has been endeavoring untiringly to bring the gospel unto the people who are still in darkness. The Basna samelan (Church meetings. P.A.P.) has established six different churches Three churches have been established in the Mauhadih area.

The Conference has passed a new Constitution, which brings all the work of the Standing Committees under the control and supervision of a governing body which at present consists of sixteen members. We thank you very much for your letters, which we often get through our missionaries. We hope that you are all praying for us. We also remember you in our prayers.

With best wishes,
Very sincerely yours,
B. Stephen, Sec'y. Ind. Church Conference

Such and similar reports ought to cheer our hearts and give us courage "not to be weary in well doing." Of course, I fully realize the danger that the church may over estimate its strength and endeavor to carry heavier responsibilities than it is able to carry, but the desire to take over the church activities besides the program of education and evangelism is commendable at least. At one of the conferences where Mrs. Penner and I were present a leader said: "We Indian Christians ought to carry part of the load that the missionaries are now carrying." I think that we can safely say that we are fast approaching the partial fulfillment of the purpose for which the first missionaries were sent to India, viz,—the organization of a self-propagating, a self-governing and a self-supporting church. Presiding at a Y.P.C.E. meeting, I asked the young people: "Suppose that for some reason or other, our middle schools would have to be closed, the hospital shut its doors, the lepers sent away to beg and the missionaries had to return to the U. S. what would remain?" Quick as a flash one young man said; "The Church." He was right. The churches in China are now, in the forced absence of their missionaries, carrying on.

The question that will arise in the minds of some who read this article: "If the church is gradually growing in numbers and self-government, why send out more missionaries?" Answer: First of all, there are yet many many thousands unevangelized. To this task the missionary can give his time more fully than when there was no church. Secondly, the new church will need guidance and is indeed asking for this guidance. Leaders have repeatedly said: "Don't leave us, we need you." China, according to a recent report, has said the same thing. It is "impossible to build a second generation church out of first generation Christians and a third generation church out of second generation Christians."

Therefore, because missionaries are still needed we ask you to help us pray that the Lord of the harvest may send them to our India field as "long as it is day." Right here I wish to correct a wrong impression that has gained ground in some quarters. Some people have been told that India is closed to missionaries and the gospel. THIS IS NOT TRUE. There are war restrictions, of course, but the Board was able to send three missionaries to India and unless something unforseen happens three more will be sent out, perhaps five. A missionary, not of the General Conference, hailing from Africa, said in one of our Conference churches that India now being closed, he advised that funds be given to Africa. It is unfortunate that such statements are made without investigation from proper authorities. No, until now India is NOT closed to the gospel and hence the call for workers, especially for doctors, is still in place. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest."

P. A. Penner

Letter from the Desters

Jagdeeshpur, Via Raipur, C.P., India,
September 3, 1943

Dear Friends of many Climes,

Last month it was my privilege to get out into the district, some thirty miles from home; where the world seems shut in with hills, mountains, bamboo, and forests. I motored some twenty miles and then walked eight miles to Kodopali, where there is a church. Here the Christians came out with drums and garlands to meet me. The first building we came to was the church. It has walls of bamboo mats and thatched roof. A dollar or two was given to help erect the building, but the labor, and most of the material, was furnished by the local group.

At this place we had a service and communion. After a curry and rice dinner we walked five miles to Chipara where I baptised ten people. This is a village in which formerly there were no Christians.

During the touring season the workers had given instruction and prepared these for baptism. It is quite possible that five or ten more will be ready for baptism here, in the near future.

The next day we were off again among rice fields, through jungle, on embankments, over boulders, through streams to another village where there is a church and school. Here we again had a service of worship and fellowship. Communion was also observed. I had some medicines with me, so at each of the villages, medicine was dispensed and treatment given. The first day of this short tour I walked thirteen miles, the second six, and the third day over twenty. This is the kind of thing Rev. Duerksen does year in and year out, only he does not write much about it.

We first came to India in 1927. Since that time and until June of 1943 I had treated only one snake bite. I had not witnessed a single death due to snake bite, although, one mother of three or four children died at a time when I was absent from home. Another woman was brought to the hospital who died before reaching it. In July and August of this year, we had two tragic deaths due to snake bite. One was a promising young man who was taking normal training. The other, who died just one month later, was a small boy from Champa. Both of these were bitten in the early hours of the morning. In both cases it was not known what had bitten them, and consequently giving the most effective treatment was difficult. Events and symtoms indicate that both were snake bites. Since the death of the second boy, eight poisonous snakes have been killed on or near the school premises.

Several day ago Rev. Thiessen brought in a huge scorpion about six inches long. On the back and all about the body of this mother scorpion were some twenty-five to thirty-five little scorpions. It seems that these little ones attach themselves to the mother and draw sustenance from her even to the extent of causing her death.

Aside from one month in April and May, I have not spent much time in Champa this year. Dr. Mathai is doing good work there and Dr. Roy in Jagdeeshpur. We are finding it necessary to build more wards at Jagdeeshpur. An eight room, or ward, unit is now under construction. Fortunately we have most of the building material needed, on hand, and also funds. Another happy feature of this is that needy folks can be given work and a living.

These are still difficult times for all of us here. Our folks used to get twenty to twenty-five seers of rice per rupee. Now they get only four or five, and that with difficulty. It is also hard for them to get small coin which is their usual medium of exchange. They seldom use a rupee in buying food and the household needs. To get a rupee exchanged for small coin, the money sharks charge an exchange fee of six to twelve per cent. We missionaries, in going to the hills for vacation, pay prices for food comparable to those you pay in the large cities of the U.S.A.

The local church at Jagdeeshpur, formerly known as Basna, has a membership of 280; a total of 380, including its circle of eight near-by villages. Fifteen children were blessed in December, 1942 and six in April of this year. Fifteen were baptized in January, 1943. About eighteen of our young men are in the army or in special training for industry.

Since the first of the year our ten local weavers whom we employ, have woven up four and one-half bales of the coarsest plain white thread. (Each bale contains 40 bundles of 25 hanks each.) Very little of our cloth is woven plain white, almost all has some colored thread woven in. This colored thread we have had from previous purchases as now it is almost impossible to obtain. Because of this, we have been able to undersell the mill cloth, which is anything but color fast. We have had many large orders to fill and our men have been most grateful for this opportunity of making a good living. Nearly all have been able to purchase some fields and a pair of oxen to till the soil.

Our local yearly Bible Course was held in July and August. The class of literate men, mostly teachers, carpenters and hospital workers, was taught by Mr. Thiessen. The literate women's class by Mrs. Thiessen. Both classes had 25 to 30 enrolled. Because of heavy rains and much sickness among the children, the mothers could not attend very regularly. The young men's class of fifteen, was taught by Dr. Roy. In April and May, the village workers, about 35 in all, came in for their classes taught by the Duerksens. The rest of our people were divided into eight groups, according to their residence, each para having its men's classes and women's. Many of these can read the Orriya language and a few the Hindi, but the majority are illiterate. The teachers were most faithful, as well as the many enrolled. The majority of these folks are day laborers, so the classes were held over the noon hour, from one to two p.m. It was most heartening to see the good attendance and the interest shown. 218 enrolled in these noon classes and the average per cent of attendance was 86 per cent, the highest being 92 per cent and the lowest 80 per cent. In the afternoon of the last day, a program was given by all the nine classes, each class taking part in song, or verses, or reciting the Bible stories or teachings learned. At the close, large Bible pictures were distributed to those with perfect attendance. 52 prizes were given. A meal had been promised to the two groups (men's and women's) with the best attendance. Consequently three classes of ninety folks, were fed a curry bhat meal the next Saturday. Possibly the good attendance can partly be attributed to the promise of this meal. The folks here who have been in our schools have a fair knowledge of the Bible, but there are many who need instruction. That is why we consider these Bible courses necessary. Pray that His grace and power may increasingly be manifest in the churches and in those areas also where the church is not established.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all.

Hilda and Herbert Dester.

Blessed Departure

Little Sioux, Clinton, Oklahoma, was a middle-aged man when we came here. He was very outspoken. Twenty-seven years ago he became a Christian. He took a very definite stand for his Saviour. It was a joy to see him grow spiritually. His zeal took a wrong direction without his realizing it. When I warned him he either did not believe it or was not willing to admit it. Later he drifted. Then he began to attend our worship services again and even said he was turning back to the church. But he was not willing to admit nor confess his wrong.

His old body now in the seventies failed. Late last fall he had to go to the hospital. His health improved and he was dismissed. He claimed to be much stronger. But only a few weeks later he had to go back to the hospital again. He sent for me. I found him sick and very nervous. He was so nervous that he could hardly talk. As soon as I found out why he was so nervous I asked him to be quiet and listen to me. He did. I told him I knew why he felt so bad. He once had peace and joy in his heart but not now any more and he longed for that again. He nodded. I told him there is only one way to get that peace again and that is the way he got it the first time. I told him what he had to do. He nodded and asked me to help him. I brought a repenting sinner to Jesus in prayer, confessed his sins for him, and asked Him to forgive them, cleanse him from all unrighteousness, and give him peace and joy again. Then I asked him to pray. He did.

When I visited him again two days later I found him in his bed smiling. He had that peace again. He said all was well and Jesus was waiting for him to come. In the following days he arranged all his earthly affairs, even gave instructions for funeral arrangements. He talked freely and quietly about moving out of his earthly tabernacle. He witnessed for his Saviour the remaining days of his earthly life.

One day when two of his friends visited him he summoned his last physical strength, looked up with outstretched arms and said, "How beautiful, how beautiful! I never thought anything could be so beautiful! I see Jesus standing in the door and waiting for me to come to that beautiful home he has prepared for me." These were the old pilgrim's last words here. He went home.

On the last day of last year we laid his lifeless body to rest. It was easy to conduct that funeral.

A Letter to Miss Fast

West China Union Theological College
Chengtu, Szechuan, China
December 18, 1943

Dear Miss Fast,

I have not written you for a long time, but I always remember you in my prayers and in my thoughts. How are you recently? My great hope is that I can see you once more in China or in America. It will be a great happiness for us to meet again. When I was young I was brought up by you. Dear Miss Fast, I cannot forget your great kindness. Now I have grown up, I hope I am worthy to do some work for our Lord and you may get some happiness and comfort from my service for Christ.

I left Kweilin in 1939 and came to Chengtu. I was very ill at that time and had a serious operation in the hospital. After I recovered I entered the West China Union Theological College. I shall graduate next summer. After I graduate, I shall work one year in the Baptist Church of Chengtu. I hope this war will be ended soon and I can go back to our own church.

As to my financial condition in school, you know I was supported by our church in the first year. After the breakout of the Pacific war, a missionary of the Baptist Mission in Chengtu helped my school fees and board fee. I took some outside work to meet my personal expenses. I have had difficulty. But through God's providence I have had no lack. Miss W. M. Argesiger, the one who supported my fees, is very kind to me. She will be back on furlough next October. If possible, I shall ask her to bring you a letter at that time.

The superintendent of our dormitory is a Canadian named Miss F. L. Foster. She was a lovely woman. She helped me a lot this year. All we girl students called her "mother." She will go to Canada next year on furlough. She is somewhat like you, but a little thinner.

Last spring you sent me 10 golden dollars (U.S. dollars) through a missionary in Chungking. I received that money. Thank you very much. You asked me to send you a photo of mine. I sent it to Dr. Roppe in Chungking. I think you now have it. Won't you please send me your photo! I like to have it.

My elder brother and third brother and their families are now in Kaichow. My sister and her husband are now in Tungchang, Shangtung. My second brother and his family are in Chenchow, Hunan. All of them are well.

Although this is a wartime, we have a quiet time here to equip ourselves for our work in the future. Dear Miss Fast, remember me in your prayers. I hope you will return to China immediately after t'4· war. You will receive this letter next year, bu wish you a very happy Christmas this year. Wited I me when you have time.

Miss Foster gave me an English name "Pauline." I remembered you gave me an English name when I was young. Because I did not use it, I have forgotten it.

Your daughter
Pauline (Shu Ying) Miss Shu Ying Wang

(The English school name given her when she was a small girl was "Esther.")

A. H. F.

Miss Wang is the youngest of five orphans, who were taken over by our General Conference Mission in China. Miss Wang and her older sister, Shu Lan (Mrs. Harriett Wang Li) finished the lower and upper primary schools at Kaichow. Then they went to the Bible school at the Presbyterian Mission at Shunteh. After that the ways of the two sisters separated. Shu Lan the older one, entered the Nurses course at our hospital at Kaichow, while her sister Shu Ying (Esther, now called Pauline) entered the Junior High school at Suchow, Honan and upon graduation she entered the Senior High School at Sin Yang Chow, also a Mission school, from which school she also graduated. The Sino-Japanese war made her a fugitive. She trekked the country from south to north, then south again. She taught school at various places, then trekked northwest and finally reached Chengtu Szechuan. Here she entered the Theological College. As long as our Mission was able to send funds to her and some other refugee students, they did so, but we later had to abandon it. In this school Rev. Peter F. Shih is one of the instructors, in fact I believe he is the Principal. Rev Peter F. Shih and I graduated at the same time from Hartford Seminary Foundation in 1936.

This letter came through a couple of weeks ago. It is the first letter from a Chinese I have received from China, since the outbreak of the Pacific war. One other one came through, but it was written before the outbreak of the war.

This letter gives us a bit of news from our own Christians in China. Miss Wang is one of our own girls who was a member of our church at Kaichow. According to her letter she has a desire to go back to our own church to work there. May God grant it.—Miss Wang wrote this letter in English just as it stands, I have not corrected any word or sentence.

The Great Commission

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." Matt. 28:19,20.

OUR HOME MISSION WORK

Extension and Expansion of Home Mission Work

The caring for mission stations and the founding new fields when and where opportunities present themselves is still a very definite part of our work. We rejoice in having been able to begin work in new fields in the past months, as is the case in Toronto Ontario, and in Northern Saskatchewan.

During the past year a new responsibility was realized and we also sought to meet it. The many boys from our churches in C.P.S. camps constituted this responsibility. The task of caring for these was not ours alone, because in different district conferences some of the ministers had made occasional visits to these young men. The Peace Committee of the General Conference and M.C.C., Akron, Pa. are both vitally interested in this large problem.

It was felt desirable that someone should give most of his time and efforts in making a study of this whole problem and while doing this to contact as many General Conference men as possible in the various camps and detached units. Since many of these young men are stationed far from home and home folks find it difficult and expensive to visit them, it was decided that someone representing the Home Mission Board should make contact with every General Conference young man, no matter where he or they might be located. The farther away the more essential to contact such with personal visits.

Now that some of these young men have been more than two years in these camps and in looking forward to the time when peace is to come, it becomes essential that plans be made looking toward extending a helping hand in many directions. Some of these young men hope to continue their work in schools and colleges, looking toward full time service as missionaries and ministers.

Calls are coming to arrange for certain men to bring Bible teachings to the men in camps and in the home churches to bring about a more uniform agreement on principles of faith as they relate themselves to our Mennonite Church.

All these problems require much study and we need to wait on the Lord in prayer constantly that He might guide us in the right paths.

We earnestly solicit the prayer support of all those interested in these new avenues of need and usefulness.

Faithfully your co-workers,
A. J. Neuenschwander
Secretary of Home Mission Board

Visiting the Sick

"I was sick and ye visited me not. . . " These words of our Lord command us to visit the sick. The sick are so thankful when they are visited. It needs some time, so little to give them a little encouragement.

Among my duties are regular visits to the sick. Some of our sick people are in their homes. Not far from my place lives a poor crippled woman with her sister in two small rooms upstairs. Twelve years ago she was accidentally injured by the streetcar. Now she can hardly move and is always sitting in her chair reading and knitting a little. Her sister looks after her but has to leave her daily for some hours to earn their living.

A little farther lives an old lady with a daughter and son. She suffers still more—a cancer ulcer on her right arm is day and night gnawing and causing her great pain. Constantly she turns her eyes to our dear Lord in silent prayer. In the old country she was rich, she possessed a fine big house and some thousand acres of land. She lost it all. Neither she nor her elderly brother, who lives near by, ever complain of their big losses.

In one of our suburbs is another sad case. There is a man of 45, who also suffers from cancer and faces death in what seems to be the near future. In the days of his hard suffering he found his Saviour. Now he rests in His love and care. Some time ago I was asked by him to serve him with the holy communion. My wife and I went over, and we had it together with him and his wife. He followed the short service with great attention and obviously through the grace of God he was comforted and strengthened.

But then we have our patients in the many hospitals of our city. In the "King Edward Hospital" lies a schoolmate of mine. He has tuberculosis of the lungs, and it is not certain if he will recover. I have brought him good books several times and have tried to help prepare himself if it is God's will so, for the passing away, and he is very grateful for that.

Then too we have a hospital of our own in Winnipeg. It is the "Concordia Hospital", established in 1928. We already have 50 beds. We have good doctors and good nurses. Many of our people in Manitoba come to our hospital in Winnipeg, when they are sick. And we have the privilege and the task to serve them spiritually as well as we can. Just yesterday we had a severe case—a brother bitterly fighting for his life after a complicated operation. We called his family and watched him closely. God gave him strength to overcome the sickness; now he is recovering. But we have others who are suffering a long time and are without any hope of becoming better. How hard it is for them to be in the bed all the time and be cared as little children—helpless and weak! When we bring them a word of comfort and of light in their dark circumstances they appreciate it very much. I myself have only gained from my services to the sick. Every Wednesday evening a fellow minister of our neighbor church and I have a devotional hour with the nurses of the hospital and with the patients who are able to come down into the dining room.

With our efforts to serve the sick we want to serve Him who served us first and serves us still so much and bears our sicknesses.

Calvary Mennonite Church

Quarryville, Pa.
March 24, 1944

We greet you with II Thess. 1:11, 12; "Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would count you worthy of this calling, and fulfill all the good pleasure of His goodness, and work of faith with power: That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in Him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ."

Our hearts rejoice for the privilege of proclaiming the Gospel of Christ, and for the blessing it brings when obeyed. In checking over the Sunday School record, we find the enrollment about 7 per cent higher than the past year. Although the attendance is somewhat intermittent, due to many conditions of the day, nevertheless we have an attentive body which desires to know of the Word. The Lord has blessed the Word in a definite way for which we praise Him.

On November 21st, our Ladies Missionary Society held its annual meeting. The guest speaker was Miss Elizabeth Foth, of the "Red-Hook District" of Brooklyn, New York. Her message was received with rapt attention throughout the service. Miss Foth also spoke during the morning service.

Our services have been enriched by the presence of one of our own Missionaries, Miss Anna K. Swarr. She labored under the China Inland Mission, since 1938, returning early in December on the Gripsholm. To hear her tell of God's faithfulness and goodness in Mission activity, War Zone experiences, and then internment for many months and final release is a challenge to serve Him better. Miss Swarr spoke to our people Sunday morning, February 13.

For Sunday April 2, our guest speaker will be Brother M. C. Lehman of the Mennonite Central Committee, Research Center, in Philadelphia. He will bring the morning message, speaking on relief work while in Germany during the present war. He will also address the Young Peoples' group in the evening. Rich blessing is anticipated.

When the foundations are destroyed what can the righteous do? For some years our Meeting House foundation has been deteriorating and finally needs attention. For a special project the congregation is planning extensive repairs to make the foundation substantial for the future.

A year ago the Young People's class meetings were discontinued. This year, however, it was decided to meet bi-monthly for a spiritual program, fellowship and a social time. These meetings are always well attended, thus sharing mutual fellowship.

Three of our young men are in the Service. One is stationed in the States; one in Italy, wounded; one in Central Africa, serving in the finance department. The last mentioned is married with one child in the family.

"And let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." Gal. 6:9.

Yours in His Glad Service,
Sylvan Lehman

Bethel Mission

864 Downing Street, Winnipeg, Man.,
March 10, 1944.

Dear Co-Workers:—

In answer to a request for material to be inserted in the spring "Mission Number" of the Mennonite I would like to send in the following report:

Bethel Mission is located at the corner of Sherbrooke and Sargent streets near the center of the city of Winnipeg. The mission can be easily reached by bus service on either of the above named streets.

Our Sunday School at 10 o'clock and our church service at 11 o'clock are conducted partly in German and partly in the English language. The evening service is entirely in English. We are glad to say that the attendance has been growing during the last six months so that we now have between 40 and 50 people who attend the morning service and between 45 and 75 who come in the evening. Those attending come from various walks of life. A large percentage are young people who have come to the city from the large Mennonite settlements to the south and are now employed in factories, hospitals or business establishments. Some are also attending the various schools in the city while others attend the services during a temporary stay they may have in the city.

During the winter months the government has called in over 100 C.O.s to do necessary work in the city because they are not so urgently needed on the land at this time. Many of these young men have also been attending our services. In order to serve this latter group we have given several addresses on the subject of, "The Teaching of the New and Old Testaments on Peace and War." Keen interest was shown in the discussion of this subject.

As a further help to our young people we have organized a "Young People's Fellowship Hour," which meets every two weeks after the evening service. This is in addition to the regular Christian Endeavour which meets on the other Sunday evenings. In our Fellowship Hour we have had an attendance of between 40 and 50 young people and after dividing into smaller groups we discuss such subjects as, "What does it mean to be saved?," "Friendship—human and divine." "Temptation," "The Bible," "Our Mennonite Heritage" etc.

Since the end of January we have been holding catechism classes in our home. At present 13 people are enrolled in these classes.

Our regular church services have been greatly helped by the introduction of the English Mennonite Hymn Book, which is now being used by our American brethern.

In order to increase regularity of church attendance we have been following several series of sermons. At present we are following a series based on the "Ten Commandments." We have concluded a series on "The Lord's Prayer."

Our work in the city would be greatly helped by a permanent meeting house of our own since our present quarters are only rented and do not offer the facilities which are greatly needed in our work.

I. I. Friesen.

Report for the Mennonite

First Mennonite Church
Chicago, Illinois.
March 25, 1944

One of the important challenges that confronts the nation and especially the Christian Church at this time is the great increase in adolescent delinquency. This problem has reached grave proportions in large cities such as Chicago where so many parents work at night and are unable to keep watch over their children, or where the discipline in the home has been so lax that parents do not care or are unable to control their adolescent children. Since the war there has been a general relaxing in the moral standards as hundreds of teen age boys and girls roam the streets and city parks at night in search of thrills and adventure.

We have felt that one of the best ways to meet this challenge is to have a program of activities in the church, or sponsored by the Church, that will interest and hold the young people so that they do not stray into immorality and sin. Some of the important phases of this work are carried on through the Sunday School. We have two teachers, one for the boys and one for the girls, that understand and work with the young people. These classes are organized and have their business and social meetings. The boy's class has just recently rented a gymnasium which they have one evening each week to play basbet ball and for other athletic games. Mr. Anderson, their teacher, goes with them and plays with them.

In the second place, a strong and active young people's organization has been of much benefit for their spiritual growth and for a clean and wholesome social life. At the present time there are about fifteen active members. They work out and plan their worship service which is held from seven to eight every Sunday evening. They use local talent as much as possible in these meetings, and an outside speaker about once a month.

Besides the regular meetings on Sunday evening, our young people have a social once a month, including party games and contests and refreshments. Also a business meeting is held each month in the home of one of the group, at which time the various activities of the organization are planned. Then on every third Saturday evening of the month there is a Young People's Rally sponsored by a group of south side churches. Not only do they have a Rally once a month, but they also conduct a two weeks series of evangelistic meetings every year. This year these meetings were held in our church. Ten young people accepted the invitation to come and take the Lord Jesus as their Savior, three of these were members of our Sunday School. This group also sponsors several roller skating parties and an outdoor picnic once a year.

At the present time our group is preparing an Easter pageant to be given on Palm Sunday evening. This requires study and practice.

Thus we hope that our young people will grow spiritually, socially and physically and we believe that if we can keep them engaged in the activities of the church and in a wholesome social and athletic program, they will escape many of the dangers and temptations of this world at war.

E. A. Albright, 1500 W. 72nd Place, Chicago, Ill.

Mennonite Memorial Mission

Altoona, Pa.

From the little church on the hill, as it is referred to by Altoonans, we bring you a few items of qualitative progress. The Lord has been good to us in this respect. He has blessed us both spiritually and physically. We would delight to tell you of numerical growth, but in an industrial city, today, where a twenty-four hour a day and a seven day a week schedule is maintained in factories and shops the churches by and large have to compare recent attendance and increased membership records with previous years with a deep sigh. We, in Altoona, must also reckon with a population decrease of more than ten per cent. There are many vacant stores and houses in this city. Some churches have suffered a decrease of as much as 40 per cent in their Bible school attendance and 50 or more per cent in their attendance at worship services.

Mennonite Memorial Mission bears its share in the present situation. Some of our people have moved to cities where war plants are located. Other families have moved off the hill to distant parts of the city. A number of young men are in the armed services and C.P.S., camps. Familiar faces have gone; new faces are in our midst.

Our Bible school average attendance for the past year was 51.2. Average attendance at the morning worship service 17.7 and at the evening service 24.4. Offerings for the year amounted to $607.68. Thirty had a perfect attendance for January of this year. Twenty-nine for February and for January and February twenty-one.

Much work was done during the year in improving the mission property. The furnaces in the parsonage and the church building and the church building roof were repaired. A new ceiling was put in the church building and the front room and kitchen of the parsonage were remodelled and repainted. Even the garage has changed its appearence.

With the coming of warmer weather we hope to resume work on the church building. As soon as the necessary repairs are completed on the north foundation and wall, we plan to repaint the exterior and interior as well as the exterior of the parsonage.

The Ladies' Aid has been quite active. They ordered material from the cutting house and made up the garments. They also made and knotted five wool comforts. The garments and comforts were sent to Mennonite Central headquarters at Akron, Pa. Fifteen dollars were contributed to the redecoration of the church building.

Work and Experiences in C.P.S. Unit 63, New Jersey State Hospital, Marlboro, New Jersey

By Loris Habegger

This hospital is located in the heart of a pleasant farming country fifteen miles from the Atlantic coast and forty odd miles south of New York City. It is well landscaped presenting a picture of careful planning and development. Patients are housed in cottages which accommodate about 150 to 180 patients, and buildings are planned so there is a place for anyone from a small child to an elderly senile patient.

The first 25 members of this unit came in November, 1942, and now we number 65 men with 20 of the men having their wives with them. A fine group spirit and spiritual unity are in evidence.

With the exception of three of our men, one a laboratory technician, one a dairyman, and the other an operating room assistant, all are employed in the wards as attendants. There are only 11 male attendants aside from the 62 of our men who are employed on the wards, and only 15 regularly employed lady attendants aside from the C. O. complement of 18 wives. The normal employment of attendants is 250 for all the wards whereas we are operating with 109. A special tribute here should be paid to the wives of the unit members who have so sacrificially offered themselves in this time of need and who many times put the men to shame with their courage and conviction in their duties. God has certainly given us a wonderful opportunity to witness to our faith at this place.

The work of the attendants is characteristically menial and requires a lot of patience and determination. I was deeply gratified the other evening as I conversed with one of our men who is in charge of the colored male cottage. It was interesting to note his interest in each one of his patients, and his attitude toward them was something which made one's heart glad that he was in C.P.S.

I might add that this was one man who had a difficult time adjusting to the C. O. stand and has only in recent months, perhaps, gained the full and complete perspective of the Christian witness. He was especially pleased with one patient who had been apathetic for years and for whom, seemingly, there was nothing to be done. Today this patient stands on the threshold of a new era of life, for the care and attention of the C.P.S. man has him in a position of probable parole from this institution. All this because someone cared!

Patients learn to trust those to whom they have been entrusted. With few exceptions, expressions of extreme gratefulness for the understanding care they are getting are frequently forthcoming. It is our prayer that this may so continue.

Our medical staff has developed a very progressive program in assigning several of our men to duty on women's wards. It was decided to place about 14 C.P.S. men on women's wards for a trial period due to the extreme shortage of female help. This has developed almost beyond our fondest expectations and today our men are regularly assigned to female wards as well as the men's wards. We have hopes of starting a nursery to employ the wives of some of our men who have recently become "daddies." We are not interested in promoting a C.P.S. haven of refuge for our men, but the need here is so great that it demands all the help we can get and more than that, ALL our energies.

The spiritual life of our men and women is one of our chief concerns. It has been our practice to have speakers almost every Sunday evening and some during the week. At no time do we fail to have Sunday evening services, though infrequently it is sponsored by our own group. Mid-week prayer meeting is a highlight of the spiritual emphasis, the many sincere prayers offered making anyone grateful to be present. It is not easy to maintain one's spiritual bearing in a place such as this, so our private devotions mean so much to us. I have done more Bible reading since coming here than ever before in my C.P.S. experience. God is surely using this experience to make us more conscious of our eternal need for Him and His promise of eternal blessing and watchful care over us if we but look to Him.

Many of the men study in their spare time, doing constructive reading and pursuing their education by correspondence courses.

I should like to give a recent incident to illustrate a point. In company with Miss Wilhelmina Kuyf, our speaker on that particular Sunday evening, and a C.P.S. couple, we came upon a rather vociferous and loud patient in a female ward, I introduced the patient by her given name whereupon she replied, "My name is not ———, it's Mrs. Jones."

My companion asked, "How can you be Mrs. Jones when I'm Mr. Jones?"

The quick answer was, "Haven't you looked in

The Janjgir Mission Station in India

By Rev. and Mrs. W. F. Unruh

The work at the Janjgir Mission Station has been built up by a number of missionaries through a good number of years. Rev. and Mrs. P. W. Penner have served at this place longer than any other persons and need to be mentioned even though at present they serve the Mauhadi field. The workers in Janjgir at present are Rev. and Mrs. S. T. Moyer and the Misses Martha R. Burkhalter and Helen E. Nickel. It is not the purpose of this article to review the development of this station, but rather to give a picure of the work here as it is carried on at the present time.

Evangelistic Work

Village evangelism has always been one of the main phases of work at this station. The villages of the area have been touched often with the gospel message. It is still one of the chief endeavors. At present Rev. and Mrs. Moyer have charge of evangelism and they are developing strong teams of evangelists and Bible women, insisting on high spiritual qualifications in the workers as well as on effective methods of presenting the gospel to common villagers. Every evangelistic effort in the villages is is considered a special opportunity which demands special preparation in the matter of right relationships with God and special preparation to meet the situations that will be faced in the villages.

The Church

Rev. Rufus Asna is the pastor of the Janjgir congregation. He is a very good-hearted Indian brother. The church building is one of the largest and finest on the field. Although Brother Asna carries all the responsibility as pastor, Brother S. T. Moyer stands by him continually. As a member of the Church Council, Brother Moyer is of great help to the pastor. The Janjgir Congregation counts less than 200 members, I think, but the attendance at church services is quite large because the students from the Funk Memorial Girls' Middle School and from the Biblical Training School attend here. The pastor has a great responsibility in directing so many young lives in the worship of God.

The Funk Memorial Girls' Middle School

This school is under the direction of Miss Helen E. Nickel. It offers the regular Middle School course preparatory to entrance in high school. The school also carries on a number of industrial projects. The Bible training that the girls receive here is thorough and practical. Miss Nickel has inaugurated the cottage system in the Girls' Boarding to train the girls in the art of house-keeping. Older and younger students are placed together in groups or families of ten. Two of the older girls are then made responsible for the "family." They must look after the welfare of the younger girls, do all the ordinary shopping and buying, supervise the cooking, and see to it that the general house work of their "family" is well done. This provides real training in house-keeping. Girls who finish this course have a fine preparation for life.

Janjgir Biblical Training School

This Bible School has already trained many men and women who are now doing fine work in the Church. Miss Martha R. Burkhalter is at present the principal of the School. Graduates of this school are now serving as pastors, ordained preachers, evangelists, Bible women, and teachers. The school has trained many young workers for neighboring missions. The Mid-India Christian Council now asks that this school be

.de to serve all the missions of Mid-India. This l increase both its privileges and responsibilities. e emphasis is on practical training, and the students ve as they study. Each school term is followed by months of village evangelism. The entire student up is then taken out for intensive evangelistic teach; and preaching in the villages.

There is a dispensary on the mission compound ere medicine is given for minor ailments. Serious es of illness are sent to Champa where we have a large hospital. There is a Government Hospital in the village of Janjgir less than a mile away where medicine is given free if patients will stay for treatment. But many people from the district prefer to get treatment at the Mission dispensary because here help is given by loving hands.

This gives just a bare outline of the work. The importance of it must be weighed in its relationship to the cause of winning souls to Christ and the Kingdom of God.

'dictionary' (directory)? There's lots of Jones' hundreds of Smith's." Then in a hushed voice added, "Say, what kind of a Jones are you; good, or indifferent?"

'I'm the good kind," replied my C.P.S. friend.

With a loud laugh the patient replied, "I'm the ifferent kind."

To me this was symbolic of something we have ed to recognize in this world of ours. Our inerence has led to hatreds, murders, adulteries, and sin which we know should not be if we live close our MASTER. We trust that our way of thought action will be evidenced in a loving attitude ard those who are in our care and that our every d and word might bring honor and glory to our ior, Jesus.

Attention should be called to the dismissal pertage before the war in comparison to the present e. Before the war this institution dismissed 52 per cent of all admissions in a period of one year. Since the war it is safe to say that dismissals are down to 40 per cent of admissions. The increase in number of patients admitted is also noticeable. Our charter group had 2580 patients to care for whereas now we have about 400 more. Our buildings are crowded, and with the present situation it is hardly possible that this condition can be alleviated. We can only pray that God will be merciful and answer the prayers of the many people who are praying that wars may cease, not that we should be able to come home quickly, but that suffering of such tragic all-inclusiveness should cease.

In I Thessalonians 5 we read: "Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feebleminded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men. Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

Paul's injunction stands today. Will you pray that we might do just that? With God's help we can and will. Your earnest prayers in the interests of C.P.S. are much appreciated and we want you to know that you have a share in this good work.

Loris Habegger, member of the First Mennonite Church, Berne, Indiana, is assistant director of the C.P.S. unit at Marlboro and was interviewed by Eleanor Roosevelt when she visited there.

MEDITATION

By Walter A. Gering

"Thou hast cast all my sins behind Thy back" Isa. 38:17.

Why should we be so slow to believe God, to take Him at His Word? Why should we continue to be afraid and anxious when all our sins have been removed from His sight? The expressions used in God's Word are varied but all attest to the same truth: the Lord has taken all our sins and removed them from us through the shed blood of His dear Son. We stand free as those who have been completely redeemed. What matchless grace that we should be so delivered —what pity that we should be so slow to believe and live in that consciousness. We go our way for years, conscious of our sin, longing for release and pardon, seeking in so many ways to quiet our conscience when all the time we might be living in the glorious sunshine of His forgiving grace. Why should we continue to grieve Him and to rob ourselves of life's richest blessings. Let us trust His redeeming grace; let us joyously claim this freedom and praise Him for it. Let us daily live as such who have had their sins purged and cleansed. That experience is for all who will but claim it.

"Lord Jesus, renew within us by Thy Spirit a living faith in Thy redeeming grace. Grant unto us the consciousness of sins forgiven. Amen"

RELIEF NOTES

China Commissioners Wait in Bombay

S. J. Goering writes the following from Bombay, India, dated March 1:

"Although February is the shortest month of th year, for me it has been the longest of the trip. I wa hoping to be away from India before this, but here still am in Bombay. We look each day for news abou available sailing but so far we got nothing definite On account of the war no shipping information is give out in advance, and so many people are here waitin to be sure to be ready to go when the chance comes. .

"By the time this reaches you, we should be not fa from home. Of course, we do not know how much longer we may have to wait here. We feel that the Lor will provide as He seeth best. He has lead us wonderfully all the way and we feel that we are following Hi leading."

Brother Goering also relates how J. D. Graber ha again joined him. Earlier it was thought that Brothe Graber should stay by the Bengal Relief project unt the China relief unit would arrive, but later developments necessitated his return to America. As reported before, the Akron Office has been informed b cable, after the writing of the above letter, that th China commissioners are enroute to this country. The exact whereabouts is unknown.

A Doctor's Work in Paraguay

The following extracts, taken from a letter writte by J. R. Schmidt, M.D., give a bird's-eye view of doctor's tasks among the Mennonite colonists in t Chaco:

"Medically we are over our heads in work. For Jar uary, we had an average of more than thirty patien on each office day. I do not know just how ma hospital cases and operations we had. So far I ha not had much more time than to take down names people who needed eye examinations for glasses. soon as school starts, both Menno and this colony a waiting for examinations. There are also many b surgical jobs collecting. . . . Another public health pr gram deals with hookworm infestation. During visi to the various villages for eye examinations, famili will be checked. We also expect to do some vaccin tions for typhoid, smallpox and diptheria. None of t latter have ever been made here. . . . Before too lo a couple more months, we will start with the additio al hospital building."

CORRESPONDENCE

SPECIAL SERVICE AT BIBLE MISSION, CHICA

We had a blessed Palm Sunday at the Mennon Bible Mission. In the morning we had our regu service and Sunday School with the added blessing our pastor receiving into membership, by church lett a family of three, an elderly father and mother a daughter. Also a mother was baptized.

In the afternoon the annual Mennonite Student Co munion was held at 4:00 p.m. Brother Nickel led opening hymns, Brother Albrecht, pastor of the Fi Mennonite Church, gave the sermon, and our chu trio and quartet gave two musical numbers. We w happy for the many students who were able to atte from the Moody Bible Institute, Northwestern, and Chicago Theological Seminary, together with ot friends including the Chicago Mennonite Fellowship

This was followed by a fellowship supper given in home of Mrs. Wiens, upstairs of the church, Sarah a Esther Wiens assisting. It was a Christian joy to the friends visit together and share experiences.

Our pastor led the service introducing the vari speakers and schools represented.

Brother Loewen led the singing, Mr. Helmuth B d the devotional reading and prayer, and Mr. and Mrs. elmuth Berg, Mr. Nickel and Miss Adeline Berg gave musical number, "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross." Mrs. Ewert brought the first topic, "What Can the ennonites Give the City." She thought we had much bring in the way of Christian teaching and living of ıristian doctrines. We may have to leave some of our cial customs and yet not lose ourselves, if there are ıurches to help us. Mr. Alfred Regier brought the cond topic "What is the Great Objective of the Men- nite Church." Basing his discussion on Hebrews 12:1 ıd 2, he brought out that our one great objective was "Make Christ our King," supremely and courageously. e brought out "I am a debtor, I am ready, and am not ashamed" the challenge Paul gives to all of in Romans..

A vocal number by Miss Alfreda Regier singing "It was one" followed.

In the following topic Brother Basinger told us a ory of two mountain climbers, tied together, scaling a gged wall above a precipice. Slowly they ascended, refully watching each step. Somehow the lower man pped over the precipice, and he began to go down lling the upper man with him, slowly. All at once the ople looking through a telescope at the bottom of the ountain saw the man fall and bounce on the rocks low. When they hurried up to where the other man ıs lying exhausted, they found a knife beside him. He d cut the rope.

We need not cut the rope when we face difficulties or als or distress or persecution. Daily meditations will lp us stand and by yielding to His spirit we will be le to say "Thy will not mine be done."

The closing talk was given by Brother Bert Smucker ıo told us of the work and training at the Alexian others' Hospital where he is working in the C.P.S. ıit. He believes his experience will help him to pre- re himself for the relief in China when the opportun- comes. May the Lord add His Blessing.

Yours in Christ, Mrs. John T. Neufeld

IENNONITE CHURCH, WISNER, NEBRASKA

We are only a small church group in number at Wis- r, Nebraska. We have Sunday School regularly and a votional Sunday every second and fourth Sunday of ch month. This devotional period consists of songs, ripture reading, prayer and remarks conducted by Hen- Boehr. We especially enjoy any missionary or preach- who comes to visit our church and spend some time our midst.

We feel we have had special favors in our little church late.

Last December 23 occurred the marriage of Miss Est- r Boehr, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Boehr Wisner and Mr. Malcolm Wenger, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Wenger of Aberdeen, Idaho.

The ceremony was conducted by Rev. Erland Waltner Mountain Lake, Minnesota. Rev. Waltner is very dear us at Wisner, where he served as a student pastor ne years ago. The collection of the morning, which ıounted to $168.21, is to be used for missions.

It has been twenty-four years since a marriage has en performed in our church house—although members the church have been married within this time.

Sunday, March 5, we had a very impressive service, en Mrs. Esther Boehr Wenger was ordained as a mis- nary. Rev. Alfred P. Waltner from Marion, South Da- a, member of Foreign Mission Board officiated, as- ted by H. J. Brown.

Rev. and Mrs. Wenger left March 15 for their home Busby, Montana, to begin their work there.

This is the first ordination in the history of the Wis- church and it means much to our little church to ow that from our little group a missionary has gone th.

We have quite an active sewing society. We meet every weeks in the homes of the members. For sometime have been sewing for war relief as well as collecting d sending used garments to the M.C.C. —Corr.

HERALD MENNONITE CHURCH

Bessie, Oklahoma

Am happy to report that we are enjoying blessed times with our new minister and wife, Rev. and Mrs. C. B. Friesen.

Since they have come here they have organized and brought back to life the various church activities like prayer meeting, Bible study, Choir practice, Christian Endeavor, and Womens Mission society.

The regular attendance on Sunday mornings has also improved considerably.

In January we were richly blessed while Rev. H. P. Fast from Orienta gave us some heart searching messages. In March, Rev. J. C. Kaufman from Whitewater, Kansas, was in our midst for one week, and we had another precious opportunity to sit at the feet of Jesus and learn from His Word.

Easter Sunday afternoon we were privileged to have the O.B.A. boys' quartet with us. They were accompanied by Rev. Lubin Jantzen and Rev. Curt Claassen. The program consisted of songs, testimonies, and music. Rev. Claassen concluded with a message on Daniel 6.

In the evening an Easter program was to be given by the Sunday School, however it could not be rendered due to the heavy rain we had in the evening.

Southeast of Corn, Oklahoma, they had a very big storm which completely demolished all the buildings of a number of homes. One lady was killed; some were injured, but most of them escaped death and injuries by going into storm caves. On some places the hail also did much damage to buildings and crops.

Sunday, April 16, the Ladies Mission Society intends to give a mission program for which they have invited Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Friesen from Canton to bring us the message.

Robert Schmidt, who has been in C.P.S. camp at Terry, Montana, for seventeen months, is at home on furlough for seventeen days. His younger brother, Alfred, who also has to go to camp on April 17, desires to be baptized before he leaves. He has been taking catechetical instruction with a group of young people, but will not be able to be here when the group will be baptized; he will be baptized next Sunday, April 16.

Alfred will be the fifth son of the Ed Schmidt family to be placed in the various C.P.S. camps.

Mrs. Jacob Penner, Corr.

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. ELISABETH WEBER (nee Franz) was born in South Russia on January 3, 1850, and died April 4, 1944. In November, 1870, she was married to Johann Weber. To this union there was born one daughter, Maria. Uncle Johann Weber died in 1920 when their only daughter was in Russia. Uncle and Aunt Weber had come to America in 1877 and made their home on a farm south of Henderson, Nebraska. They crossed the ocean five times. Since 1936 Mrs. Weber made her home with her nephew, Rev. John F. Epp. Here she died at a ripe age.

ALVIN DALKE, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Dalke, was born February 1, 1896, in Marion County, Kansas, and died March 24, 1944. He was reared on a farm southeast of Goessel. He attended Bethel Academy for two years. He was baptized by Rev. P. H. Richert of the Tabor Mennonite Church. When he moved to Goessel in 1926 he transferred his membership to the Mennonite church there. In 1916 he was married to Helena Becker. He is survived by his wife, Clarence and Otto who are somewhere overseas, and Olga, Herbert and Alvin Junior, all of the home.

ABOUT THE FOUNDERS OF OUR FAITH

"There arose from the letter of Scripture, independently of the state churches, a new sect which was called Anabaptists . . . By the good appearance of their sect and their appeal to the letter of Scripture, to which they strictly adhered, they drew to themselves many thousand God-fearing hearts who had a zeal for God."—Sabastian Franck wrote this in 1530.

JOTTINGS

—A worship service for communion has been worked out by Mrs. Edmund Miller, Lind, Washington. The single-spaced, mimeographed material fills three legal size pages. You might write to Mrs. Miller about it if you are much interested.

—Pacific District Conference at Pratum, Oregon, June 1-4. "In a joint session of the Executive Committee and of the Evangelization Board of the Pacific Conference convening March 30 at Portland, Oregon, it was unanimously decided to hold a Pacific Conference on June 1-4 at Pratum, Oregon. The Pratum Mennonite Church graciously invited the Conference.—Philp A. Wedel, Conference President"

—West Swamp Mennonite Church, Quakertown, Pa., "Two new members were received into the fellowship of this church at the Preparatory Service on March 30. On Palm Sunday two hundred took communion out of a membership of 232. . . The regular monthly mission offering, held on the first Sunday of each month, fell on Palm Sunday and amounted to $160.00. The West Swamp Sunday School is furnishing the material and volunteers are erecting a Sleeping Cabin at Men-O-Lan. Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander is the pastor of this church."

—Brother Melvin Gingerich of the Bethel College faculty is preparing a paper on "The Reactions of the Russian Mennonites to the Trans-Mississippi West in the Seventies," which he will read at the St. Louis meeting of the Mississippi Valley Historical Association, April 20.

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Upland, California: "The altar cross has been presented to the church by Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Horsch as a memorial to his father, the late Rev. M. Horsch. Candlesticks of the same design will be added as soon as supplied by the manufacturer." From the Herald, "The cross will be placed on the communion table at certain seasons and for special occasions of the year."

—First Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: The choir sang "Memories of Easter Morn" on the evening of Easter Sunday. The offering went for the church organ fund. A second Easter service was held on Monday in German. A short vacation Bible school is to be held immediately after the public schools close.

—The Immanuel Mennonite Church, Los Angeles, now has 225 members. W. A. Regier is pastor, and Dorothy Schroeder is church visitor. The list of members in other fields of Christian service includes the following: Rev. and Mrs. F. J. Isaac, Champa, C. P., India; Rev. and Mrs. Frank Manning, Africa Inland Mission, Ukerewe Island, P. O. Nansio, via Mwanza, T. T., East Africa; Miss Eva Duerksen, Sudan Interior Mission, Bunum, Bauchi, Nigeria, W. Africa; Rev. and Mrs. Chris Ummel, Migrant Camp Work, Shafter, P. O. Box 1441, Shafter, California; and Miss Helen Graber, Missionary among the Jews in Los Angeles.

—Brother P. A. Penner brought the morning message to the Emmaus Church, Whitewater, Kansas, on April 16.

—Frieda Regier Entz showed slides of the Hopi Indians at the Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, on the evening of April 9. According to present plans she will show these slides to the Bethany Church, Kingman, Kansas, on the last Sunday in April. The slides are from pictures taken about fifty years ago. They are colored and very descriptive of the Indian life of that day and even of this, for in some villages the Indians still live very much like they used to live. The greatest change in their customs of living has perhaps come at Oraibi where our mission work was begun. The pictures should be of great interest to students in our public schools who study units on the Indians.

—The Apostolic Mennonite Church, Trenton, Ohio, has adopted the 100 Per Cent Church Paper Plan. This means that sixty-five homes of this congregation will get a church paper. Rev. J. E. Amstutz is pastor of this church.

—Perkasie, Pa., The Rev. Henry Heydt, President of the Lancaster School of the Bible, will bring messages on the evenings of April 20, 21, and 22 in the Bethel Mennonite Church. This will be his second appearance in this church. He also just recently filled his second engagement at Springfield. These two churches are the charges of the Rev. W. W. Shelly. —F. Landis, Corr.

—Walton Mennonite Church, Walton, Kansas: The church had its own Good Friday service. Recently i purchased a mimeograph machine for the pastor Ronal von Riesen. He now uses it for the church bulletins —Mrs. Rodolphe Petter wrote on April 14, "We go thi afternoon to give final baptismal instructions to six wh wish to be baptized at Birney on Easter. . . . On January 23, four were baptized there. Spring is here bringing crows, robins, meadow larks, blue birds, an buttercups. Snow has disappeared except in some crevices on the hills."

—Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander writes in the bulletin o the Swamp Mennonite Charge: "Recently when Mr. an Mrs. Harry Wulliman from the Norristown State Hospital, were visiting in West Swamp someone asked him 'If you had to do it over again, would you still go int the C.P.S. work?' Without a moment's hesitation h replied: 'I would do it again.' That shows convictio He had been in a C.P.S. camp in Indiana for more tha a year and now is in the Norristown State Hospital fo fifteen months.

Recently we have learned from our Mennonite Centra Committe offfice, Akron, Pa., that a good number these conscientious objectors are planning to go t College and Seminary to prepare for full time religiou work, wherever the Lord has place for them.

Not long ago a member of the First Mennonite Churc Philadelphia, a soldier in Australia, sent his offering t his home church for C.P.S. work. We know of othe who have sent their contributions home for this work —Rev. John F. Epp, Henderson, Nebraska, writes, "Sprin work has been held back thus far. People are anxious waiting to go out and do their work, but God kno what is best."

Sorry, Very Much So

In the April 11 issue the heading "The Founde of Our Faith" should have read, "The Foundation Our Faith." In the April 4 issue a heading on pa seven should have read, "M.C.C. Adopts Stateme on Dependency Problem." By mistake the last t words of that heading were put over the first artic on page thirteen. The right heading of that artic should have been, "An Elderly Minister to His Co gregation." The heading on the bottom of page elev should have been "Through Death to Life," and n "Through Life to Death." A number of introductio of writers were also left out in this issue. The edit prepared this material before he left Newton to co duct pre-Easter services. Consequently he did n get to see proofs of the material just before it we to press. Somehow these many errors slipped Generally there are not far as many to correct fr the proofs. We ask the forgiveness of our cont butors for these mistakes.—rw.

—The First Mennonite Church, Shafter, California, is to be host to the California Mennonite Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention to be held April 28 to 30.

—Rev. H. E. Nunemaker in the church bulletin of the Zion Mennonite Church, Donnelson, Iowa: "Your pastor returned on March 25 from a most profitable trip, having visited each one of the nineteen churches of the Middle District. It was the purpose of this trip to contact each one of our Sunday Schools to discuss with them the work of the Sunday School and ways of making the work more effective. Through these discussions your pastor has gained new ideas and convictions which he wishes to share with you. It is his earnest hope that that which has inspired him will inspire others also."

—First Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: The pastor, Rev. I. J. Dick, sent an Easter message to the fifty-five or so young men in service. Justina Dick, a member of this church, is now serving as news editor of the "Mountain Lake Observer", which is generally subscribed to by the Mennonites living in the Mountain Lake community.

—Rev. Arnold Regier, teacher in the Mennonite Bible Academy, Newton, Kansas, brought the morning message to the Buhler Mennonite Church on April 2. Students from the school provided the special music.

—Goltry, Oklahoma: Rev. and Mrs. Marvin Eck have begun their itinerary work for Africa. They plan to sail, the Lord willing, the latter part of June under the Sudan Interior Mission. Rev. Eck is a member of the Zoar Mennonite Church, Goltry, and Mrs. Eck is a member of the Mennonite Church of Inola, where her father, Rev. Mouttet, is ministering. They gave their testimonies last Sunday, March 26, at the Goltry Church. This was an inspiration. Miss. Naomi Eck, sister of Rev. Marvin Eck, was married to John Epp of Turpin, Oklahoma, on March 12. Miss Evelyn Wichert of Fairview, Oklahoma, was married to Paul Buller of Goltry on April 9. Paul is serving at the C.P.S. camp at Colorado Springs. His wife plans to go there with him. —Corr.

—Woodland Mennonite Church, Warroad, Minnesota: Rev. Ronald Von Riesen held morning and evening services in our church, March 12. He was traveling in the interests of Bethel College. The first wedding to take place in our little meeting place occurred March 19 when Edna Strieff and Jacob Unruh were married.
Jake G. Quiring, Corr.

—A testimony from the Eden Mennonite Church, Inola, Oklahoma: "On the promises of God, Bible institutes, Bible academies, mission fields have their beginning. Through faith they come into existence, and in a short time there before our eyes are the facts." How wonderful, how marvelous is our God. Gen. 18:14. Is anything too hard for the Lord?

—Rev. J. J. Esau conducted services in the Johannestal Church (Hillsboro, Kansas) from March 26 to 31. On Tuesday night the roads became blocked by a blizzard and no meeting was held. Besides the seven messages he brought in the church, he also spoke at the County Ministers' Meeting, in the high school, in Tabor College, and in the Old People's Home. Together with the pastor he visited in a good many homes, including a visit with the blind Mrs. P. E. Ewert. Another visit of mutual inspiration was that with ninety-one year old Mrs. John C. Bartel.

—Brother J. B. Epp writes, "It may interest you—and the readers of The Mennonite, too—that D. V. I shall finish my 'three score and ten' years this week. The first score (20 years) were spent in Russia. The second 20 years in Bethel College, a mission school, and on the Arizona mission field. The third 20 years in the Oklahoma Bible Academy and preaching. The last ten years mostly in Nebraska, Beatrice, and Lincoln, preaching and travelling. It's 'All of Grace.'

—Esther and Malcolm Wenger write from Busby, Mont., "Two or three hours of Cheyenne a day, getting settled in the log house and helping with the various meetings, etc., have kept us more than busy."

—Mrs. M. C. Lehman and Mrs. John P. Suderman were the speakers at a joint meeting of the women of the Mennonite Churches in the Bluffton-Pandora community on March 30. Mrs. Lehman is in charge of the clothing depot at Akron, Pa., where the shipments for relief are handled. Mrs. Suderman, missionary to the Hopi Indians in Arizona for thirteen years, is now on furlough with her husband. They are serving the Berne church at this time.

—Grace Mennonite Church, Pandora, Ohio:. The choir gave Stainer's oratorio "Crucifixion" on Easter Sunday. Prof. Russell Lantz of Bluffton College directed. Weekly prayer services are held regularly at the church with occasional meetings at the homes of members. A monthly prayer service is held for the boys in the service to which parents of the boys are especially invited. —Mrs. S. W. Steiner

—Rev. J. J. Esau, the blind evangelist, conducted a series of helpful services during Passion week in the Mennonite churches in and near Beatrice, Nebraska. The well attended meetings were alternated between the two churches. The cantata, "The Lord of the Eastertide," was impressively rendered, under the direction of Miss Violet Miller, on Easter Sunday in the Second Mennonite Church. —W. C. A., Corr.

—Booster Concert at Bethel College: Everyone who has given $10.00 or more to Bethel College since August 1, 1943, will receive an invitation to attend the 1944 Booster Concert by the Apollo Boys' Choir of twenty voices on Friday evening, April 21.

—First Mennonite Church, Monroe, Washington: "We have had very interesting and helpful meetings this past winter on Wednesday evening. We are studying the book of Romans. Rev. Albert Schultz was in our midst the week of March 12-17. His sermons from the Word of God proved very helpful and inspiring. We hope he can come again soon. Rev. Lehmann with the the young folks is planning a song and story program for Easter. The women's missionary society has been busy sewing for relief. The society also sent 165 pounds of clothing and quilts to Akron. Pa., last month. —Mary Stucky, Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: "Despite a rainy day, yesterday (April 9) was a wonderful day in our church, with the auditorium well filled for the 6:30 a. m. service and every seat taken for the 10:30 service, when Brother Smucker climaxed a wonderful week of sermons with another splendid one."—George McBride

—J.Winfield Fretz went to Big Flats, New York, on April 4, to address the Friends C.P.S. group there on "The Mennonites and the M.C.C." Big Flats seems to be the induction center for Friends C.P.S. men.

—Speaking of Mennonites, L. L. Lock, a member of the government C.P.S. camp at Mancos, Colorado, writes, "They excel most other groups in their work attitudes and general cooperative spirit as seems to be the case in the entire C.P.S. set-up throughout the country. I, by the way, am a Methodist but find in this Mennonite group the closest Christian fellowship."

—Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas: According to present plans a group of students from the Mennonite Bible Academy at North Newton will be with us for a program on Sunday evening, April 23. This Academy was opened last fall and has been carrying on regular academy work throughout the school year. The present enrollment is thirty-eight, two of our students being enrolled at the present time. They are Evelyn Goering and Dale Kaufman. The Academy students have been visiting a number of churches in recent weeks, and we may look forward to an evening of inspiration. An offering for the support of the work of the Academy will be received at this service." —Eden Chronicles —The Oklahoma Bible Academy Corporation had a special meeting on April 11 relative to considering further steps for the completion of the present school building. Beautiful trees and shrubbery have recently been planted in the yard in front of Alumni Hall. The orchestra, girls' and boys' quartet, and girls' trio recently visited the Medford and Deer Creek churches. The girls' quartet and Rev. and Mrs. Jantzen visited the churches at Carnegie and Gotebo during February.

—Brother C. H. Suckau, after participating in a Bible Conference at Pretty Prairie, Kansas, assisted in the Good Friday services of the First Mennonite Church, Newton. On Easter Sunday morning he began special services for the Zion Mennonite Church, Elbing, Kansas. These ended on April 13. On the evening of Easter Sunday, however, he served the Emmaus Mennonite Church, Whitewater. Monday morning he spoke to the students and faculty of Bethel College.

R. C. KAUFFMAN TO GO AS RELIEF WORKER

Dr. R. C. Kauffman, professor of sociology and psychology at Bethel College, received notice from Selective Service on April 14 that he has permission to leave the United States to do relief work in India or the Near East. Dr. Kauffman will go under the auspices of the Mennonite Central Committee and will very likely sail with some other relief workers in May or June. This should enable him to finish his teaching work at the college before leaving. The nature of the work that he is to do is not certain at the time this is written. Undoubtedly, his work will be along the line that his training has fitted him.

—Important resolutions passed at the annual meeting of the Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota:

"Resolved, that the money for the purpose of financing the 100 percent church paper subscription plan, be taken from the general treasury. This plan provides one of the church papers for each family. Both papers can be had by paying the club rate for the extra paper."

"Resolved, that the deacons and trustees devise means whereby our church members are taken off county relief."

"Resolved, that the names of all children of church members be published in the 'Yearbook' and that such names be appropriately marked to indicate those who are not members."

"Resolved, that the congregation grant the pastor an aditional four weeks vacation during the year, for study. The pastor is to receive his regular salary during this vacation."

—Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Pankratz, members of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Hydro, Oklahoma, celebrated their Golden Wedding Anniversary on March 26.

—Mennonites of McPherson, Kansas, assembled in the local Y.M.C.A. on Easter Sunday to hear a message by Rev. Menno Kliewer, who is attending Bethel College at present. Several times recently they have met like this for worship.

—Brother Ben Rahn conducted Good Friday and Easter services for the Meadow Mennonite Church, Colby, Kansas.

—Rev. and Mrs. John P. Suderman, who are on furlough from their mission work among the Hopis of Arizona, are serving the First Mennonite Church, Berne, Indiana. They came to Berne December 31 of last year. They are very busy serving this large church, keeping in contact with the mission field, and going about bringing messages on the mission work among the Hopis. The Sudermans report that working and fellowshipping with the members of the Berne church is a great spiritual blessing to them, especially so in the face of thirteen years spent on a hard mission field. When the Sudermans came to Oraibi in November, 1930, they found eight Christians. Since that time they have won thirty converts to Christ, so that there are about forty Christians now. The total population of this mission field is about 1,500. Brother and Sister Suderman feel that the work at Oraibi is in competent hands while they are away. Rev. and Mrs. Waldo Harder are serving there. This is the first furlough for the Sudermans since they began their work, for previously they had had just short vacations. Both Brother and Sister Suderman are members of the Brudertal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas. Rev. Suderman reports that the mid-week prayer meeting of the Berne church is very successful. It begins at 7:30. Thirty minutes are spent in song, prayer, and a short devotional message. Then the various classes go to their rooms. The church has about 132 men in government service. Each class gets a certain number of names. In the fifteen minutes of prayer that follow each young man in the service is prayed for by name. After this comes thirty minutes of Bible study. The Book of Acts is being studied the first half of this year, one chapter each night. Each class has a teacher, but the teachers can call upon class members to take charge. The children also take part, and they have their own session of song after the general opening. Then they also subdivided for prayer and study. Since the program for the children was introduced, more adults have also been coming. About 300 people attend this prayer meeting on the average. The whole prayer meeting is in charge of a prayer meeting committee. This church has also the interesting feature of a large bulletin board that lists all the foreign and home missionaries of our General Conference, district missionaries, and missionaries from the Berne Church that have gone to other fields. The Berne Church building is immense. It takes Brother Amos Burkhalter, the caretaker, nineteen hours to sweep all the upstairs' floor space. In addition there is a very large basement to sweep. The Women's Mission Society of this church has also undertaken the project of sewing relief clothing for use in Greece. Generally the society meets for a worship service with a message and takes care of the sewing in the individual homes.

The Foundation of Our Faith

By J. C. Kaufman

There is a miracle involved in the sign of the prophet Jonah. Because of this the modernists doubt the authenticity of the book of Jonah. Christ says that Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the great fish and this is the miracle. It is not, how could this large fish swallow a man but how did it come about that the man was immune for three days and three nights to the action of the gastric juice? It's a miracle but not a greater miracle than the creating of the gastric juice. But it is interesting to note that this very same miracle holds true to the body of Jesus. The body of Jesus was resting in a shallow grave closed only with a stone in a tropical climate and the forces of decomposition had no effect upon His body. This great miracle about the body of our Lord while His soul was in Hades was prophetically foretold in Ps. 16:10-11. "For thou wilt not leave my soul in Hades or Sheol, referring to Christ's soul; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption, referring to Christ's body, and in Heb. 10:5 we are told by the Spirit concerning Christ, but a body hast thou prepared me.

In 1908 the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America met for its eighteenth session at Beatrice, Nebraska. This session stands out as the Golden Jubilee session of the General Conference. Shown on the picture above are conference delegates and jubilee guests. Perhaps, elderly readers of this paper will enjoy picking out familiar faces. The meeting-house shown above still looks much the same today. However, the shade trees on the right side of the picture are gone. This picture first appeared as the frontispiece of a ninety-five page book describing the Golden Jubilee celebration.

Thou Shalt Not Bear False Witness

One of the ten commandments that we do not hear very much about these days is the one that says, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." This commandment needs to be lifted out from its courtroom atmosphere and planted right down into the midst of our homes, offices, and churches. It should be clear that even today the devil tempts Christians to bear false witness. That false witness is being borne is evident. Perhaps, therefore, a word about it once in a while is entirely in place.

Human language at its best sometimes fails to describe accurately. When it is used carelessly it can be woefully inaccurate. When it is used with malice there is bound to be false witnessing. How careful we should be in the statements that we make.

As Christians we should have a special concern about the "yea, yea" and "nay, nay" teaching of Christ. We should not swear. However, we need to go further than that. We need to be truthful about the person with whom we disagree in certain matters. Nations may find it expedient to distort the truth to win the war, and Christians may sometimes be subtly led into distorting the truth to promote their cause. But God says "no" to such methods. He wants the truth and nothing but the truth.

When we see something wrong in an individual or institution and then state that wrong in such a way as to condemn the individual or institution as a whole, we are in danger of bearing false witness. When we state part of what someone has said but then add something to it, then we bear false witness.

How much better off our Christian work would sometimes be if we took the necessary time and effort to get a clear and definite declaration from another before we pass it on! When we can so state our opponent's position that he calls it a good statement of his case and we can say the same of his statement of our case, then we are on a basis where truth can abound.

"But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."—rw.

Feature Added to Daily Messages

Beginning with this issue the daily devotional messages carry a new feature. A portion of scripture is suggested after each scripture verse. The scripture listed is to be in harmony with the verse quoted. Thus, those using the messages are helped to make a greater use of the Bible in their daily devotions.

Rev. Albert Schmidt of Medford, Oklahoma, suggested this new feature, and we hope that it will make the messages of greater benefit to many. Undoubtedly, there are others who could suggest improvements. If you have an idea along this line, please, send it in today. However, it should be clear that we cannot afford to make our messages longer than they now are.

Undoubtedly, more homes in our churches would use these messages if the pastors who like the messages would recommend them in the church bulletin or otherwise.

We are not insisting that these messages be used. Many may prefer to use only the Bible. However, we are interested in receiving reactions from those who use such devotional material as this or some similar to it.—rw.

CHURCH DISCIPLINE

Today we are beginning to realize anew the importance of the faith that our fathers had. The faith of our fathers was based upon the scriptures. Mennonites used to insist that the scriptures had something to say on the subject of church discipline. We still believe in being scriptural, but there is little church discipline among us. Did our fathers have an inadequate interpretation of the scriptures, or do we? Or are there points in the former and present views that need to be brought together in a new synthesis? Undoubtedly, we are agreed that the Bible has something to say on church discipline. What does the Bible say on the subject when carefully considered in the light of the whole Bible?—rw.

News From Sam Goering

Mrs. Sam J. Goering and son Robert received a telegram from the M.C.C. office, Akron, Pa., on April 15 that repeated a cable they had received. This cable from Sam J. Goering and J. D. Graber, returning relief commissioners from China, stated "GOOD TRIP BOTH WELL." No place was mentioned in the cable. It is thought that they may have arrived in Africa.

A Letter of Appreciation

The Mennonite,
North Newton, Kansas

Dear Publishers;

The Mennonite, and several other Mennonite papers have been mailed to us in the British Columbia Forest Service regularly for approximately two years by someone we do not know—at least not in this camp. Within the next week or two these camps will be broken up and, because many of us do not subscribe to this paper, we will not be reading these pages any more. The Mennonite has introduced me to the activities of our people throughout this continent and beyond the seas and to our fellow C.O.'s in the United States. I have really enjoyed getting to know about them.

So, whoever the donaters are, on behalf of all the fellows of B.C.F.S. Camp Q 7 I will say: a hearty thanks. May the Lord bless you for it.

Yours sincerely,
Pete Unger

(The Mennonite Publication Office, Newton, Kansas, has been sending free copies of The Mennonite to Alternate Service Work Camps in Canada as well as to the Civilian Public Service Camps in the United States. The office is glad to get this expression of appreciation.)

Toward a Larger Loyalty

By R. C. Kauffman

The measure of a man's greatness has been estima- l in many ways: by his ability to perform menial ks, by the friends he keeps, by the things he laughs by the things that make him angry, and so on. Let suggest that the real standard of a man's social d spiritual stature is found in the area of his loyal- s. A man is as great as e cause with which he iden- ies himself; as great as the ject or ideals to which he is premely devoted. Seneca, e Greek philosopher, said, oyalty is the holiest good in e human heart." To make is statement useful it is still cessary to ask, however, yalty to what? For the hristian the answer seems ear. It is the answer given by St. Paul in his simple atement, "For to me to live Christ." In this statement, For to me to live is Christ," e have the equation, as it ere, for the measurement of ur lives. For me to live equals -what? What is it that I live r supremely? What is the ominating loyalty of my life? What, if taken out my life and thought, would make living no longer em worth while?

Dr. R. C. Kauffman, professor at Bethel College, teaches courses in the fields of sociology and psychology. He graduated from theological seminary in 1936.

Under the scrutinizing light of this standard we find rtain of our loyalties which are obviously out of ccord. But then, too, we find others which, though ot necessarily bad, are too small, too limited, to fit ito the larger pattern represented by Christ. Since ey appear innocent and sometimes even virtuous, ey are easily overlooked and may, in the end, operate s the greatest enemies of the Christian life. I would ke to call your attention to one such loyalty—a loy- lty not necessarily to be discarded, but in serious eed of enlargement in the world of today and for the orld of tomorrow. It is our loyalty to the group.

Now obviously for a man to be loyal to the group not bad and may, indeed, be regarded as laudable. Ve usually consider such loyalty virtuous since it re- resents at least some advancement in a person's ioral growth. All of us start life pretty well wrapped p in ourselves. Perhaps, this is the underlying fact f the theologian's reference to "original sin." We re our own first loves. But few of us stop here. Jsually we are during early childhood drawn into the ife of the family. At least by so much is our original oyalty to the self expanded that it comes to include he welfare and success of our immediate family. We eel hurt when father or mother is hurt. We suffer in he failures of our brothers and sisters and we rejoice n their achievements. We have identified ourselves with a group, our earliest group, the family—the best family there is. As youngsters, I suppose we have all wondered at the exceedingly good fortune of having been born into the best nation in the world, the best state in the nation, the best community in the state, and the best family in the community!

Then we go to school. We enter into the life and interests of the school. When the school wins in any contest, we cheer. We may train for the team, not necessarily to be a star gathering glory for ourselves, but in order to help the team win and put the school "on the map." The value of college athletics, as in fact of all college loyalty, is to expand the success patterns of the individual to include a larger group. An educator said recently that secular education is concerned mainly with the verbs "to know," "to do" and "to get," while Christian education is concerned primarily with the verbs "to be," "to obey," "to serve," and "to dedicate." Yes, the properly educated person should come out of school with his loyalties enlarged in devotion to something bigger than himself.

As he leaves school and goes out into the world and into the business of making a living, he of course meets up with still other groups, some of which become a real part of him. Meanwhile, too, he has become aware of himself as a member of his community and as a citizen of his nation. But there all too often it stops. The history of the race reveals a similar development with respect to social organization: first the family as an isolated unit, then the clan or kinship group, then the tribe, and finally the state or nation. But this is as far as we have gone and it is still a limited loyalty. There is yet another step to go. The Christ who identified himself with all mankind urges us to an even larger loyalty, a loyalty to the entire human family.

It is pertinent to observe that Christ belonged to no particular group, to no sect, to no private clique or exclusive organization—no not even to organized religion. There may be something for us as church members to think about here. If organized religion becomes competitive and exclusive, it is no different in this respect than nationalism. Christ belonged to humanity and urged that we too, in following him, deny not only ourselves, but also our loyalty to limited groups. Therein lies the significance of his words, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I am come to send not peace, but a sword. For I

A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary

Saskatoon, Sask.,
March 14, 1944

Dear Mission Friends:

Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander has asked for a report on our work in Saskatoon for the Mission Number of The Mennonite. The Home Mission Board considers it necessary to give the supporters of our missions first hand information in order to stimulate new enthusiasm and willingness to make contributions to this worthy cause.

It isn't my intention to report on the whole work in the congregation and the Girls' Home but to write on a special field, that is, the mission work among our poor.

If I think of our work in general and of the above mentioned in particular, I think of Acts 18: 9-10 "And, in a vision by night, the Lord said to Paul, 'Dismiss your fears: go on speaking, and do not give up. I am with you; and no one shall attack you to injure you; for I have very many people in this city.' "

Corinth, was not the only city in which the Lord had many people, He also has them in Saskatoon with it's population of 43,000 inhabitants. In forty-two Churches the gospel is preached, and no doubt, in every congregation the Lord has His people. Certainly we can say the same in regard to our Mennonite people in this city.

In the years of depression a large number of families left us to go east or west to look for employment. During the past few years conditions here have improved and it is easier to find work. Due to this about a hundred Mennonite families have moved to the city. Among these are a large number who lived in small villages around Osler, Warman and Hague. Later with government assistance they settled on farms. Due to the poor land and the lack of equipment, they were unable to make a decent living and thus moved back to the city again where many of them were fortunate to get work and thus they improved their standard of living. Others were less fortunate and live in very poor conditions. Nearly all of these live in small houses on the city outskirts. During my house visitations I have come in contact with many types of people in very different circumstances. It is impossible to describe them all but I would like to give one characteristic illustration.

Help is Needed

This particular family consists of thirteen members. The oldest child is fifteen years of age. The father is the only wage earner. He is a common laborer and can't find work for every day. The family lives in one room large enough for five persons, which serves as kitchen, bedroom, dining and living room. It is furnished with one bed, a couch, a table, three chairs and a few wooden benches. The kitchen utensils are very primitive. The children's faces show signs of poor nourishment and of a one-sided diet. They lack the necessary clothing and have to miss both school and Sunday School because of this.

Often I wonder how to approach people in such circumstances. Shall I comfort them with these words: "It is not on bread alone that men shall live?" At a time like this my conscience reminds me of James 2:14-17 "What good is it, my brethren, if a man professes to have faith, and yet his actions do not correspond? Can such faith save him? Suppose a Christian brother or sister is poorly clad or lacks daily food, and one of you says to them, "I wish you well; keep yourselves warm and well fed," and yet you do not give them what they need; what is the use of that? So also faith, if it is unaccompanied by obedience, has no life in it—so long as it stands alone." I have found them, after first ordering fuel and groceries and then proceeding with Bible reading and prayer, interested and attentive. The means to help them came from our Canadian conference, and the Dundern, Herschel and Saskatoon congregations. Having seen the circumstances in which these families live and taking into consideration their poor schooling and weak religious training it is surprising that crime has not developed to a greater extent.

We have been successful in getting many of them to attend the Sunday School and church services more or less regularly. Some attend the meetings at the church, others at the Pleasant Hill Mission Hall and still others the Friday evening meetings in the Mayfair district, which I also conduct. Our Sunday School has an enrollment of 165 pupils at present and yet still more could be found in families who do not attend any church services.

Rehabilitation Needed

When thinking of this Mission Field I not only pity these people in their poverty and abnormal circumstances, but also dream of a great rehabilitation plan whereby these homeless and uprooted Mennonite families could be settled again under the supervision of a competent organization. Thus they would learn to farm, applying the newest methods, and again enjoy farming as their forefathers did. It is evident that a church, minister, school and teacher should be given to them in order to improve their educational and spiritual standard, and make them respectable, useful members of the community. The realization of such a plan would be costly but certainly worthwhile. Most likely many of us would not see the need of such a project even though it is right at our door. I think we should not neglect the open doors which the Lord gives us in the Home Mission Field.

We are grateful to the Lord for the many opportunities we have in Saskatoon to further His cause and to increase the number of His people. It is evident that Satan is working hard to hinder this work and to disrupt the fellowship of His Children. Our comfort in hours of trial remains: "Dismiss your fears: go on speaking, and do not give up. I am with you."

I hope you will remember our work in your prayers.

Will We Sell Our Birthright?

By Harley J. Stucky

An inevitable and immediate issue in the Men-nite Church is the question of what to do with the ys who have gone into the army either as regu-'s or as non-combatants? Shall we discipline em or shall we be silent in word and action?

The method of discipline, if by the word discip-e we mean the application of penalizing measures, ll only succeed in antagonizing people and will sult in loss of members and prestige. Further-ore, the method of discipline will not strike at all ose who are guilty. We are all guilty, and they ve gone because we have failed in our responsi-lity. Because the family of nations has failed war s come, and because we as a Mennonite Church ve shirked and neglected our obligation many of r boys have gone to the army who would today in C.P.S. had we not failed. We are all sinners, d if we discipline sinners, we must begin with our-lves. We are Christians and members of the Church ly because the Grace of God is greater than our n. And this is just as true for the boys in the army for the complacent church members back home.

On the other hand the policy which attempts to ish up the problem or refuses to recognize it by maining silent is an action which does not stir ople from their complacency as sinners and is a cision to sell the Mennonite birthright. No church d no minister can avoid making a decision on this atter for one's indecision will eventually become e's decision. Pilate tried to wash his hands from ilt, but his indecision with respect to Jesus was s decision. Many thought that they would not ve to make a decision on the subject of non-sistance because of age, occupation, or family status, but their indecision of yesterday became their decision of today.

Thus the central issue in this problem becomes a question of whether or not the church shall cry out against sin or whether it shall remain silent? Will the church speak up whenever the teachings of Christianity are violated or has it become so complacent that it doesn't care? Shall it denounce war and everything that goes with it, or shall the church say that it is none of its business? When David sinned, the prophet Nathan reminded him of his transgression with the words "thou art the man." Our boys must be reminded that by affiliating themselves with an organization committed to the destruction of our fellowman, they have sinned against God and man and have violated the position of our Church. We must call this fact to their attention, but we must also tell them that the Grace of God is greater than their transgressions. This must be done as the boys come back, individually or in groups, now as well as after this conflict is over. Any pastor, who fails to call the attention of his boys to this fact is unworthy of his profession.

We have no right to discipline them any more than ourselves, but we can not remain silent for today's indecision will be tomorrow's decision. There is no escape from making a decision. We must act, and when we do, any action less than reminding our boys that they have been transgressors is a decision to sell our birthright. It is a seed for a future indifferent conscience on this matter. It is a ballot in favor of future participation in another holocaust. Any action which is more than a reminder is a denial of the grace of God and an attempt to make them the scape goats for our own transgressions.

"An Answer . . . to That Hope"

But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ady always to give an answer to every man that keth you the reason of that hope that is in you with eekness and fear." I Peter 3:15.—Beatrice R. Buller

In this article, Mrs. Buller is introducing herself to e Mennonites of America. Her testimony, together ith the story of her life, has sincerity of conviction. is a story of how the Lord leads.—Ed.)

The above verse from the first epistle of Peter seems me most appropriate as an introduction to my essage to you. Since our arrival in America on arch 15, I have had the opportunity to answer veral people who asked me about my beliefs, my ckgrounds, and my hope in this life, and it is a easure for me to repeat for you my answer, so that u might share it and help me to remain true to it.

I was born in Duisburg, Germany, on September 25, 20. My father was a lawyer and public notary in at town for twenty-five years. My two brothers d I went to a Protestant grade school and to high hool until 1933. When the Hitler government came to power, my father left Germany, because being Jewish, he foresaw a very difficult future for himself and his family. He went to Belgium, where Mother and the rest of our family followed him in 1934. In Belgium I attended high school and a secretarial college and became a member of the Y.W.C.A. In December, 1941, all my family arrived in France with the purpose of joining my eldest brother in United States. But international developments prevented us from getting out of France and "across the deep blue sea."

It is in Lyons, France, that I had my first contact with Mennonites, and it is about this experience that I would like to tell you more today. My brother had cabled from United States, advising us to go and see the Quakers for assistance and advice. Since the Quakers had no office in Lyons, my parents and I went to the "SECOURS MENNONITE AUX ENFANTS" (Mennonite Relief to Children) one dark, cold Friday afternoon. Opening the doors, we saw two Mennonite Relief delegates: Mr. J. N. Byler and Henry P. Buller, who looked frozen in spite of the fact that they were working in their little office with their winter overcoats on. We asked them about possibilities of getting transportation to America, but they were not able to give us much hope, as America had just entered the war and they did not know, themselves, whether they would be allowed to stay in France, whether they could obtain passage for themselves if they had to leave or what the next day would bring. At the end of a most friendly conversation, I told Messrs. Byler and Buller that I had worked as a secretary and that if they had some extra work to do in their office, I would be very happy to come and help out whenever they needed me. The next day, I was employed by the "SECOURS MENNONITE AUX ENFANTS." A year afterwards, I was married to Henry P. Buller, and now, almost two and one-half years after my first contact with Mennonite Relief delegates, I have the privilege of seeing their country, their homes, their churches, and their schools.

From the very moment that one opened the door to that cold, little office in Lyons, an atmosphere of warmth and love radiated into the darkness and the dreariness of the outside; and I am happy to confess, now, that I am one of the "victims" of this sincere fellowship and spirit of service. Very soon, I felt a need to know more about the Christian workers with whom I was in contact and whose work I wanted to share. The relief work that they had come to do in France, in a country in distress, struck me deeply as a true testimony of their Christian religion, and I wanted to learn more about this religion. So both Mr. Byler and Henry Buller had to answer many, many questions and we often talked for hours about Mennonites, their background, their history, and their way of life. And very soon I felt the desire to become a member of a Mennonite church and be baptized and "put on the new man" as Paul puts it. In the summer of 1942, I wrote to the Mennonite Central Committee in Akron, Pa., expressing this desire to them and they gave their consent to have a Mennonite pastor from Switzerland, Rev. Gerber, come to France, to perform the baptism and marriage ceremony and at the same time visit the relief work there.

We had arranged for Pastor Gerber to come to France right after Christmas, 1942. But in November, 1942, our plans were put to naught, when the Americans landed in North Africa and all French borders were closed. As we foresaw at that moment that Americans might have to leave the country, probably on very short notice, we decided to get married at the City Hall, hoping that I could be baptized and our marriage consecrated in the very near future. Mr. Ybargoyen, the Urugayan consul at Lyons, a good friend of all the Mennonite Relief workers who had come to France, and Miss Lois Gunden, who I think needs no introduction, were our "Witnesses." It was a hectic day that November 11, 1942. The Germans were coming into town, their tanks and motorized thoops were riding through the streets all day, the officials of the American Consulate were leaving Lyons to go into internment and nobody knew what the next hour would bring. But we give thanks unto the Lord, for He kept us and guided us during those days, or better months, of uncertainty and anguish. "He that keepeth thee will not slumber." Ps. 121:3.

As you know from previous reports, Lois Gunden stayed with us in Lyons until January, 1943, when all three of us obtained the permission to join the official American group in detention, which had been sent to Baden-Baden, Germany, by that time.

In connection with the relief work of the Mennonite Central Committee, I would like to bring back to your memory some verses of Ps. 84:

"Blessed are they that dwell in Thy house, they will be still praising Thee"....

"Blessed is the man whose strength is in Thee; in whose heart are the ways of them. WHO PASSING THROUGH THE VALLEY OF BACA MAKE IT A WELL; the rain also filleth the pools."

The Valley of Baca, which means the Valley of Weeping, is a dark valley through which every individual has to pass and through which whole nations are going at the present time. In this valley of weeping, which is a desert, there is a great need for men who take their strength in the Lord and who can turn the desert into a well, a well at which people who thirst can come and find new strength to continue their path. May the Lord grant us to be such a man, to be such a WELL where others who are discouraged, who hunger and thirst for material and above all spiritual food, may find the very best one can give unto others: a bit of love.

The Foundation of Our Faith

Why then did Christ descend into hades? David says in Ps. 68:18, "thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive:" evidently in reference to Christ's ascension.

The apostle Paul elaborates on this passage in Eph. 4:8-10, quoting David: Wherefore he (David) saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive—and then Paul goes on with these words. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the l*ower* parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.)

What can we gather out of this? We can gather out of this that before Christ died and descended into the heart of the earth that both the saved but unredeemed, because redemption was made on the cross, as well as the lost souls were in one abode; however they were divided by a great gulf. This is verified by Old Testament believers. We have quoted Jacob, he speaks of going down into the pit. But now through Christ's descending into the heart or the lower parts of the earth, (for he had to stoop as low as any human soul could ever go) and his ascending on high leading captivity captive, or as the High Priest of old, presenting the wave sheaf unto God, which was, mark you well, to be presented to God on the day after the Sabbath, from then on the abode of the saints has changed location, and Paul longs to be at home with the Lord where the rest of the saints are now, and we when we lay our loved ones to rest do not think of them as being in hades but as being present with the Lord.

Therefore why did Christ descend into hades? To come forth as a victor with the spoils, the souls of the departed just. The saints of this dispensation die well since Jesus went down into hades; they come to the end of their life with peace because Jesus did something for us when he lifted paradise from somewhere out of the heart of the earth and lifted it up to somewhere in heaven.

This descending into hades while his body rested in the grave lasted only three days. The third day he rose again from the dead. We stand now at the open tomb and listen to the angel's message: "He is not here; he is risen even as he said: come see the place where the Lord lay."

As we stand at the open tomb of the One who lay there more than 1900 years ago, we ask the question: "What proof have we that Jesus rose from the dead beside that of the angel's message?" We look about us and we see all over the world those who gather for worship on the first day of the week and we say: "Here is the proof of his resurrection, the vast multitude of believers. We are a part of an organization, I should rather say of a living organism whose history dates back to the days when these events took place. The church is born and lives because of this fact.

The church makes much of the death of Jesus Christ, because in the death of Jesus the atoning sacrifice for sin was made and guilty sinners have forgiveness. But if there would have been nothing beyond this great fact of his atoning death we would be left without hope after this brief span of our life, and if we would have hope in Christ in this life only as Paul says we were most miserable of all men, but says Paul "Now is Christ risen from the dead and become the firstfruits of them that slept."

The early Christians believed and preached Christ's resurrection, they saw him, they spoke with him, they touched him and they paid willingly with their lives for this fact, and they feared not for their Lord was risen. Men do not willingly die for something uncertain.

The resurrection of Jesus Christ throws a flood of light upon his death, upon his life and upon his birth. If his resurrection can be established then we have all reason to believe everything the gospels record concerning his conception, his birth and life. If Jesus rose from the dead then I can think of his death in terms of atonement. I can also accept his teachings as come from God.

"IF"

If we are faithful, God will look after our success.

If you cannot give a good reason for what you are doing, there is a good reason why you should not do it.

If some people are really on the way to heaven, they are traveling in the sleeping car.

If God had no more mercy on us than we have on one another, the world would have been burned up long ago.

If we do not rejoice in the Lord, the world will not believe that we know Him.

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH

Reedley, California

Christian Endeavor Week was observed by all of our societies. One whole Sunday evening was used for a joint program by all the societies. More than two hundred attended the banquet held on the birthday of Christian Endeavor.

On February 6, Dr. J. H. Langenwalter began a week of meetings. His theme was: "The Way." As scripture he used chapters five, six, and seven of Matthew, fourteen of John, six of Acts, and part of Luke. He also told of his work as Minister-at-Large of the Pacific Conference. Miss Helen A. Penner, Director of Religious Education in our church supervises the Intermediate Department in Sunday School and the Juniors in Christian Endeavor. Third to twelfth graders in our public schools have met one hour each week for religious education since last November. The Methodist Church, the Church of the Brethren, and the First Mennonite Church are cooperating in this. It is planned to visit the homes to arouse more interest for the classes. — Mrs. C. A. DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Arnold Nickel, Mountain Lake, Minnesota

MAY 1—"I am the Lord, and there is none else, there is no God beside me." Isa. 45:5. Read Exod. 20:1-17.

There is one God, all the other gods are but idols made with finite hands. There is no other self-sufficient, self-existent, being, none infinite and eternal beside Him. If this truth were firmly believed, it would abolish all idolatry out of the world.

The gods of America seem to be power, business, and pleasure. The God of the Christians is God the Father, who made the heavens and the earth, who gave His only Son for redemption, and who accepted us as His children by our faith in Him.

MAY 2—"And Joseph said unto them, 'Do not interpretations belong unto God?' " Gen. 40:8. Read John 1:1-13.

The Bible is misunderstood and misinterpreted more than any other book ever published. Christians, as well as non-Christians, very often try to interpret the Word of God to fit their own needs and desires. How may we understand the Bible more accurately? Since the author of a book is its best interpreter, God is the best interpreter of His Book, the Bible. Therefore if we want to understand the Scriptures, we must be acquainted with its Author. Our daily fellowship with God in His Word will be the key to our understanding of the Bible. Permit Him to interpret His message to you.

MAY 3—"For My thoughts are not your thoughts." Isa. 55:8a. Read Isa. 55:1-12.

An individual is known by what he does; but if it were possible, would we be willing to have our thoughts flashed on a screen at any time? There is nothing secret before God; He knows the "intents of our hearts." The Psalmist said that the Blessed man meditates in the Law of the Lord day and night. The things we love are a guide for our meditations. If we love earthly possessions more than spiritual blessings, the earthly things will direct our thoughts, but if our love for God is greater, then He will guide our thoughts. May our thoughts be pure and undefiled before God today.

MAY 4—"As for God, His way is perfect." Ps. 18:30a. Read I John 1:1-10.

Perfection is the goal of mankind. But up to the present time the ways of man are utterly imperfect. God's ways are perfect. For example, creation was a perfect work created in seven days. His order and design in the universe are perfect; otherwise His creation would have resulted in chaos; His way of salvation is also perfect. The Father sent His Son, a perfect offering for a marred people, that everyone may become a new creation that is perfect in the presence of God. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Matt. 5:48).

MAY 5—"Ah Lord God! . . . There is nothing too hard for Thee." Jer. 32:16. Read Jer. 32:16-26.

There is no problem that God cannot solve; there is no wrong that He cannot right. God is Almighty! If we trust Him for our salvation, may we not also trust Him as our Guide in every circumstance? We are not asked to put our trust in the future, but in the Lord. He is willing and able to remove the obstacles that would hinder our journey through life if we will only rely on Him. Someone has so ably stated, "You never test the resources of God before you try the impossible." Are we willing to try Him from now on?

MAY 6—"For the Lord God is a sun and shield." Ps. 84:11. Read Ps. 84:1-12.

The world lies in the darkness of sin. The Christian lives in the light of God's presence and under the shield of God's promises. If God be our God, He will be to us a sun for new life, a light for daily guidance, and a shield to guard us against the fiery darts of wickedness. Israel was led through the wilderness by a pillar of fire and cloud which was their guide and protection. Let us never wander from His protection and He will be a sun to supply us with good, and a shield to protect us from evil.

MAY 7—"He looked for a city which hath foundation, whose builder and maker is God." Heb. 11:10. Read John 14:1-15.

By faith Abraham looked for a heavenly home. He had lived a nomadic life in a strange land, but he believed that God had a permanent abiding place for His own. We, today, who believe the Word of God, are also looking for the same home. It will be a home without sin, hate, fear, or death. Love will rule with Christ as its foundation and God as its maker. Are we content to go into this abode alone, or will there be others that we have invited by the way of the cross?

Winfield Fretz Heads Mennonite Aid Section

The activities of the M.C.C. prior to 1939 were related in the main to the colonization and rehabilitation of Mennonites in Russia, Canada, Paraguay, and other countries. Realizing that in the near future there may be need for further activity in colonization and rehabilitation, the M.C.C. was authorized to set up a new section known as Mennonite Aid. The work of this section at the present will be carried on by Winfield Fretz, who has completed a study of Mennonite colonization efforts in the past 150 years. At present, Brother Fretz is engaged in determining the needs of C.P.S. men with respect to post-war rehabilitation.

The "I" Button

By G. E. McKean

It was at the end of the third period, and at the change of classes. Cy Wilson stood in the hall, hile fellows passed him, talking, but not greeting m. He noticed that they did not even look his ay. They had been giving him a wide berth for ys now.

Ed Slocum had spoken to him, but with a slight eer. Ed was still angry at the advice Cy had given m, gratis, a day or two before. "You've been so usy telling us what to do," Ed had said, "that it oks as if you had slipped." Well, it was true the citation Cyrus had just made had not been anything boast about. "And besides," Ed had persisted, t looks to me as if a fellow who traces his maps hen they are supposed to be freehand drawings isn't any too much call to talk of standards."

Standards! Maybe he had talked too much of stanards. Old Dutton City High where Cyrus had been oing was one of the best schools in the province, with aditions behind it, and a student body that had gh ideals. Good old Dutton City High. He wished e were back there. Then he stopped wishing. It dn't do any good. His family had moved from utton City to Milldale, and there was nothing he uld do about it. Milldale High was a new school, nd maybe it had not had time to build up fine traditions yet. The motto of the fellows had seemed to e, "Get by." He remembered how he had been almost shocked at their attitude. Get by . . . get by!

He had started to talk to some of the boys, tellg them naturally how they did things at Dutton ity. At first the fellows had listened, with evident terest. Then they had begun to walk away when e started talking. When he'd told them about the onor society at Dutton City, they had yawned.

But he hadn't realized how they had felt that he ought he was better than they were. When he did alize it, he almost said, "I am better!" He almost id, "They don't amount to much here." Then he membered he had traced that map, and the teacher d asked them to draw it. He had done that. Well, aybe, trying to let them know how the standards Dutton City High were kept up, he had forgotten study, as he could study. He hadn't left himself me to draw that map and so had traced it. He cerinly was a queer fellow to talk about honor and andards! And Ed was right—that recitation he d made hadn't been up to par, or near it.

As he entered another classroom, two fellows, leaders in the school, nudged each other. Cyrus felt a stab of disappointment. "I never meant to get in wrong with these fellows! I wanted them to like me!" his inner self protested.

From English 3 he went to Math. 4, and from Math. 4 to Science 2. The day wore on. Finally he was heading towards home, alone. Other fellows were moving along in groups, talking, laughing, none of them stopping for him.

Cyrus continued on his lonely way and when he came to the corner of Beech Street and Academy Road he turned down Beech Street which was really only a road with a few houses along it and fields on the right hand. Cyrus cut across one field and jumped the brook on the far side. A clump of trees grew close together making a screen between that meadow and the one beyond. A path led through the trees, but Cyrus did not follow it. Instead he sat by the pathway facing toward the town. He could see the roof of Milldale High School against the afternoon sun. He stared at it thoughtfully. He couldn't put it out of his mind the way the boys had treated him there. He couldn't understand their attitude. Ignorant! That's what they were. They were ignorant, and they had low standards!

Now he . . . in what way was he different? Cyrus pondered for a long time. Standards were something that concerned the individual primarily. Character should begin at home. He had gone out of his way to try to raise the standards of the school. Had he failed to watch the standards of Cy Wilson? Maybe that was it.

"At least," he thought, "I could have seen to it that one student did the things he ought to do and kept his marks up. I could have done right myself. I can help others, if they need help," he went on musing, "and I can give help without making them feel cheap." His anger slowly faded away and as if by the same impulse the sun faded and sank lower behind the town. Milldale High School stood out against the sky even more. Cyrus looked at it, frowning again. It looked nice, from a distance. Maybe some day, if he did his part, he could be appreciative of that school like he had been of old Dutton City High.

The air was getting chilly. Cy jumped suddenly to his feet and started walking rapidly back toward Beech Street. He didn't care so much about the other fellows' behaviour now that he had thrashed the matter out alone.

He felt so much better that he was whistling when he came to the corner of Ash and Tenth Streets, where the shop that turned out campaign buttons was located. A man was standing in the doorway. Cyrus nodded and said "Good evening." The man started forward. "Say, do you want to do something for me?" he called out.

Cyrus stopped. "Sure," he said, "what?"

"Listen," the man said, "you go down Elm, don't you? I think I've seen you come up from Elm Street every day."

"Yes," Cyrus said. "I live beyond Elm."

"Tell that storekeeper down there," the man said, "that I won't have those buttons ready for him until sometime tomorrow."

He moved back into the shop. "Just take a look at these," he said, and handed Cy a handful of celluloid buttons. On each one was a mark.

"What does it look like to you?" the man asked.

"Like a one, or an 'I.' "

"It does, if it looks like anything. At least it doesn't look like what it was intended to look like. Something went wrong with the machine."

Cyrus stood there, the buttons in his hand.

"A batch of buttons, spoiled," the man said. He began to rake them all into a box. "I guess all I can do with them is throw them out. Now you tell that storekeeper I'll have the buttons he wanted ready by tomorrow."

"All right," Cy answered. "Can I have one of these buttons?"

"Of those? Yes. Take as many as you want."

One, however, would do. One, just to remind him, in the days to come, when he might feel like reforming the character of others, that there was his own character to think about, and his own standards. Cyrus stuck the button carefully on his coat lapel. He had wanted to organize a society like they had in Dutton City school to stimulate standards. Well he had organized a society, of one.

Cyrus found that even to hold that one member to the rules he had set down was difficult at times. There was sickness at home, and he had to help around the house, which he disliked intensely at first. It took up his time also and if he had had a mind to, he could have let things slide. The teachers knew about the sickness and would have been lenient about the school work. The other students knew about it too, and if he hadn't recited as a self-advertised shining light ought to have recited they would not have laughed at him.

The hard part was, he knew they'd be lenient. To counteract that he would not be easy on himself. He could keep his work up, if he tried. And in the succeeding weeks one would never have known from the recitations he made that his work was prepared early and late and in the scattered spare time between his enforced duties around the house.

It was in English 3 one day a queer thing happened. Cyrus was handing in a theme. He had said nothing about the theme, or how he had worked on it. It lay on the teacher's desk. A fellow by the name of Miles Sawdey, a good student if he wanted to be, was looking it over.

"May I have until tomorrow to hand my theme in?" Miles asked the teacher.

"You mean," the teacher said, "you haven't your ready?"

"I have it here," Miles said, "but . . ." The teache hesitated. "I'd like to have until tomorrow to hanc it in," Miles said.

The next day the teacher commented favorably o Miles' theme.

He also said something about the quality of th class work going up. Cyrus scarcely took in what h was saying. He was very sleepy and he had to prepare for a test.

College Graduates in M.C.C.-C.P.S.

The following table shows the number of college graduates in Mennonite camps as of March, 1944:

Mennonite Colleges—with degree
Goshen College	36
Bethel College	21
Bluffton College	18
Eastern Mennonite School	3
Total	78
Non-Mennonite Colleges— with degree
Total	88
Total Number of College Graduates	166

It was during that test that one of the fellows trie to look into a book. He didn't succeed. But h didn't escape being told, by other students, what the thought of him. Cyrus was amazed to have the pitch into the fellow so.

"Listen, Neil," they said, "an exam is suppose to be a test to see what you know."

Neil's face began to get red.

"It's a test to see what's in your head, not to s what the book says, if you can find it."

"Aw, go on," Neil said. But the next time h didn't try to look, and did pretty well in the tes He didn't get the 'A' he might have had, with hel from an opened book, but he did get more than pas ing. "I thought I'd do worse than that," he sai more pleased than he really dared to admit. The he added, "Say, Cy will be sort of tickled to hear passed." This was after Cyrus had hurried off hom from classes.

Some of the fellows said, "Has Cy been helping yc too?" Neil nodded. Then he said, as if someone ha accused Cy. "He didn't come around like you fellov think he did."

"No," another chap added, "he didn't to me either

Ed Slocum and Peter Maitland walked home t gether. "Cy, you know is a nice sort of fellow Peter remarked, "when you get to know him." E looked at him oddly. "Yeah, not bad," he assente "G'night, Pete."

When five fellows came to see Cyrus and sai "See here, Cy, tell us about that club you had back Dutton City High," Cy simply stared at them. "Th club that set standards for the students," they e plained. Cyrus was willing enough to tell, but d they really want to know?

They seemed quite eager.

One of the fellows said, "Is that . . . that butt . . . a club button?"

"This button?" Cyrus exclaimed. "No,—not exactly."

"Oh!"

"The club button at Dutton City High," Cy said, "has a torch on it, a lit torch that stands for education and learning—enlightenment." He went on to describe the button.

"But what," the fellows asked, "is that button, and what does that mark on it stand for?"

Cy did not know what to say. His reason for wearing the button would probably sound foolish, childish, and they'd laugh.

But he told them anyway. "I let that mark stand for "I." It can stand for that, or for one. But I let it stand for 'I.' And I wore it to remind myself that I could do some things, by myself. I should do the best I could. And I could help others."

"You sure did, old man. Helped me out of some nice failures."

"I could keep from critizing others, even indirectly."

"You mean by telling them about the standards at the Dutton City School?"

Cy nodded.

"But that was a good thing. We want to form a club here, to help Milldale High," they announced . . . It seemed they had it all planned, and when it was brought up before the student council, they voted it unanimously. The club also wanted to adopt the "I" button as their official emblem.

"Well," one of the fellows said, "we have a club, and we have a club button!" And he began turning handsprings, finally tumbling off the wooden Academy Road sidewalk into somebody's lawn.

"I know where we can get those buttons cheap," Cyrus said, "If you want to go and see the man now."

When they approached the manufacturer, he said, "Sell them to you? I will not. But," he pushed out a box filled with them, "if you want them, I'll be glad to give them to you." Then he added, "What's this I hear about that school of yours? The principal was talking to me the other day, and he said there's been a big improvement down there, in scholarship and general conduct."

"It was partly due to this button," Cyrus said smiling.

"It was due to that, and the fact that this fellow got busy and showed us what might be" interrupted Peter, "and we finally decided he ought not to travel alone."

"He sort of shamed us, after he quit trying to shame us," explained Ed Slocum painfully.

It was useless for Cyrus to insist that he had not wished to shame anybody. They still did not understand. But as Cy took the same round-about way home that he had taken some weeks ago, he remarked conversationally to the little brook, "It doesn't really matter. The thing is they've got the right idea about the school now and that's what matters." He flung himself down on the grass with a sigh of contentment and looked across at the Milldale High School. "Good old Milldale," he said, and dug his fingers into the warm sod.—The Northern Messenger

Toward a Larger Loyalty

By R. C. Kauffman

am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household. He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me." No group was large enough to hold Jesus' loyalty, except that which encompassed anyone and everyone who wished to regard himself as a part of that group. "Who is my mother? and who are my brethren? and he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples and said, 'Behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister and mother.'"

Was Jesus then a traitor to his family, his community, or his country? No, not any more than a man is a traitor to himself when he expands his childhood self to include the family. In fact, only in so losing himself can he find himself; and so also must groups lose themselves in order to find themselves; in order to discover the real significance of group loyalty. No, Jesus did not mean to discredit his family, his community or his country, but he did mean that all these other loyalties must be subjected to and conditioned by our loyalty to that most inclusive of all groups, the Kingdom of God.

How easy it is for all of us to abide with lesser loyalties, loyalties to limited groups, which give us the virtuous feeling of good fellowship and respectability. In our consideration of universal brotherhood for the world of tomorrow, it is well to recognize that the greatest obstacle that may be encountered is the superficial patriotism, the feeling of brotherhood, within limited groups. "Yea the time cometh," says the writer of St. John, "that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God a service." He will think that he doeth God a service for he will do it in the name of brotherhood. We must learn to think in terms larger than the immediate group to which we belong. Unless we do so, our group loyalty remains group selfishness—perhaps the most subtle and dangerous type of selfishness. For while masquerading under the cloak of brotherhood, it often violates some of the most elemental requirements of Christian character and cultural refinement. In the name of group loyalty we tolerate practices which have long since been recognized as inferior and unworthy in the realm of our individual relationships.

The same readiness to retaliate which we see existing between nations would, in the area of individual relationships, be looked upon as childishness; the same intolerance toward the differences of another would brand one as hopelessly naive and bigoted; the same uncritical acceptance of one's self as superior would be called conceit; the same preoccupation with one's private interests and welfare would be recognized as base selfishness; the same jealous exclusion of others from what is mine, as social immaturity; the same resort to brute force in the case of disagreement, as utter savagery. Dueling as a means of settling disputes, was declared illegal over one hundred years ago when the unworthy Aaron Burr challenged and killed Alexander Hamilton; but war is still with us. We admire the mental and emotional maturity of the little boy who, when challenged by some big bully with the remark, "I bet I can lick you," calmly replied, "I suppose you can"—but we do not seriously expect such maturity in the area of our group relationships.

Not only do our limited group loyalties differ from Christian brotherhood in scope, but often also in spirit. We are united not so much by common appreciations, objectives, and opportunities for service, as by common hostilities. It is the spirit expressed by the lady who when asked whether a certain person was her friend replied, "Yes, I guess you would call us friends. We have the same enemies." Under this type of relationship, a world-wide fellowship such as that of the Kingdom of God could never occur—except perhaps in the case of an "Invasion from Mars,'—for it always takes some division, some opposing group, to give unity and solidarity to one's own group. That this is an active factor in the cohesion of national groupings is seen in the fact that we never feel quite as united as in time of war. And even denominations may not rise above it. I have heard it argued that denominationalism is a necessary and good thing in that it gives vitality and cohesiveness to the individual churches; that apart from some rivalry and competition they would fall apart. If this is true, it is a sad commentary upon the vision of the church regarding its mission here on earth. If churches can find no larger and more unifying project than the preservation of themselves and their distinguishing characteristics, their social contribution will be small.

Working in a Yugoslav Refugee Camp

Dr. C. Richard Yoder and Delvin Kirchhofer are working in Egypt in a camp for Yugoslav refugees. A letter from Dr. Yoder tells a bit about their experiences and feelings:

"There are epidemics of whooping cough, influenza and chickenpox in the camp and today I discovered the first case of mumps. Almost every other patient has fever and a cough. How I wish I had sufficient cough syrup to go round. There are dozens of children here with round worms, also, and if we ever succeed in getting some santonin I will have a busy time with them. It will be the first experience of its kind for me. I feel I am learning a great deal and I really enjoy it. Dealing with these people does require considerable patience at times. On the other hand, they respond readily to sympathy and kindness as do human beings no matter from what part they come. I consider it a wonderful opportunity and a real privilege to be here and have a a share in this work. I can assure you that after all these months I have not been disappointed."

As a special aspect of the problem of expanding our group loyalties is the fact that such an expansion must come to include, beyond our personal relationships, those also of an impersonal character, for these have gained tremendous significance for us today. We deal with and are dependent upon many people whom we do not know, who are strangers to us. While it has never been any less wrong to cheat or mistreat an outsider than a member of one's own group, many seem to act on this assumption and we all know from personal experience that it is actually more difficult to be charitable and fair-minded toward those whom we do not know. Yet there is a particular urgency today that the Christian ethic be made to apply to our impersonal contacts and dealings. We can hardly accept the Biblical interpretation given by the clerk who, after having charged some outsider an exorbitant price for a pair of shoes, explained, "Well, he was a stranger, and I took him in." Industrialization and urbanization have placed our lives at the mercy of others to an extent never before witnessed. Today the city reservoir is our well, the train or bus our covered wagon, the bank or insurance company our wallet. Modern men send their sick to the hospital, their children to schools, and trust the inspector to guard their food, their drugs, and their dwellings. In such an interdependent and complex social order long-range morality is necessary for long-range immorality is possible. Men need virtues like honesty and kindness, but they also need insight and social consciousness. Some of the great evils of our age, possibly even war itself to a large extent, are brought about by men who are honest and kind in their personal relations, but who lack the vision, the knowledge, and the larger sense of social responsibility to avoid such misdeeds.

Professor E. A. Ross, writing three decades ago, saw this problem. He states, "The reality of this close-kit life is not to be seen and touched; it must be thought. The sins it opens the door to are to be discerned by knitting the brows rather than by opening the eyes. It takes imagination to see that bogus medical diploma, lying advertisement, and fake testimonial are death-dealing instruments. It takes imagination to see that savings-bank wrecker, loan shark, and investment swindler, in taking livelihoods takes lives. It takes imagination to see that the business of debauching voters, fixing juries, seducing lawmakers, and corrupting public servants is like sawing through the props of a crowded grand-stand."

Today more than ever it is true that, "Where there is no vision the people perish." We need to move toward larger loyalties also with respect to our impersonal relationships. Most of our moral codes were formed for an agricultural age, where face-to-face relationships prevailed and where there were on the average no more than twenty-five people to the square mile. Today, with more than half the people of our nation living in the city and with densities as high as 25,000 people per square mile, the situation is changed. It is impossible to multiply the density of a population by one thousand and still have the same social setting. Not only in an international but also in a local sense is it true that, "Science has made us neighbors; religion must make us friends."

Finally, if for us to live is Christ and our loyalties are to move from the limited group to humanity at large, we will find it necessary to widen our horizons also in terms of time encompassed. Our loyalties will need to take into account more than the present moment and the present generation. The truly great things in life are neither produced nor proven as great in a day. Although there are some exceptions, it is a pretty general rule that the larger the life the longer it takes to mature. The chicken, for instance, which is hatched in spring, feels herself to be quite a chicken the following August, and if she is a real success in the chicken world she loses her head before Thanksgiving. The horse matures at three of four years. But man keeps growing physically for twenty years and mentally for sixty years or more. Now how long are we willing to wait for success? Does our belief in Christianity demand quick returns, or are we willing to wait with Emerson to hear the verdict of the centuries as against the hours? Unless we are, our faith rests on a very shallow and uncertain basis.

If we focus our gaze upon the moment, we will conclude as have many others, that Christianity does not work. And we will be right, for it doesn't always work. Nothing always works. It didn't even for Jesus. He tried his divine friendship with Judas—that night when he met Judas at the garden gate, coming with the soldiers of the high priests to arrest him. He said to him, "Friend, wherefore art thou come? As though once more, before it was too late, he would appeal to the finest thing known to the human heart, his friendship for him. But it didn't work. It did not work with Caiaphas and Pilate. In the dark depths of the human heart there is the capacity to sin against friendship. And so they crucified Jesus. It did not work. Or did it, afterall? For still the cross conquers. Pilate, Caesar, Judas, Caiaphas—all are gone, but Christ is not. In this near-Easter season we joyfully recall that he lives and is powerful still, with thousands surrendering their hearts to him.

Eve Curie in her Journey Among Warriors tells of interviewing the first batch of German prisoners captured by the Russians. She asked these German lads whether they thought Hitler did right when he invaded Poland. They answered, "Yes." Was Hitler right, she asked, when he invaded France? Again they answered, "Yes." Then she asked, was Hitler right when he marched into Russia. Then the prisoners admitted that the Fuehrer was wrong when he invaded Russia. From that conversation Eve Curie concluded that the Nazi standard of right and wrong was determined solely on the basis of whether the venture met with immediate success. The inadequacy of such a standard for measuring the rightness or wrongness of an activity is only too apparent.

The larger loyalty of which we are here speaking accepts the fact that the mills of God grind slowly. The follower of Christ wants his work to succeed, as does everyone. But he prefers the enduring success of rightness rather than the quick and spurious rewards of expediency. The follower of this larger loyalty is "steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord forasmuch as he knows that his labor is not in vain in the Lord." He is willing to number himself among those who "died in faith not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off."

It is this long-range perspective that must enter as another dimension of our loyalty to humanity if we are in the future to avert such world-wide catastrophes as that confronting us right now. Unless we can look beyond the immediate situation, yes, beyond the immediate generation, we will again find ourselves in a troublesome situation such as the present, a situation in which one cannot even follow the good without in a sense condoning evil. Every man confronting the problem of war today, finds thrust upon him the "forced option" of meeting war with war, or of surrendering, for the time being at least, the personal rights of his group to a totalitarian war machine. In the words of one struggling with this problem, "Here was the dilemma. One had either to fight war by making oneself warlike—by embracing all the cruelties, the suppressions, the agonies which we had detested—or one had to surrender to it and see it enthroned in the world as the central institution of Western civilization." This is the dilemma in which man finds himself, and will find himself again, so long as he acts on the basis of loyalties that are measured for the moment. That is why those of us who are seriously concerned with being peace-makers dare not permit ourselves to feel that we have made our full contribution simply through refusal to participate in time of war. There is yet the more fundamental task of attacking the things that make for war and which may exist for many years before the actual outbreak of hostilities. It is very easy for us as pacifistically-minded Mennonites to adopt the attitude of those about us that with the end of war the issues involved will be settled. Consistency with our position renders this assumption impossible for us. Consistency with our position maintains that war settles nothing. On the contrary, it maintains that war serves only to raise new issues and to aggravate old ones, and that the signing of an armistice, far from marking the end of our work on a great problem, marks only the beginning. Our real answer to the problem of war is found in our relief agencies, missions, and schools of Christian education. It is these that we must promote with renewed vigor if we are sincere in our contention that we hate war.

Yes, loyalty is indeed "the holiest good in the human heart," but only if it is attached to the highest, most inclusive, and enduring Reality known to man, God the Father of all mankind. Man cannot play the game of life intelligently without knowing where the goal posts are. But to find these in the relative standard of group morality, of the existing mores, makes for confusion, and is less than Christian. Without God to give direction to our efforts, loyalty is only an abstraction which, like such other of our traditional virtues as patience, industriousness, initiative, courage, and intelligence, may be as characteristic of a criminal as of a saint. Without this Supreme Loyalty at the heart of our activities, our goodness is in vain and our virtues may prove to be vices.

IN MEMORIAM

MARY A. GOLDSMITH, daughter of Joseph and Magdalene Goldsmith, was born in Butler County, January 27, 1860, and died at Dayton, Ohio, March 14, 1944. She was a member of the Apostolic Mennonite Church, Trenton, Ohio. After the death of her parents she made her home with a sister and brother-in-law in Dayton.

Hagerstown Farm and Community School

Reports from the Hagerstown school on rural life indicate a live interest on the part of the campers enrolled. One report written in the early days of the school, says, "Many men feel that already they have received adequate returns for their coming to the school. Without exception, the talks were rich in content and inspiring in effect." At the present time, the campers are devoting their off-time to the study and discussion of, Ways of Earning a Rural Living, Rural Cooperation, Livestock Management, and Religious Life of the Rural Community.

C.P.S. NOTES

Emergency Farm Labor

A number of C.P.S. Camps located near farming mmunities have been asked in the past by Selective rvice to do emergency farm labor in the way of harsting crops, etc. This type of work necessitates long urs, hard labor, and no pay to the campers. While mpers in general have responded to such work, it has a ndency to lower morale and also creates a number administrative problems for the camp staff. An exmp director recently expressed his concern about emerncy farm labor to the C.P.S. Section at Akron: "Wherever we have S.C.S. (Soil Conservation Service) rk, the very nature of that work puts a responsibility on us to do emergency farm labor where that is cessary, since it would hardly seem right that we ve been concerned about conserving the soil for the ture and not for conserving the immediate crops at nd."

Educational Activities in C.P.S.

The following table taken from a report prepared by e educational secretary shows a partial record of the urses conducted in M.C.C.-C.P.S. camps in the Fall arter of 1943:

Canadian Director Visiting

Cornelius Rempel, recently appointed director for the nadian Office of the Mennonite Central Committee, ng with Sister Rempel, have been visiting the Akron fice in preparation for their new work at Kitchener, tario. Following his stay at Akron, Brother Rempel, ng with Ernest Bennett, will visit the churches in stern Canada. Brother Bennett will report on his p and the work in England.

Canning for C.P.S.

Reports indicate that a number of churches and men's organizations are again preparing to process ds for the men in C.P.S. Camps. The personnel Akron in charge of the canning program are planning location and operation of collection centers along h many other details. Newly-printed folders describ- the program, entitled Gifts in Kind, are off the press l are being sent out to the churches for general disution. With the Lord's blessing of a productive son there will evidently be a bountiful sharing of fruits of the good earth.

MCC-CPS Goes Over 3,000

Reports for the month of March indicate that for the t time the number of men in MCC-CPS camps has ne past the 3,000 mark. Since August of 1943, inducns and releases have counter-balanced.

February 29, 1944	2,977
March 31, 1944	3,023
March Increase	46

s of March 31, 1944, there were 6,974 men in all C.P.S. nps. About forty-four per cent of this number were Mennonite camps.

JOTTINGS

—Nearly one hundred thousand service men are returning each month. "Approximately ten thousand men are being discharged each month as emotionally unfit for service. . . "

—Grace Mennonite Church, Lansdale, Pa., Rev. Albert Gaeddert of the M.C.C. brought the message on "Things That Abide" on March 5.

—"The Booze Bill for 1941 was $4,500,000,000.00."—The Pennsylvania Issue

—Young men from the C.P.S. camp at North Fork, California, reecntly sang for the morning services of the of the Reedley Mennonite Church

—Miss Elinor Schmidt, a member of the First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California, has been accepted as a candidate for foreign mission work by the Foreign Mission Board of the General Conference. The Board will very likely send her to India to serve as a missionary nurse, according to a statement by P. H. Richert, Secretary of the Board. Miss Schmidt is at present completing her training at the Bethel Deaconess Hospital, Newton, Kansas. She will very likely sail sometime this fall with Rev. and Mrs. Paul Wenger and Mary Becker, if God so wills.

—Rev. William H. Stauffer, field worker for the Home Mission Board, spent April 25 and 26 with the Mulberry C.P.S. Unit in Florida and then sailed for Puerto Rico to spend some time with the Mennonite C.P.S. unit there. On his way home he expects to visit the National Service Board for Religious Objectors in Washington. Brother Stauffer has now served the Board for little over a year, and this trip completes his work for the Board.

—Rev. B. H. Janzen, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Lehigh, Kansas, recently visited the C.P.S. Unit at the Buckingham side camp in Colorado. On his way back he also stopped at the Colorado Springs camp.

—Deep Run Mennonite Church, Deep Run, Pennsylvania: "Thursday evening, April 6, we had our preparatory and baptismal service, when two new members were received into the church by baptism. About 150 attended our Easter sunrise service.

—The first draft of the program for the coming session of the General Conference will be published in this paper in the issue of May 16, according to information by Brother J. S. Shultz, Chairman of the Business Committee. Conference regulations require that the program be published three months before the date of Conference. The complete program will be published about three weeks before the conference session. Walter Gering is secretary of the committee, and J. J. Thiessen of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, is the other member.

—Immanuel Mennonite Church, Delft, Minnesota: During April 4 to 7 the Rev. Daniel Unruh from Pandora, Ohio, served our church in evening meetings. He dealt with I Peter, giving us the necessity of real Christian living for believers. "What is the Gospel According to Me?" On Good Friday the young people gave an Easter Program, portraying the Victory of Christ. The Rev. Unruh closed with an inspiring message. On April 7, in the afternoon, the Grace Bible Institute representatives proved a great blessing to us. Rev. J. R. Dick spoke in behalf of the school. A trio furnished the music. Mrs. Dick put the Easter lesson in flannelgraph before the children very vividly. The young people are corresponding with the men in service. They include news of church affairs. "Attempt great things for God. Expect great things of God." —Corr.

—Every correspondent or contributor to this paper should sign his or her name to anything sent in.

—Remember that many more people read the short articles than the long ones.

—The Pacific District Conference will convene at Pratum, Oregon, June 1-4.

—The First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, recently issued a "Church Directory" with its Sunday morning bulletin. This directory, a sheet mimeographed on both sides, listed all the church offices and dates of expiration. In this way all the members have a reference for determining who all the officers are. A recent bulletin of this church had this note, "On March 26 the congregation adopted the recommendation 'that the pastor make arrangements for a ministerial internship for the summer of 1944.' "

—Dr. J. Winfield Fretz visited the two Mennonite churches at Beatrice, Nebraska, on the weekend of April 16. On Saturday evening he met with a young people's fellowship group. This group is made up of young people from both churches and some others. Brother Fretz led a discussion on "The Rural Community and the Kingdom of God." Then on Sunday morning he brought a message on "Christians in Times of War" to the Second Mennonite Church, while Rev. Albert Claassen served the First Church. In the evening Brother Fretz spoke to the Senior C.E. of the First Church on the subject of "Opportunities for Christian Youth." The group was invited to ask questions concerning Mennonite rural life, colonization, C.P.S. dependency, etc. An offering was taken for M.C.C. work and expenses.

The Bethel College A Cappella Choir gave a program for the Friends University Church, Wichita, on April 23.

—The Fairfield Mennonite Church, Fairfield, Pa., now has an outside bulletin board. It is to be "electrified" in the near future.

—Dr. J. H. Langenwalter as Minister-at-Large of the Pacific District Conference has visited thirteen of the sixteen churches of the Pacific District, five C.P.S. camps (one twice), and one army camp. In addition he saw many people individually.

—The Yearbook of the Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota, lists the names of all the members and also the names of all the children who are not yet members.

—Some mistakes crept into the "Yearbook's" list of the officers of the Women's Missionary Association of our conference. We here give the offices and addresses as they should be:

—Verney Unruh, member of the Bethlehem Mennonite Church, Bloomfield, Montana, is to be a ministerial interne this summer for Rev. Walter H. Dyck, who serves the First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska. Brother Unruh is to begin his service on May 28. His duties are listed as including: 1. Assisting and directing or teach a daily vacation Bible school. 2. Teaching Sunday School classes. 3. Assisting in the various services and meetings. 4. Assist the pastor in calls at the Mennonite hospital as well as other pastoral calls. 5. Assist in miscellaneous pastoral duties as the occasion arises. 6. Assume temporary leadership during the pastor's absence. The purpose is stated as threefold: 1. The assistant gains first-hand experience under supervision. 2. The pastor gains the inspiration which mutual sharing brings. He is gradually relieved of certain duties. This time he may devote to other neglected areas or even a time of rest. 3. The church gains a direct opportunity in helping in the training of future ministers or missionaries.

—Wayland Mennonite Church, Wayland, Iowa: The church here stressed the observance of Lent by the daily practice of self-denial, and the pastor, Rev. E. S. Mullett, preaching on appropriate Lenten themes. On the first Friday in Lent, the Worlds Day of Prayer was held at the church, all the other churches of the community cooperating. The High School also dismissed during this period and attended the services in body. On Easter Sunday appropriate services were held. A special offering was also received, amounting to $85.81. This was equally divided between relief work and Christian education.

On Sunday evening, February 27, thirty young people from the C.P.S. unit at the Mt. Pleasant State Hospital gave a very interesting program to a well-filled house.

The Dorcas Society, which meets once a month, has been sewing for relief and has placed an order with the Bluffton, Ohio, cutting headquarters for garments for Greek relief. This society also orders seventy-five copies of the Upper Room each quarter and gives them to shut-ins and sends one to each of the boys in the service.

Representatives of the four Mennonite churches in Iowa met at Donnellson recently and planned a program for the annual Iowa Young Peoples' Retreat to be held this year at Pulaski on July 29-30. —Corr.

And Ye Visited Me

By Walter A. Gering

"Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was an hungred and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me. . . . verily I say unto you inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Great Privilege and Responsibility

These words from the lips of our Lord lead us to a new consideration of the sacred privilege which comes to every minister of the gospel; pastoral visitation of those who are sick and needy is a God-given privilege out of which spring untold blessings both for pastor and patient. In every community there are those who find themselves shut off from the ordinary activities of life because of illness or infirmity. It is these who offer to the pastor one of the greatest privileges and responsibilities which his position can present.

The Church and Medical Care

So important has the church of past ages considered the task of ministering unto the sick that it was not until recent years that the responsibility for the physical care of the sick was given over to secular hands. The words of our Lord were accepted as a direct command from the beginning. Until recent times priest, doctor, and nurse were all one person, namely, the priest. The first hospital, it is said, was established about 300 A.D. as a result of the pilgrimage journeys made to Jerusalem. Travellers weary and worn from their journey met in the hostel. Since many of the pilgrims were starving or sick as they arrived at Jerusalem they needed special care. The hostel took them, cared for them, and as time went on other hostels were founded along the route travelled by the Crusaders, each providing a section for those who were sick. Beside these there were the monasteries which gave attention to the sick. One writer has made the assertion concerning care of the sick that "for nineteen-twentieths of the Christian era it has been done by priests and nuns." Until recent years it has been the Church which has carried medicine, hospital supplies, trained doctors, and nurses to the Orient. Thus, we may say that until comparatively recent times the Church as such has recognized the reality of its responsibility toward the sick. Only in recent years has the care for the sick and needy been relegated to secular institutions and governmental agencies.

The Minister and Visitation of Sick

But while the Church as a whole has sensed its responsibility the ministry has not always been so impressed with its duty in regard to the sick; neither has it always sensed its opportunity. Only too often the ministry has been justly criticized for its failure to minister unto the sick. Various reasons have been given in accounting for this lack. At times there has been a lack of encouragement on the part of medical doctors who have resented "ministerial interference." There has been the feeling at times that the minister stands in the way. Medical opposition, sensed if not often heard by the minister, has kept him from visiting the sick.

On the other hand there have been times when the lack of encouragement has been on the part of the patient himself or his family. Dr. James H. Means of Harvard Medical School once said, "I believe the patient should send for his minister when he gets sick just as he sends for his doctor." Few patients do that; only too often they rely upon rumour to spread the news of their illness. Only when extreme illness prevails and death seems probable is the minister called. Such experiences repeated throughout the years tend to create a spirit of hesitation in the mind of the minister. He is not always assured that his presence will not cause embarrassment.

However there are times when every minister is led to confess that the failure to properly care for the sick in his parish is due to nothing less than sheer neglect and thoughtlessness. Only too often it is due to careless, unsystemmatic methods of procedure which allow lesser things to crowd out the important duties of pastoral visitation.

Relation of the Physical to the Spiritual

A ray of hope comes to us in these days. Once more we are learning that the physical and spiritual wellbeing of man go hand in hand. Recent discoveries bring to light new confirmations of the reality of a sound spiritual life as the basis for physical well-being. Repeatedly notable doctors are saying that what their patients need is not a physician but a vital experience with God. The physical machine of man, the human body, may be cared for by the best of physicians, yet refuse to respond until the inner sicknesses of the soul are healed. That is where the minister finds his place. It is he who has studied the art of ministering unto the inner tensions of the spirit; in that capacity he may be of help. We are thus learning that physician and minister can and must work together in caring for the sick. They are to compliment each other. These new revelations concerning the relationship between physical and spiritual well-being ought to be a tremendous challenge to every pastor to emphasize anew the importance of pastoral calling in his ministry.

This does not mean that the minister is to assume functions outside of his field. The minister is not the doctor. There have been men like Dr. Schweitzer in North Africa, Dr. Grenfell in Labrador and others who because of their unusual abilities and training have been both priest and physician. They are the exception, not the rule. The minister needs to remember that. His capacity is that of one who deals with matters of the spirit, the cure of the soul. His purpose, his efforts, then, are to be directed toward this end.

Pastoral visitation of the sick—this is one of the greatest opportunities of the minister. We need a new emphasis upon this work as a part of the daily task of the ministry.

Several New Series Begin

Several new series of articles are beginning in this issue. Rev. Walter A. Gering, pastor of the Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, is preparing a number of articles on visitation of the sick. Brother Russell L. Mast, pastor of the Deep Run Mennonite Church, Deep Run, Pa., is treating the subject of Sunday School work in this and coming issues. Brother J. H. Langenwalter, in a series of articles will report on his work as Minister-At-Large of the Pacific District Conference. The series on "The Foundation of Our Faith" by J. C. Kaufman continues. Not all the series will run in a consecutive weekly order, but we will try to run them in such a way that the connection will not be lost.

We would also especially call your attention to the article under the heading of "Senior C. E. Department." It makes clear what is essential for our national welfare.

Also read the other good articles, and if you like any especially, please, send us a card telling us so. —rw.

CONGRATULATIONS

As indicated in the issue of April 18, the Apostolic Mennonite Church, Trenton, Ohio, has adopted the 100 Per Cent Church Paper Plan. This church is the second one in the district to adopt the plan, and it is the first independent church in the district to do so. The Mennonite Bible Mission, Chicago, which was first to adopt the plan, is under our Home Mission Board.

We pray that the church at Trenton may receive great blessings from the newly adopted plan. Undoubtedly, it won't take long and a goodly number of members in that church will know considerably more about our conference work than they knew before. As they know more their interest will be heightened. As they know more they can pray more effectively for the work of our conference. As they know more they will feel more a part of that larger fellowship that is our General Conference. As they know more the work of their own church will stand out in bolder relief. Furthermore, as they read the paper they will find nourishment for the soul—nourishment that cannot be found in a daily newspaper.

May God shed His grace upon the 100 Per Cent Church Paper Plan at Trenton and elsewhere. —rw.

Lovest Thou Me?

Peter had been close to Jesus. He was in the select circle that witnessed the transfiguration, and he was one of the picked three in the Garden of Gethsemane. He was so bold for Jesus as to cut off another man's ear. In face of death he told Jesus, "Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee." Peter must have loved Jesus. But was that love deep enough?

When Peter followed Jesus from afar off, and when Peter denied Jesus for the third time, cursing and swearing and saying, "I know not the man," the inadequacy of his love was laid bare.

Jesus was concerned that Peter have a much deeper love than that. If Peter was to be the mighty preacher of Pentecost, then he needed a love that went to bedrock. "Lovest thou me?" "Feed my sheep." Ah, how deeply Jesus must have driven home the truth that deep love for Him must always express itself in witness of Him.

"Lovest thou me?" "Feed my sheep." Isn't Jesus saying this today to everyone that claims to be a disciple of His? Is Jesus content with a love that ends in a silence which is suggestive of "I know not the man"? Is Jesus content to be so low in our estimation that we don't care to tell others about Him? Listen! He is asking, "Lovest thou me?" —rw.

Speak Out for Jesus

"You talk about your business,
Your bonds and stocks and gold;
And in all worldly matters
You are so brave and bold.
But why are you so silent
About salvations plan?
Why don't you speak for Jesus,
And speak out like a man?

"You talk about the weather,
And the crops of corn and wheat;
You speak of friends and neighbors
That pass along the street;
You call yourself a Christian,
And like the gospel plan—
Then why not speak for Jesus,
And speak out like a man?

"Are you ashamed of Jesus
The story of the cross,
To lower His pure banner
And let it suffer loss?
Have you forgot His suffering?
Or did He die in vain?
If not, then live for Jesus,
And speak out like a man."

A Ministry-at-Large -- How It Came About

At the session of the Pacific District Conference at Reedley, California, in 1943 it became evident that there was a keen sense of existing needs. This fact led one committee after the other to ask for a person who could devote from one to four months in the field for each cause which they represented. This sense of responsibility was also expressed by a number of people who were not members of the Conference Committees.

After representatives of the Young People's, the Education, the Peace and the Evangelization Committees had presented their needs, a motion was passed to engage one person for the entire year to represent all phases of the Conference activities in cooperation with the officers and committees elected by the Confer-nce.

The spirit which prevailed during the discussion and the passing of the motion evealed a hopefulness which was all the ore encouraging because of the diffi-ult conditions which the world was acing.

The fact that the balance on the debt n the parsonage at Portland, Oregon, had been paid n full added to the willingness to undertake a new roject. People felt that what had been done once ould be done again. Better incomes on the part of any made such a step seem all the more possible f achievement.

There was a desire to help young men of draft age, hether they had already been inducted into some orm of service or whether they were still waiting for heir call.

There was a recognition of the fact that the church as a definite part to play in a time of crisis. This ed to a brief but forthright discussion of the situa-ion confronting the Pacific District Conference as ell as Christianity as a whole. The new arrangement as to be undertaken until the next session of the onference. This was evidence of careful deliberation. e were facing an experiment of importance and anted to go about it with care.

The newly elected officers of the Conference were ppointed to make the necessary arrangements for e work to be done. After careful deliberation they equested the undersigned to consider undertaking e responsibility of the work which the Conference ad voted. This matter was carefully and prayerfully onsidered by all concerned in several meetings. After at there was a called meeting of all members of onference Committees with the officers to give rther consideration to this important matter.

In the light of the foregoing steps the undersigned greed to accept the position which had been created the Conference. It was decided that the title of e worker should be Minister-at-Large of the Pacific istrict Conference. This title was considered better ted to suggest the service to be rendered than that Field Secretary. The wisdom of this change has come evident in many ways.

The work was to begin in the early fall or as soon as the Reedley Church could make arrangements for another minister. Out of respect for the rights of the Reedley Church there was to be no publicity until they had had time to look for another minister.

In order that the Minister-at-large might have every opportunity of becoming thoroughly acquainted with the possibilities of the work before him, the officers voted that he should attend the Mennonite Cultural Conference to be held at Goshen, Indiana, in July. This afforded a very helpful opportunity to get facts and attitudes up to date and lessened the danger of having to learn some matters the hard way.

Dr. Langenwalter

The time between June 20 and October 1, 1943, was spent in closing a large ministry and in trying to think one's self into an untried type of service. The undersigned is greatful for the thoughtful consideration shown by many friends of the work. Some of them frankly expressed doubts, but did it in such a way as to make one careful without discouragement. Their attitude has been a matter of real help in the expected and unexpected difficulties which have had to be met.

The next message concerning this work will appear under the subtitle of "What Has Been Attempted."

PRAYER MEETING

By P. K. Regier

The secret of the success of a Church is communion and fellowship with God in Christ Jesus. The source of power for triumphant Christian living is prayer. How well has Richard C. Trench expressed this great truth when he says, "Why should we ever weak or heartless be, Why are we ever overborne with care, anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer, and joy, and strength, and courage are with Thee?" And also this thought, "Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong, or others, that we are not always strong?"

If this is true, and no one would be willing to deny it, what a responsibility and privilege rests upon that group of people of any Church who gather at a definite time each week for meditation and prayer! In too many Churches that group is too small. In some Churches the Mid-Week Prayer Services are neglected altogether. The life of such a Church certainly misses a specific means by which and through which it can make its work count for good in the community. But more important than that—it neglects that exercise of Christian devotion by which and through which God can and does bless the life of individuals and of the Church as a whole.

If God puts it upon your heart to be a member of such a praying group in your Church, will you resist Him?

WHAT IS TEACHING?

By Russell L. Mast

Teaching is not "talking" before a class. It is not pouring a fund of information into empty heads. It is not inducing someone to commit a "lesson" to memory. It may include these factors, but teaching itself is a far more vital experience.

Jesus, the Master Teacher

We are in the habit of calling Jesus the Master Teacher. Of all the titles that were applied to him, that of teacher was most frequently used. This was more than a pious phrase. For his success as a teacher of men was unique in the history of the race. Christian leaders and teachers do well to consider his method as a standard for all to follow. What was teaching in the sense in which Jesus engaged in it? What did he try to accomplish as a teacher, and how did he measure his results?

Teaching Often Too Artificial

Observation leads one to believe that our conception of teaching is too artificial and frequently out of touch with reality. We have been too easily satisfied that teaching has been effective when once the pupil has been able to give back to us the facts which we have tried to impart to him. According to the standard of Jesus these are meager results, to say the least! Facts for him were not ends in themselves but only means to those ends. In his teaching ministry Jesus sought to make men so keenly aware of truth that it made profound changes in their lives. The Christian teacher can do no less. His object is to help people make desirable changes in their attitudes and in their modes of conduct. Underlying this objective is the conviction that no one in his Christian experience has reached the place where changes are no longer desirable or necessary. All of us stand in need of Christian growth, which means, essentially constant change.

I repeat, we have been too easily satisfied with our results. We have mistaken the means for the end. The child who can repeat the memory verse, "Be ye kind one to another," but nevertheless continues to be selfish with his possessions and to be unkind and thoughtless to his associates has in fact not learned the memory verse, but has merely memorized it.

True Teaching, A Pervasive Force

Moreover, let us realize that the teaching-learning process is not confined to a given period on Sunday, or to a given lesson in the quarterly. How do we make others aware of truth? How did Jesus do it? "The word was made flesh and dwelt among us." His words, his deeds, his life—all were media through which he taught.

Teaching, therefore, involves any activity which makes people aware of truth and corresponding changes within their lives. It is successful only to the degree that Christian attitudes and Christian modes of conduct become embodied in the lives of those who learn. In another article I plan to state more specifically what changes are desirable. But first we need to recognize that we are not sufficiently aware of truth till it makes changes within our lives, and the lives of those whom we would teach.

THE MURDERER

It was two o'clock in the night. Something stung Daud (David) Pateram in his right hand. He flung it off with his left hand. "It was only an insect." Daud tried to go to sleep again. But the hand began to hurt and he felt swelling. He rouses a fellow student. The two go to the doctor. "Was it a snake or a scorpion?" "No, neither," was the reply. So the doctor ordered the hand to be fomented with hot salt water. It was done. After about an hour, Daud became dizzy. Soon dawn approached, and fellow students and the boarding housefather carry Daud to the hospital. The doctor and his staff treat him for poison. But his throat chokes. His tongue swells. Foam begins to come out of his nostrils, and at nine a.m. his spirit takes flight. Daud is a corpse. Where is the murderer? When all the above symtoms came to light the doctor said: "It was a cobra," one of the most deadly snakes in India. Search was made, but the vile murderer had made his safe escape, and is now perhaps lurking for another victim.

Daud Pateram was a nineteen year old youth, a graduate from our mission school, and now a student in our second year normal training course. Only ten more months and he was to be ready to go out into some village to be the preacher—teacher, yes, the shepherd of a Christian group. Why did God permit this awful thing to take place? Are Christian workers not badly needed? The cry for shepherds is great. Here was a young man whom a hospital job was offered with prospects of much better salary But he preferred to become an humble shepherd o some flock of poor Christians and their children Now, O Lord, why this? "My ways are higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts,'

The murderer was not found until a second boy exactly one month later, fell victim to the venom Little Sontash, about seven years old, was bitten i his ear while he slept. A few hours his little body was a corpse. That day in the evening the murdere was found and killed. It was a snake about tw feet long, slimy and deadly. We are all exposed t such deadly reptiles. Our frequent petitions: "Pra for us," has again a new meaning.

Making Life Worth While

May every soul that touches mine—
Be it the slightest contact—
Get therefrom some good;
Some little grace; one kindly thought;
One aspiration yet unfelt;
One bit of courage
For the darkening sky;
One gleam of faith
To brave the thickening ills of life;
One glimpse of brighter skies
Beyond the gathering mists—
To make this life worth while
And heaven a surer heritage.

—George Eliot

GOD MADE THE COUNTRY

By Emil J. Waltner

Recently I have spent almost four weeks in a mid-western city, and returning to the quiet life on the farm, I feel with John Keats, "To one who has been long in city pent, 'Tis very sweet to look into the fair and open face of heaven,—To breathe a prayer full in the smile of the blue firmament."

Every time I spend a few days or a week in the city, I come home more firmly convinced of the truth of the saying, that "Man made the city, but God made the country." If we pick up the literature published by the Chamber of Commerce of any large city, we find some glowing descriptions of the American cities. The business and educational advantages, art institutes and museums, the fine residential districts, the recreational facilities, parks and playgrounds, schools and hospitals and churches are all listed,—and we must admit that our American cities have some very fine institutions. One the other hand, the snares and pitfalls of the city—the liquor joints, the night clubs, the gambling dens, and many other questionable enterprises, are not listed. They do their own advertising, and very effectively too.

In the Guide Book of greater Kansas City, mention is made of 295 churches, but no mention is made of the 621 liquor stores or outlets that supply Kansas City. Of the modern city, Lyman Abbott says: "On the one hand, the city stands for all that is evil—a city that is foul of devils and corrupting; and on the other hand, the city stands for all that is noble, full of the Glory of God and shining with a clear and brilliant light. The greatest corruption, the greatest vice, the greatest crime, are to be found in the great city. The greatest philanthropy, the greatest purity, the most aggressive and noble courage, are to be found in the great city." And here is a part of Carl Sandburg's description of Chicago. "They tell me you are wicked, and I believe them; for I have seen your painted women under the gas lamps luring the farm boys; and they tell me you are crooked, and I answer: Yes, it is true, I have seen the gunman kill, and go free to kill again. And they tell me you are brutal, and my reply is: On the face of women and children, I have seen the marks of wanton hunger."

One of the greatest factors which influence the growing child is the home. There is a vast difference between the home of the city, and the home in he country. Not every body living in the crowded city can live in the fine residential districts and in palatial homes. Nearly every large city still has its lum districts and tenement houses. Many thouands of city children are born in these tenement districts. Of these Dr. Josiah Strong wrote: "When mpressionable childhood is subjected to the influnce of profanity, obscenity, and bloody brawls of drunken men and dissolute women, would it be a moral miracle if character were not corrupted? It s almost inevitable that children of the tenements, while yet of tender years, should become familiar with very form of vice. They would have to be born blind and deaf in order to escape moral contamination. In view of the conditions under which many thousands are forced to live, the wonder is not that so many go astray, but that any escape."

There is no doubt in my mind that life in the modern city, is most conducive to the divorce evil. Before me I have a clipping from the Kansas City Times of March 15, 1944. In one column, under the heading MARRIAGE LICENCES are published the names of men and women to whom marriage licences were issued that day, in Kansas City and in Wyandotte County. The total number of licenses issued is twenty-eight. Right beside this column is another column with the heading DIVORCE SUITS, granted and filed in Kansas City and Wyandotte County on the same day. The total number of suits for divorce is exactly thirty-one. Let the reader draw his own conclusions. Quoting from an article in the Reader's Digest for February last, we find the following interesting conversation of St. Louis police officers. "Well, the other night—three o'clock in the morning it was—two policemen found a kid eight years old, begging in a downtown tavern. They phoned the kid's father. He said, 'Oh, I can't come down town now; I'll be down some before noon. Hold him, will you?' Then they phoned the kid's mother, who was living apart from the father. She was sore as a boil. 'Why should I take care of the kid?' she demanded. 'His father's responsible!' And she slammed down the phone. 'Think of that—a kid eight years old—in a tough joint—and neither parent interested!'"

Browsing through Emil Ludwig's book The Son of Man in a city library recently, I came across this interesting passage: "His crowning delight is to linger with his disciples at board; and to them he gives his full confidence, talking as freely as he used to in Nazareth when a friend or two had gathered to hear him in front of the carpenter's cottage. The only places he avoids are the larger towns. He never goes to Tiberius, though every child in the countryside has been thither once at least, to gape at its splendours. He keeps away even from Taricheae and Sephoris. Such places, he feels, are the centres of a bustling life, the homes of authority and ambition and money; those who dwell there will have no ears for his message. Farther to the south, in Judea, is the great city where powerful priests hold sway, interpreters of Holy Writ, masters of formula. The tacit hostility of the scribes in the synagogue at Capernaum has shown him that men of this sort are his enemies. Jesus keeps away from Jerusalem."

I stood on State Street in Chicago and watched the crowds going to work in the morning. It was just about the time the great department stores opened for the day. Humanity was pouring in from all sides. They walked, they came in automobiles, in street cars, and in elevated trains. The roar and the noise of the street cars and elevated trains was deafening. Everybody seemed to be in a feverish rush and hurry to get to his job on time. What a sight, what an inspiration for beginning of the day's work. A few blocks from this scene in the Art Institute, I came upon another picture, a rural scene in far-off France. The sun is just rising, the lark is up to meet the sky. A peasant girl, strong and healthy is going to work in the field. The soul of the peasant girl is in tune with all nature around her, happy to be alive. "Why should she not be happy:—rich enough to breathe the air of liberty, strong enough to do her daily task, full of peace and contentment, for God is good to her." Such a picture can only be found in the country, and only an artist in warm sympathy with life in the fields and meadows can paint such pictures. Such is Jules Briton's picture The Song of the Lark.

In the city and often in the country, life is one continuous rush, "The world is too much with us; late and soon, getting and spending we lay waste our powers: Little we see in nature that is ours." Life on the farm is constantly near to nature and to those "who in the love of nature hold communion with her visible forms she speaks a various language; for his gayer hours she has a voice of gladness, and a smile and an eloquence of beauty; and she glides into his darker musings with a mild and healing sympathy, that steals away their sharpness ere he is aware." Where is the balm in the city that will provide a healing sympathy or take away the sharpness of bitter disappointment and trouble. One of the saddest pictures in the city is that of the head of the family, the bread winner out of a job, tramping the streets for days in search of work.

What has the country life to offer to the young man and woman starting out in life today? One of the finest expressions of rural optimism is found in The Country Boy's Creed, by Edwin Osgood Grover, "I believe that the country which God made is more beautiful than the city which man made; that life out-of-doors and in touch with the earth is the natural life of man. I believe that work is work wherever I find it; but that work with Nature is more inspiring than work with the most intricate machinery. I believe that the dignity of labor depends not on what you do, but on how you do it; that opportunity comes to a boy on the farm as often as it does to a boy in the city; that life is larger and freer and happier on the farm than in town; that my success depends not on my location, but upon myself,—not upon my dreams, but upon what I actually do, not upon luck but upon pluck. I believe in working when you work and playing when you play."

It is true that in dollars and cents, farming does not always pay as well as some city job, but there are "many blessings" that we often forget to count when we figure profits and loss.

David Grayson in his latest book Under My Elm gives an interesting example of figuring profits and loss. His first income from the sale of honey was something like this:

Honey, first three lots cost to produce—$26.
Honey, received for three lots, cash and trade—$12

This account showed at a glance that his honey account was much in the red. He revised his figures and added the following items to the credit side:

Joy at the job since April, 6 Months at $3.—$18.
First class appetite for supper ever night six months at $1. 6
Comfortable weariness and good sound sleep after hard labor out-of-doors, 6 months at $1.—6
Interesting and inventive thoughts, 6 months at $3. 18
Good will—this item appears in many sound accountings of great companies. Why not in mine; I have already earned the good will of several people in this neighborhood. . So in it goes. 1
Balance Clear Profit . $35
$61 $61

Now his account shows a clear profit of $35 instead of a loss. We would not want to use this system of accounting when we make out our income tax report.

What we all need today, is more of the spirit of the pioneer. Our parents and grand parents were among these pioneers, and to them the present generation owes a lot. It is only fitting and proper that here and there monuments are being erected to their honor. Much tribute is due to the heroic pioneer mother who was willing to share the hardships of pioneer life and to rear her family amidst pioneer surroundings. On the highway overlooking Ponca City, Oklahoma stands the statue of a "Pioneer Mother." The figure shows a mother leading her young son by one hand, and carrying a Bible in the other hand. This mother, help-mate, and companion unflinchingly assumes the dutites of home maker in a wilderness of unplowed acres. Another such statue to a pioneer mother is located in Penn Valley Park, of Kansas City. Seated on a horse, with an infant in her arms, led by her husband and followed by another horse loaded with baggage, this pioneer couple sets out for the west. The inscription on the bronze plate says: To commemorate the Pioneer mother, who with unfaltering trust in God, suffered the hardship of the unknown west to prepare for us a homeland of peace and plenty, and on the granite base of this statue are inscribed the words of Ruth when Naomi entreated her to go back to her people.

I have heard young girls born and raised in the city, say they would not live on the farm, and I have known other girls born and raised in the city say to their farmer lovers, "Whither thou goest, I will go, where thou lodgest, I will lodge. Thy people shall be my people, and thy God, my God." And they have enjoyed life and made good on the farm.

A MISTAKE?

Was it a mistake that the Mennonite church undertook to finance the C.P.S. program? It may be that there are some who ask some such question. I disregard the matter of finance—there is money enough and to spare. I think of the principle involved.

Growing Conscience Against War

In World War I the peace churches were practically alone in their opposition to war; in World War II they are not alone. In 1917 many eminent churchmen lent their position and influence to the sordid business of war; today they have reversed their position. Secular organizations have sprung up which support the onscientious objector and his cause. Churches that lid not raise their voice against war in that other vorld cataclysm are now very positively upholding he right of individual conscientious objection to and ibstention from war. The recently published report Congress Looks at the Conscientious Objector presents n imposing array of individuals, peace organizations, nd churches, and their testimony in support of the onscience against war. The report makes the statenent that at least 115 denominations, besides the hisoric peace churches, are represented in this testimony nd that about one-third of all the men in the C.P.S. amps come from these other denominations. It looks ke an astounding change that has come, since that ther war, over the churches and over large sections of ie public conscience. It is not a discouraging sign.

Public conscience against war becomes more sensive and more articulate, finding voice through writ:s and movements. One of more recent date is the eace Now movement, headed by Professor George artmann of Harvard University, and maligned by ie proponents of war. It proposes a better way than ar.

England has those who propose the better way, and ey multiply. The Fellowship of Reconciliation ben in England in 1914 and was extended to the United ates in 1915, as a "movement of Christian protest ainst war and of faith in a better way than violence r the solution of all conflict." There are over 10,000 embers of that movement in the United States, more an 13,000 in Britain, and smaller groups in other untries. The movement rejects the method of war. The Peace Pledge Union, founded in England too, d 123,000 members when the war began. When e first two age groups were conscripted in 1939, d men of twenty and twenty-one were called to the lors, eight thousand refused to go. They were mem rs of this Peace Pledge Union. This statement is ken from the book Dare You Face Facts, by Mur Lester, a British writer, and she adds this comment: onsidering that we English have been accustomed to king our way through history for over a thousand rs, it is perhaps something to ponder on, someng rather important, that is being evolved in this tury."

A Non-violent Revolution

re we aware of what is happening in the world ay? There is in progress not only a violent worldolution, but a non-violent one. Conscientious objection to war in the United States has grown since 1914—not only in the Church but outside of it. We have more conscientious objectors to war now than in that other war. England has many more today than she had in World War I. Up to September 6, 1941, over 62,000 had declared themselves to be conscientious objectors. But these were men of military age only. Behind them, it is reported, is a growing body of public opinion with similar views. On November 25, 1941, the House of Commons was told that there were about 2,000,000 in Britain that shared these views. The peace principle of the peace churches begins to show its expansive quality.

The Church of the Brethern has stood for about 250 years for that "something rather important that is being evolved in this century." The Society of Friends has maintained a similar position for about 300 years, and the Mennonites for over 400 years. It was some 2,000 years ago that the concept of peace to which these groups hold was introduced into the world. Our young men of the Civilian Public Service, who are the inheritors of this concept, have accepted it and dare to bear testimony to it. But the historic peace churches do not stand alone in this today.

The Light of a Minority

We, as Christian pacifists, are still a minority, but a growing minority. In the booklet The Relevance of an Impossible Ideal, George Macgregor, Dean of the Faculty of Theology in the University of Glasgow, Scotland, makes the significant statement: "When that minority becomes the majority, will not the Christian Church have indeed reached the point when she must either become pacifist or give up her religion?" And he concludes: "Pacifist she must become when the return of peace gives her a second chance to rethink her faith—if at least she is not to surrender her last claim to the moral leadership of the nations."

Total Peace, or Total War

There is a growing awareness in the world, both in the secular mind and the Christian mind, that there are only two alternatives before mankind: total peace, or total war. If the forces that make for total war prevail, the Church must live under constant pressure by the State. If total peace should come, and under the leadership of secular elements, the Christian Church will have missed a vast opportunity. The Church can demonstrate her spiritual leadership most convincingly if she takes the lead in bringing peace to the world. That is unmistakably the duty and opportunity of the Church at large today—if she rightly wills, "in this her day, the things which belong unto her peace."

A Mistake?

Should we say to our young men in the Civilian Public Service that it is all a mistake? That it is wrong to practice peace in a world upon which the powers of ill are wreaking wanton devastation and inhuman slaughter of humanity such as the world has never known before? Now, that the Christian Church is waking up and mass-movements and voices from all over the world come to her support—shall we say we

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Arnold Nickel, Mountain Lake, Minnesota

MAY 8—"This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Matt. 17:5. Read John 1:14-29.

This is the greatest testimony ever witnessed concerning the sonship of Jesus. The Scriptures do not try to prove by argumentation that He is the beloved Son. It takes the sonship for granted. The Father is often displeased with men, but never with His Son. Whether in heaven or on earth, in the physical body or in the spiritual body, in the manger or on the cross, Jesus Christ is the Beloved in the Father's eyes. Let "heaven and earth pass away," yet never will God's Word become a fallacy. It is a fact never to be changed.

MAY 9—"Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" Matt. 16:13b. Read Rom. 1:21-32.

Men of the world in Jesus' time did not accept His Divinity. They called Him "the carpenter's son," "the son of Joseph and Mary," "a prophet," and still others said, "He hath a devil."

Today, non-Christians do not regard Him as the Son of God, but attribute Him with every conceivable characteristic possible. The atheist knows there is no God. The blasphemer calls Jesus the greatest deceiver ever born. The religious modernist believes that He was simply a great moral teacher who taught honesty, beauty, and the brotherhood of all mankind.

MAY 10—"He saith unto them, 'But whom say ye that I am?' " Matt. 16:15. Read Acts 2:22-36.

Peter's answer is short, full, and true; Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God. This is a confession of the Christian faith; a confession of every believer in the Son of God. His followers own Him as the great Prophet, Priest, and Head of the church. While here on earth His divine nature was clouded in the veil of flesh; today we see Him as the Only begotten of the Father. He is a Lamb to the sinner, a Light to the lost, and eternal Life to the dying. Let us altogether bow and adore Him.

MAY 11—"Ye are from beneath; I am from above." John 8:23a. Read John 8:17-25.

The world rejects and ridicules Christ because it cannot understand Him. They are a part of the world. Their thoughts and desires are centered on things of the earth. The natural man is spiritually discerned because he is sinful.

Christ is from above and not of this world. His abode is with the Father in heaven. His redemption is for those on earth. His purpose is to draw lost men out of the pit of sin and take them unto Himself. There is no one as high as He, nor so low that He is not able to lift him.

MAY 12—"I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep and am known of mine." John 10:14. Read Ps. 23:1-6.

In our modern day it is difficult to distinguish between a professing and a possessing Christian. One who possesses Christ will also profess Him, but one who professes Christ does not necessarily possess Him. But let us not be dismayed, the Great Shepherd knows His sheep, and His sheep know Him. There should be no room for a true Christian to doubt his relationship with the Shepherd. We sometimes doubt our salvation instead of confessing our sins. Confessions, not doubts, will assure a close relationship between the Shepherd and His sheep.

MAY 13—"What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey Him!" Matt. 8:27. Read Mark 4:35-41.

Christ is a commanding power over all His creation. He spoke and the winds and waves were calm, the blind received their sight, the demons fled, the sick were healed, the Scribes and Pharisees were speechless, and the persecuters fell before Him. Our Saviour's Gospel is the only religion characterized by power. It has blotted out our sins and liberated us from the power of sin. It has overcome death and given us eternal life. Our Lord is able to contro the elements, and He is able to control the lives o those who trust in Him.

MAY 14—"For my yoke is easy, and my burden i light." Matt. 11:30. Read Isa. 58:1-8.

The child of God is not free from yokes and burdens. The yoke speaks hardships, but if the beas draw, the yoke helps it. The yokes of sin and th burdens of misery in this world are mind-wreckin and heart-breaking. Christ's yoke is to help Christians walk with diligence, humbleness, and in communion with the saints. The burden is not joyou but grievious; yet if it is Christ's it is light. God love, Christ's assurance, and the Spirit's aid mak suffering for Christ light and easy.

MAY 15—"Unto you therefore which believe He precious." I Pet. 2:7a. Read I Pet. 2:1-10.

Jesus Christ is very precious to all the faithfu All the treasures of this world are but tempor things. Our Lord is precious to us because He h purchased us from the slave market of sin, and h taken us into His Kingdom. He has promised supply our daily needs, to hear and answer o prayers, bless us with all spiritual blessings, and "never leave us nor forsake us."

"He is so precious to me,
For He is so precious to me.
'Tis heaven below
My Redeemer to know;
For He is so precious to me."

were mistaken in that we held unequivocally to the way of peace taught 2,000 years ago by One whom we profess as Master?

Enlightened conscience and judgment clearly point the answer.

The Mennonites in C.P.S. and the Mennonite Church: A Panel Discussion

By Paul R. Shelly

A panel discussion on the subject "The Mennonites n C.P.S. and the Mennonite Church" was held at the nonthly meeting of the New York Mennonite Fellowship on April 12. The members of the panel were nembers of C.P.S. units in hospitals in the New York-Philadelphia area: Loris Habegger, Marlboro; Arnold Krause, Vineland; and Allen Dourte and Lawrence Burkhalter, Greystone. Paul R. Shelly was chairman. Six questions were discussed:

1. Why are you in C.P.S.?
2. Has the C.P.S. program met your needs?
3. Has the C.P.S. program contributed anything to your spiritual growth?
4. Has the C.P.S. program met the needs of your church?
5. Has the C.P.S. program made any contribution to a spirit of tolerance between the various Mennonite groups?
6. Do you have any suggestions to make as to means by which boys from C.P.S. and the Army, as well as the other branches of the service, can be united in local churches after the war in setting up a program to maintain the Mennonite way of life?

Members of the audience were also invited to participate in the discussion. This article gives a summary of the discussion.

I. Why are you in C.P.S.?

A number of influences were mentioned. Convictions are acquired, not inherited. It was discovered that each person had arrived at his own convictions. The home was one of the influences that was mentioned. However, one of the members of the panel said that his home had no influence in helping him to arrive at his convictions. Another said that one of the bishops of his church had a great influence in helping him to arrive at his own conviction. He said that this influence came about both through the personal messages of the bishop and through a booklet which he had written. The teaching of a Sunday School class was another influence mentioned. Teaching school was another. These are by no means exhaustive. However, they are suggestive as to the types of things that were effective in the past in helping people to arrive at their own convictions.

II. Has the C.P.S. program met your needs?

The concensus of the members of the panel was that the C.P.S. program has not entirely met their needs but that it is the best program that is available and that they should be thankful for the opportunities that are offered to them. One of the members of the audience asked the members of the panel whether they considered non-combatant service. The members of the panel were in agreement that this form of service was not an adequate expression of their testimony.

A few interesting problems were discussed. One of the members of the panel felt that the C.P.S. program was possibly too easy a way out for us to be really tested in our faith. Some of the members felt that a more adequate program of counselling should be worked out for those in hospital units. It was pointed out that it might be well to have an added lem to some extent. A suggestion from the audience pointed out that it might be well to have an added person on the M.C.C. staff who would be in charge of the spiritual affairs of the boys.

III. Has the C.P.S. program conributed anything to your spiritual growth?

The members of the panel gave several experiences of observations they had made of members of the various hospital units. One person has read the Bible through since he was in a hospital unit and has had his entire outlook changed. Another person was cited who was entirely transformed while he was working in one of the hospital units. One of the members of the panel pointed out the fact that the hospital work provided a different kind of a problem than that faced in the C.P.S. camps. He said that in a camp you were a member of a community that was united around a common purpose. This helped a person to carry out his way of life. He said that in a hospital unit you were alone quite often and it was more difficult to maintain your way of life. It was pointed out that counselling by the right kind of ministers is very helpful in meeting this problem.

IV. Has the C.P.S. program met the needs of your Church?

The members of the panel represented the General Conference Mennonites and the Brethren in Christ. However, four other groups were represented in the audience: the (old) Mennonites, Mennonite Brethren in Christ, Mennonite Brethren, and the Evangelical Mennonite Brethren. All of these participated in the discussion.

A number of the problems of the present program were discussed. Most of these are related to the next question and will be discussed there.

V. Has the C.P.S. program made any contribution to tolerance between the various Mennonite groups?

The members of the panel felt that the C.P.S. program has developed a spirit of understanding both of the similarities and the differences between the various Mennonite groups. They felt that we should know these.

They felt that every one should try to help each group to maintain its own distinctive characteristics. The members of the panel said that in each of the units they represented this approach was taken.

It was pointed out that visiting ministers should be encouraged to take this same kind of approach in their visits to the various units. They said that visiting ministers should not approach the group or problems in the light of their own particular outlook but rather in the light of the conference affiliation of each individual member of the unit.

They said that some problems existed in this field of tolerance. However, the members of the panel, as well as the members of the entire audience, were hopeful on this matter. They felt that we should strive to make progress by recognizing our similarities and our differences and by encouraging each group to carry on its own distinctive way of life while cooperating with other groups.

VI Do you have any suggestions to make as to means by which boys from C.P.S. and the Army, as well as the other branches of the service, can be united in local churches after the war in setting up a program to maintain the Mennonite way of Life?

The members of the panel were very much interested in this whole problem. It was discovered that members of several groups are thinking through this problem. It was pointed out that not all Mennonites would treat this issue in the same way. Some one pointed out the fact that a few editorials had appeared in the Gospel Herald on this issue.

One of the members of the panel emphasized the fact that three groups will be involved in this problem and that each must take a repentant attitude and all must sit down together and work this thing out. He said that the local churches had a definite responsibility, that the leadership in some of the churches was partly responsible for the fact that we have not maintained our Mennonite way of life as well as we might have, and that the boys who have gone into the Army and other forms of the service must also be willing to sit down with the others and think through this whole issue. The third group, he said, was the C.P.S. group. Much depends on the members of this group, on the way they will approach others.

The other definite contribution on this last issue was the fact that the future of the Mennonite Church depends largely on two things: Namely the type of leadership which we will provide and the effectiveness of training each person to choose for himself the way of his fathers.

A quartet from the Greystone Hospital sang four numbers. This quartet was composed of Allen Dourte, Eugene Carper, Lawrence Burkhalter, and Isaac Harms. Mrs. Dourte, Mrs. Carper, and Mrs. Burkhalter also accompanied the group. The quartet sang for its last number: "Ich Weiss einen Strom." Willie Schrag and Alvin Doell of Marlboro were also present. Jacob Enz had charge of the devotional service.

The committee arranging for this special program was composed of Paul Wenger, Paul Barackman, and Lawrence Burkhalter.

The final meeting of the New York Mennonite Fellowship for the current school year will be held on May 11.

SENIOR DEPARTMENT

THE THINGS WHICH BELONG TO PEACE

I love my God, and I love my country. I would like to do something for my country in this time of trouble. I want to do for it what is best for it and as much as I can. Since I myself do not know what is best I go to God to find out. He has sent Jesus Christ to reveal Him and so I go to Christ's teachings to find the way.

I find in the fifth chapter of Matthew, "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth," and also "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." Further on it says, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: but I say unto you, That ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also," and "Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain." The Jews hated the Romans, under whose rule they were. Roman soldiers sometimes compelled Jews to carry their army packs for them for a Roman mile. The Jews deeply resented this. Jesus suggested that the Jew go an extra mile. Does this make sense?

A few lines down it says, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." But why such demands which go against common practice? "That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." He is kind to good and bad alike the Word of our Master says.

We are asked to use this difficult petition in the Lord's Prayer, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us." Furthermore, he tells Peter on one occasion that he is to forgive the one who sins against him not only seven times, but seventy times seven. And in a parable he sets forth the story of a king who forgave his servant a debt of 10,000 talents, but when this servant demanded payment of 100 pence from a fellow servant the king meted out punishment and required payment of all that was due him. Then the ominous words, "So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." Another passage says, "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive your trespasses."

Then I find other parables like that of the good Samaritan where Jesus exhorts very forcefully to help those who are in need, and the picture of the last judgment where those are placed on the right who have dealt kindly and lovingly with their fellowmen and those who have not done so are placed on the left. Somehow it seems that I must accept the way of dealing kindly and lovingly with others if I want to belong to God's children, that I must forgive where others wrong me and bear them no ill will, and even go a step further—do them a good turn, not only say I am willing but actually go with them the "second mile."

But did not Jesus use force when he cleansed the temple? What kind of force was it? I do not find that any one was killed by it, or even hurt physically—so that record will not justify me to transgress and help ı the mutual killing in which the nations are involved. f I would cleanse my country I should not go any urther than his example warrants. He gave a demon:ration of his disapproval of existing conditions, but id not rely on physical force but on loving service and piritual power to influence people.

He further says that whoever takes the sword shall ie by the sword. When Peter rashly uses it in a critiıl moment he undoes the damage that Peter has done. ne of his dearest and best friends, John the Baptist, ses his life because he has censured the king for sinful ving. Jesus does not gather the multitude about him revenge that act. When the men bring the question f tribute money to him, he admonishes them to be ood citizens, to cooperate with the government and ive to Caesar what is Caesar's with the limitation to ive to God what is God's. Taxes they were to pay, ut God and His Word were to be the guide and the ıle of their life.

He Too Loved His Country

Toward the end of his life he weeps over Jerusalem, ımenting, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in ıis thy day the things which belong to thy peace.... or the days shall come upon thee when thine enemies ıall ... lay thee even with the ground ... because thou newest not the timo of thy visitation." Did Jesus mean ıat since they did not accept Him and His way of livıg, that is, "going the second mlie," the way of love nd forgiveness, their eventual destruction was ineviıble? Would he say that to our country today? Does ıat mean that unless we show good will to others, to ıose of other nations, we are headed for destruction ventually? Does it mean that we must forgive them ıeir trespasses though they be seventy times seven? oes it mean that we are to pray for our enemies, the apanese, and to bless them if they curse us? Must we e peace-makers if we would be called children of God? r may we choose another way?

Christ's teachings seem to be clear and definite, and e came to reveal God to us. If these are the laws of od—and unless we live by them it will go ill with our ountry—then I will try to live according to them. I do ot want to harm my country by taking up arms, going war and fighting and maiming and killing others. I ıust choose the way of living Christ has recommended nd exemplified.

And would to God that our country might have its yes opened to see the things which belong to its peace.

or Discussion:

1. What attitude should we take towards working in efense plants?
2. What should we say when we are asked to buy war onds? Peace Bonds?
3. What do C.P.S. camps do for our country?
4. What is the testimony of our church through C.P.S. ork?

—Mrs. Gerhard Friesen

ote: We had planned to have a C.E. program outline on The Testimony of Our Church through Civilian Public ervice Work" for this issue. But we are substituting ıe above in its place. The definite application of Scripıre in the article above should be very helpful in the lanning of a C.E. program. —rw.

RELIEF NOTES

Relief Director Returns

C. L. Graber returned to the States from Puerto Rico on April 5.

Reporting on his visit, Brother Graber feels that along with a realization of the great need in Puerto Rico must go planning in terms of a long-range program. One Puerto Rican farmer hopes that the war will not end so that the C.P.S. Uuit may remain to further develop the work they have begun.

Additional Workers for Puerto Rico

Al Bohrer arrived in San Juan, April 1, bringing the total number of workers in Puerto Rico up to sixteen.

Two more workers, a nurse and a hospital orderly, have been chosen and will be appointed and sent within the next few weeks.

PRESENT DAY REVIVAL

Are there revivals today? The Holy Spirit's work to revive faith in the Christian's heart and create faith in unbelievers, agnostics and pagans is beyond comprehension. The proclamation of the Gospel of Christ by all means of communication is far beyond our grasp. The means of divine grace are multiplied in our day to reach the sinner's heart. The significance of it all is that God spares no effort, cost or sacrifice to induce us to respond to Him, when He reveals to us Christ crucified, risen and glorified. Do you respond to believe, to accept, to love Christ with all your heart and in full surrender?

—H. Albert Claassen

Drink Ye All of It

With these words Jesus encouraged all his disciples to partake of the sacred elements at that first Communion, when it was inaugurated in the Upper Room.

Ever since the Christian Church has commemorated the death of our Lord by solemnly observing Holy Communion in thankful memory of the salvation wrought on Calvary's Cross for all believers.

It is the desire of the church leaders that all sincere followers of Christ should gather for this sacred event. It is well known that because of employment and various other reasons, some members must be absent from their home church. It is the hope of the home church leaders that such members will attend and worship regularly at some church of their choice. It is hoped that such non-resident members will make a special effort to come home and celebrate the Holy Communion in their home church and thus keep a vital and fresh relationship with their Lord and fellow members. Should not members who live near to the church, feel it a duty and regard it a privilege to worship regularly on other Sundays, and not seek to "make up" on Communion Sunday, what they have neglected to do at other regular worship services?

Communion ought to be a time of heart-searching and a time of renewed dedication to our Lord and Savior and to the work of the church.

It is naturally expected that all our members in Service, will participate in the Communion that is arranged for them, be this in the regular camps or the C.P.S. camps. "This do in remembrance of me", was Christ's commandment when He instituted the Lord's Supper.

IS DEATH ARBITRARY?

It is the end of February in India. The heat is increasing with an unpleasant pace. Body and mind feel that the merciless depression of the Indian hot season is near again. While these uncomfortable forbodings of the fierce heat weigh down upon the spirits of men, two distressing messages arrive. One from the north and one from the south. From the north the news comes that our brother Sontash Masih (Satisified Christian) has died. He has finished a hard life. Before he became a Christian about ten years ago, he was a merchant. As a Christian, he tried hard to feed his family from the profits in his trading. But business in India has practically nothing to do with honesty. So he had a very hard time to do business and also be a Christian. Many times have I seen him carry bags of rice, weighing two hundred pounds. He laboured like a giant. But tuberculosis took a hold of him, and he left his wife widowed and nine children fatherless.

The other message, which came from the south, told us that brother Daud (David) has passed on. For some twenty-five years brother Daud floundered around. He seemed to be a misfit everywhere. About three years ago, over thirty miles south of Jagdeeshpore, in the jungle, several families accepted Christ. Daud and his wife were told to go there and see whether they could lead those new babes in Christ into Christian maturity. They went there, and have done a most blessed and fruitful work. Not only that the first Christians have been established in the faith, but a number of non-Christians have turned to Christ, so that brother Daud had a church of some fifty members. Fever attacked him, and in three days his spirit took flight to the eternal home. O, Lord, why? This brother, after years of seeming uselessness, had found his life's work. Why had he to go so soon now? Is death arbitrary? No. It is the Father's call. Someday we will know why.

The Foundation of Our Faith

By J. C. Kaufman

Let us mention some of these man-made explanations.

I. We have the explanation that his body was stolen and the story of the resurrection fabricated. This explanation is the first one mentioned and it was suggested immediately after the resurrection. The evangelists tell us of this attempt to discredit the resurrection. Bribes were given to the guards and their security vouched for if they would tell this story that while they slept the disciples stole the body. This story was current when Mark and Luke wrote their gospels.

Let us analyze the story and see if it is credible. First who would have stolen the body? The enemies did not for it was they who asked for a guard at the tomb to protect the body. If they would have stolen the body they would have known the hiding place and could have produced the body to disprove the preaching of his resurrection. This would have been their opportunity to silence the preaching of the resurrection. But no one ever produced the body, because it was never found.

The enemies accused the disciples, however, that they had stolen the body. Apparently they did not consider the impossibility of such an act. The Roman seal was on Christ's grave and the disciples were weak followers of him; they were poor, they could not bribe the guards because they had no wealth or influence and no political power. Instead of that they were under a cloud of suspicion because they were followers of this imposter who just lately was killed. Furthermore it was the passover season and the crucifixion took place by the wayside as the description of this gruesome act indicates and people thronged the immediate vicinity of the cross constantly, the full moon would have made such an act impossible, because the passover feast was always held close to the full moon. And the unreasonableness of such an invention can be easily seen because the disciples themselves did not believe in his resurrection at that time, they did not even believe when the women brought them the news of the resurrection; they did not believe until the Lord himself appeared to them and talked to them and they saw him with their own eyes.

No one stole the body, no one cared to steal it, but the fact that he arose made out of these fearful and doubting disciples heroes of power and might, and fearlessly they cried, "He is risen." Him hath God raised up, and they were willing to die for this truth; they were convinced that he was God.

II. There is the explanation that Jesus was not really dead. The argument is that he had only fainted and when they laid him into the tomb the coolness of the tomb soon brought him to his senses again.

The Roman soldiers who were to dispose of the bodies knew when a man was dead; it was not their first experience with crucified criminals. His friends, Joseph of Arimathaea and Nicodemus who buried him also knew when a man was dead. The physical suffering alone was enough to accomplish his death. But let us note that the physical suffering was not the cause of his death, his death was a self sacrifice, he said that no man should take his life from him but that he would lay it down himself. And he did, with a great triumphal cry he laid it down.

But for the sake of argument let us admit that he may not have been dead. Can we imagine a man whose physical system was completely worn out by physical suffering to the point where he fell into a swoon with those terrible wounds in hands, feet and side, a man in the need of the best hospitalization and care would come out of his swoon with such supernatural strength so that he could lift the stone away nd flee? How could he who was so well known pass hrough the streets bound in those grave clothes unoticed? How could such a man inspire the disciples o believe in his resurrection? This theory is utterly npossible.

II. The third theory is that this was a hallucination. he disciples and the women were highly emotional nd they thought they saw Jesus, but it was only nagination. If Christ would have appeared to only ne or two persons this theory could be credible but t is recorded that Jesus appeared at various times to ifferent groups after his resurrection and at one time o more than five hundred brethren at once. To acept such a theory would require more faith than to elieve the resurrection.

We believe therefore that Jesus Christ rose from he dead, because he said he would, that those who aw him, touched him and communed with him after he resurrection tell us he arose, and because the hurch all over the world is a living testimony to is resurrection.

He ascended into heaven and sitteth at the right and of the Father.

Is it not remarkable that such a great and stupenous fact is stated in such a few words? Yet it is od's method; biblical records are sometimes very rief, but they are always complete. The events in he life of Christ form a divine chain and to take away ny event is to remove a link and thus render the hain incomplete. From the immaculate conception o the ascension every link is very essential. He was onceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the virgin Mary, uffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead nd buried. He descended into hell, the third day He rose again. He ascended into heaven and sitteth at he right hand of God. Not one of these links dare o be removed.

In our study we have seen Jesus raised from the ead, and naturally the question arises, "Where is He ow?" He is not here. He has never been found on he streets of any city, he does not come into our omes.

We speak of him as being ever with us and yet he s not with us as he was with his disciples of old. The ible tells us that he was taken into heaven. When reat men die their graves are made into public hrines. If you happen to go to Arlington Cemetery ou will not fail to see the grave of the Unknown oldier, the public shrine of the U.S.A.

But there is no sacred shrine marking the place vhere Jesus was buried, the greatest of all men that ver lived. The Catholic church has built a shrine vhich they call The Church of the Holy Sepulchre nd claim that there is the place where Jesus was buried. For various reasons not all Protestants accept this claim. But in this one fact the Catholic church is agreed with us and that is that he is not here; he is risen. You cannot find a place on earth where you can say with certainty, this is the place where Christ was buried and there is only one reason for this, his body did not remain in the grave. There are two festival occasions which all Christians hold dear, the one is Christmas and the other is Easter. The first marks the birth of Jesus, the second the resurrection. Jesus came to us by the way of the virgin birth and he made his departure by way of the resurrection. But before the virgin birth and after the resurrection lie two events which must be considered. Before his birth is the conception by the Holy Ghost and after his resurrection the ascension. To disregard or to neglect one of these is to do violence to the Word of God.

We are to look upon the latter of these two great events and let us consider it under three main points. I. The reasons for believing in the ascension as an actual fact. The arguments for this belief may be very brief. Again we stand on the ground of Holy Scripture. We shall not take time and space to quote. See Mark 16:19; Luke 24:50-58; Acts 3:19-21; 7:55; Col. 3:1; the whole of the epistle of the Hebrews and Revelation. I wish to have the reader oberve two things here, first, the Bible record is very brief, secondly, the Bible record is true.

The Bible record is very brief; no argument is offered. The simple fact is stated in a few words. Arguments to prove such a fact would be useless. God states the plain facts and expects us to believe them.

Secondly, the Bible record is true. The books the

THE NEBRASKA ALL-MENNONITE SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION
MAY 7

The convention will convene in three different localities this year instead of at only one, due to the rationing making distant travel almost an impossibility. The Sunday Schools of the south-eastern part of the state, Beatrice, Janzen, and Fairbury, will have their convention at one of their churches. Those of the western part of the state, Paxton and Madrid, will meet at one of their meeting houses. The Henderson and Aurora churches will have their meetings in the M. B. church at Henderson.

The program is identically the same at all three convention places.

Three session programs have been prepared by the committee.

The General Theme for the day is: The Sunday School Victorious Through Christ.

This main theme has been sub-divided into four specific topics:

The Need of a Christ-Centered Program.
The Need of a Christ-Centered Teacher.
The Need of a Christ-Interested Scholar.
The Need of Christ-Centered Methods.

Dr. Suckau of the Grace Bible Institute of Omaha is the special speaker for the day at the convention at Henderson.

Two offerings will be taken, one will go to the C.P.S. treasury, and the other for Relief, both very timely and worthy causes.

The program consists of a great deal of singing and music.

We are looking forward to a blessed day.

HOME MISSIONS

A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary

Smith Corner Mennonite Church

East Freedom, Pa.
March 10, 1944

The work here at Smith Corner at this season of the year is, as usual at a standstill. It seems that for many reasons we are unable to do much during the first three months of the year. In the first place the weather is always unfavorable, with snow filling the lanes into the homes, and the result is that both attendance and interest suffer.

In our church we depend almost entirely upon the automobile to get our folks to and from the service, since many travel very great distances, some coming as far as thrity-five miles, others from one to ten, you can readily see what war conditions and bad weather could and does do to our attendance.

We have seven boys in the armed service, one noncombatant and one conscientious objector.

I might also note that in our church there are a number of our fathers who it seems must go to public work on Sunday, this brings about a condition that I as pastor am at a loss to correct; when the father must go to work the family must stay at home for want of a car, or driver, or both, however in the evening service these for the most part attend, thus making our evening service the largest by far .

Last fall we celebrated our thirty-fifth anniversary, our church having been built in 1908 and dedicated in October of that year. We enjoyed the fellowship of some of the Eastern District Conference brethren and continued throughout the week with meetings each night in charge of the Rev. Sylvan Lehman, President of the District Conference, and pastor of Calvary Mennonite Church, Mechanics Grove, Pa. These meetings were fairly well attended, and Rev. Lehman's messages were enjoyed by all who heard them. The following Sunday the meetings were brought to a close with Holy Communion being served by both Brother Lehman, and myself as pastor.

In the past years we have had our annual spring increase in attendance and we are looking forward to it again this year. It seems that spring does not only awaken the bud and the flowers but also some church members who have slept during the cold months.

At this season of the year we hold our communion service again, always on Easter Sunday.

It will perhaps be well to mention here something of our plans for the future; we discovered sometime ago that our church building was in a bad state of repair in fact almost beyond repair. I might explain here that this building was not built by Mennonites but, by a group who built it for occasional meetings, thus it was constructed as cheap as possible, and now it seems that it has served its usefulness, and must or should be replaced by a new and better building. This we are planning to do this coming summer if it please GOD.

We have a Sunday School enrollment of seventy-four, and our average attendance last year was fifty. The average offering was $7.45. Our attendance is near 70 per cent.

We here at Smith Corner have the following organizations in our church: Ladies' Aid Society, Brotherhood, Three organized Sunday School classes, these meet once a month, then we have the Young Peoples' meeting each Sunday Evening from seven until seven-thirty.

For the benefit of strangers to Smith Corner we may say that there is nothing outstanding here save the fact that our LORD is well known, and we are happy in his service.

The latch string is out to any who may find it possible to visit us.

John S. Raugh, Pastor

Herbert, Sask., March, 1944

Time flies! And though it brings trials it also brings many blessings.

On the fifth of December, last year, Rev. Benj. Ewert was with us for a Holy Communion service. He made several house visits and also conducted a service in the Gouldtown church.

From the sixth to the seventeenth of February Rev. Jacob F. Sawatzky of Newton, Kansas held evangelistic meetings in our district. He visited all our preaching points. As he is well known around here his work was especially appreciated. In Herbert he also conducted a series of Bible Studies on the epistle of Jude. This small epistle yielded many rich fruits under his able leadership.

apostles have written have outlived all the books of their time. Truth and truth alone abides. The ascension is the only reasonable consummation of such a life. Miraculous in his birth, perfect in his life, vicarious in his suffering and death, victorious in his resurrection.

The last time the world saw him was when he was hanging on the cross; after this only his own beheld him. Those cries from the cross were heard, they were not unheeded by the Father and there followed the resurrection and ascension.

All heaven resounded with joy when it received him back. Angels sang to men on earth when he arrived among us, and angels sang when he returned to the Father. Listen to the song:

Lift up your heads. O ye gates;
And be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors;
And the King of Glory shall come in.
  Who is this King of Glory?
  Jehovah strong and mighty,
  Jehovah mighty in battle.
Lift up your heads, O ye gates;
Even life them up, ye everlasting doors;
And the King of Glory shall come in.
  Who is this King of Glory?
Jehovah of hosts, he is the King of Glory.

(To be Continued)

Rev. George Elias of Meadow Lake also had a few eetings at Gouldtown which were well attended.

At present the Rev. Joel Koehn, of Winton Cali- rnia is here conducting a series of revival meetings. 'e expect to have four services at each of our five 'eaching points. May God give grace for these eetings.

Mild Winter

Owing to the mild open winter we have been enabled visit all our stations regularly. Glen Kerr, Beaver ats and Neidpath once a month and Gouldtown as :cumstances permit. In Herbert we have Sunday hool and church service every Sunday morning, ıristian Endeavor every second Sunday evening. At esent we have a catechism class on Sunday after- ons. So far we have five candidates for baptism.

On March 16 our brother, the Rev. Jacob J. H. erg was called home from his bed of suffering. He d been ailing for the past year but suffering severe in during the last six months. On one occasion he id, "After I have preached to others that God would t lay on us a heavier burden than we can bear, but is hard to have to experience it oneself." He was, wever, very patient, never heard to complain, wait- for the deliverance of God. He has, with his iet suffering, preached to many a very sincere ser- n. On Sunday, March 19 the body was taken to last resting place on Herbert cemetery.

Golden Wedding Celebration

The privilege was afforded me last February to nduct the celebrations of the golden wedding anni- rsary of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Buhr. These people pioneers of this country, having settled near Her- t in 1904. The Rev. Abram Goertzen brought a ssage from the Word. The text for my message was ken from Luke, "Abide with us for it is toward ning and the day is far spent." The children and ndchildren had some fitting songs and recitations. e mayor of Herbert had a few eulogistic comments the services that Mr. and Mrs. Buhr have rendered this community.

CORRESPONDENCE

FIRST MENNONITE CHURCH
Hutchinson, Kansas

Many of the Mennonite readers may not know that there is a Mennonite Church in the city of Hutchinson. Well, there is one even if very seldom any one ever reads about it. Our membership consists of about 130 We have 170 on the Sunday School Roll. March 19 our pastor was ill, and Rev. C. H. Voth of the Hope View Church took his place. March 26, he preached at Goessel, and Dr. H. A. Fast took his place. April 2 our pastor spoke at the C.P.S. Camp, Colorado Springs, Colorado. And Brother Willard W. Wiebe of Aberdeen, Idaho, a student at Bethel College, brought a real inspiring message on "The World's Greatest Blood Transfusion," based on John 6: 54-56. April 9, the Easter message on Luke 24 was conducted by Dr. H. A. Fast. And in the evening a well arranged cantata "The Dawn of the Morning" was rendered.

On Thursday night before Easter, Holy Communion was observed. This was conducted by Missionary P. R. Wiens from Newton, Kansas, in the absence of Brother Dirks who had gone to the State of Washington for the burial of his mother.

So far about fifteen boys have been called by the draft. Members and sons of members of our congregation. Three of these are in C.P.S.

Mrs. J. S. Friesen, Corr.

NEWPORT MENNONITE CHURCH
Newport, Washington

On Easter morning our pastor was not able to be in our midst due to conditions resulting from an accident last June. He was kicked by a cow which almost cost him his leg. He is now under a specialist's care. We hope and pray he will soon recover. We are sure he would appreciate your prayers in his behalf.

Henry Dalke, a member of the church, was asked to bring the message Easter Sunday morning. He is intending to go to school to prepare himself for the ministry.

Attendance in our church is always very good.

On Wesdnesday evenings the members meet for Bible Study led by Rev. Unruh. We are now having an interesting study in the book of Revelations.

MENNONITE BIBLE ACADEMY ITEMS

The Mennonite Bible Academy will close its first year of work on May 12, 1944. The students with the parents and the teachers are planning for a picnic dinner on that day. This is to be followed by a closing program, at which Rev. Arnold Funk of the Bruderthal Church will be the guest speaker.

Some of the work that the students have been doing during the year will be on display at this time. Any high school student that might be interested in coming to the Academy next year is cordially invited to attend the picnic dinner and the program in the afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

JOTTINGS

—Most of the boards and committees of the General Conference met for sessions at the Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas, from April 18 to 20. The various boards and committees chose to meet at this time, and of their own accord they met together in several evening meetings.

—Memorial Hall, North Newton, was nearly filled when the Apollo Boys' Choir gave the annual Booster Concert there on April 21.

—Brother Gerald Stucky has been busy giving messages and showing pictures in the churches in and around Newton. He has a large collection of very interesting and beautiful slides on South America and many very interesting stories to relate. The Foreign Mission Board has asked Brother Stucky to do some deputation work from now till the time of the General Conference. Brother Stucky also plans to visit the American Mission to Lepers in New York City and various orphanages in preparation for his mission work in Colombia, South America. (See the coming mission number for full details.) During this time he also intends to speak to three young people's conferences. On May 1 he will begin on his deputation trip towards the East. From May 30 to June 30 he plans to go to the Pacific District, via the Northern District, visiting churches along the way. Because of his limited time, Brother Stucky cannot possibly visit all of the churches. If any church wishes to get in touch with him, it may write to him at 338 Highland Place, Monrovia, California, where his wife is living at present. Brother Stucky is a membre of the First Mennonite Church, Berne, Indiana, and plans to visit in the Berne community during July. His parents are Mr. and Mrs. Otto Stucky.

—"For All Mankind" is the name of a helpful little booklet written by Dr. J. H. Langenwalter, copies of which may be had from the Mennonite Publication Office, Newton, Kansas, for twenty-five cents a copy.

—Bulletin, Burrton Mennonite Church, Burrton, Kansas: "Do you blush when you're called a Mennonite? Then read this testimony from a non-Mennonite speaking with your pastor (not knowing that I was a Mennonite) at the Mid-Kansas Music Festival, concerning a school with a high rating, he said, 'They are a Dutch Mennonite People that love to sing. They work together in such a way that they are hard to beat.' Why apologize for being a Mennonite?"

—If you want to get something into the Mennonite, then get it into the editor's hands at least a week before the date of issue.

—Did you notice the picture of the cross on the Passion Week issue? Did you notice the excellent, glossy paper on which it was printed? Akind brother, interested in our publication work, was so gracious as to pay for this better-than-usual grade of paper and thus make a better-appearing issue possible. We say thank you!

—The Chapel of the Air, sponsored by the First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio, is now on WAKR, Akron, Ohio, for a full half hour, starting at 9 a.m. and concluding at 9:30 a.m. (Eastern Standard time). Don E. Smucker is the radio pastor.

—The Pacific District Conference will be held at Pratum, Oregon, June 1-4.

—Rev. Clyde H. Dirks, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Hutchinson, will conduct special services for the Emanuel Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, from May 7 to 12. Brother Garman Wedel is pastor of the Emmanuel Church.

—When ministers of other districts come to Kansas, it gives the churches here a happy opportunity. The Sunday following the sessions of the various conference boards Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander brought the morning message to the Bethel College Mennonite Church and Rev. J. J. Plenert to the First Mennonite Church, Hillsboro. Both had been scheduled for different churches, but due to the heavy rains had to change their plans. Brother Harley King was supposed to speak to the Emmaus Church, Whitewater.

—Immanuel Mennonite Church, Los Angeles, California: Easter week we had a joint prayer meeting on Wednesday night, and on Friday night a group of young peopl presented a pageant "The Challenge of the Cross." It indeed challenged all those present to be more thankful of a living Saviour. Easter Sunday was a big day The Sunday School presented a short program after th Sunday School classes were over. The church was wel filled. The cantata "Darkness and Dawn" was wel rendered by the choir. Friday, April 14, a men's fellowship banquet was held with some seventy men present Dr. Paul Bauman gave an illustrated lecture on: "Hov the Science of Archaeology Confirms the Historica Accuracy and Inspiration of the Bible." —Mrs Elizabet Rempel (Corr.)

—First Mennonite Church, Summerfield, Illinois: O April 2 six young people were baptized and received into the fellowship of the church. On Easter Sunday w observed the Lord's Supper, which was very well attended. In the evening the Ladies Choir presented th Easter Cantata, "Christ Victorious." The season th spring has been rather cool. The fruit trees are just i bloom now. —Rev. Elmer Basinger

SUZANNA WESLEY

By Mrs. J. E. Entz

Someone has said, "Back of every great man you nd an unusual mother, a godly grandfather or a onderful wife."

One of the greatest religious leaders and clergyman f the past century was John Wesley, the founder of Iethodism.

John Wesley had an unusual mother. She was a oman of high intelligence, and strong character, and as deeply religious, cultured, and pious.

Her father Dr. Annesley was an able and promiient dissenting minister, a man of great physical rength, dignified, handsome, and highly gifted. er mother was a lovely woman.

She was her father's twenty-fifth child and the venty-fourth of her father's second wife. She herlf was the mother of nineteen children, of whom n grew to maturity. At one time there were thiren living children in the home. Three of these beme famous. One, John, the fifteenth child, was destined to become the leader of a religious movement that has extended over the world, there being more than ten million Methodists of all races and tongues. The other two, Samuel and Charles were both poets and authors. We sing many of their hymns, such as "Come Thou Almighty King," "Jesus Lover of My Soul," "Love Divine All Love Excelling," "A Charge to Keep I Have," and many others.

I am sure that we would like to know more of such a mother, her personal appearance, her character, her education, her spiritual life, her home, her attitude toward her family, and others.

One biographer says that she was beautiful, her figure was slight and graceful, her face was narrow but her features were of classical regularity and her complexion was fresh even in her old age.

Another says, "Mrs. Wesley is a woman of fine manners, and bright conversation. Her face is grave

How Beautiful and Precious Is the Love of a Mother

And Ye Shall Teach Them Your Children

Homeless, they wander around on the city streets, so reports Gerald Stucky of children in countries south of ours. In some places over fifty per cent of the children are reported to be of illegitimate parentage. One of the pictures that Brother Stucky took shows a window of an orphanage so arranged that a baby can be placed within and so turned on a revolving table that the window again closes for the protection of the baby. In our own country there are door-step baby cases. What tragedy when parents refuse to be responsible for the physical welfare of their off-spring!

"I want to give my child a good education," so say many parents. And today this dream is realized by millions of fathers and mothers who love their children. However, there are thousands of parents who let their children's minds go to waste. They are not impressed with the need for an education. What tragedy when parents hinder the development of their children's minds.

However, probably, most parents in the United States assume a fairly adequate responsibility for the physical and mental welfare of their children. Last summer in Hull House, Chicago, we saw mothers from the slums, who had brought their babies for a free physical check-up by a doctor. Some of the mothers looked as though they had not been in this country very long, but never-the-less they had caught something of the significance of good medical care. When those babies grow up they will attend schools for which taxpayers spend millions of dollars. Yes, it's sterilized bottles and orange juice for the baby and text book after text book for those attending school. But parents have a further responsibility.

They are responsible for the immortal souls that they have brought into this world. When one reads the figures of juvenile delinquency and when one looks into the movies, the newspapers, and the magazines upon which millions feed, and when one considers that perhaps only from three to thirteen per cent of our people attend church regularly, then one ought to wonder about the responsibility that parents feel towards the souls of their children. Ah, but we may say, that does not apply to any extent to the Christian homes in our General Conference. Perhaps not!

What is the attitude of the fathers and mothers in our conference? Are they first and last of all interested in the spiritual welfare of their children? Are they consecrating their children unto the Lord all their years and not just on one Sunday? Are all the young people of the homes of our conference walking the way of the Lord as they ought to? Undoubtedly, we have done well when compared with the failures of others. But are our homes as a whole up to scriptural standards?

As Christians we should be above the law of the Old Testament. However, in it there is an admonition that can serve as a check and as a challenge for Christian parents. God, concerned that parents teach His Word to their children, said through Moses, "And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." (Duet. 11:19). That is extensive and intensive teaching.

That is the kind of Bible teaching that we need in our homes today. In some of our homes the children are good, not so much because of convictions built up by the Word of God, but rather because it is the accepted way of the home, the community, and the church. Home, community, and church standards are a wonderful and rightful aid to Christian living. However, tragedy often steps in when individuals leave their home community or have to face unusual situations, where the ways and ideals of others press upon them. Having conformed to outer standards, they may tend to do the very same thing when confronted with un-Christian standards. Just because everything goes fairly well at home or in the home community is no indication that the Christian is a sturdy and as sound as he should be. The heritag of good ways in our homes, communities, and churche is a wonderful treasure.

But we need more than that. Christian childrer must have definite convictions as to what it mean to be a Christian and as to why they are Christians There must be very strong, definite inner standard if they are to be victorious in the face of temptations If they are to be positive, contributing Christians the need something more than that which just keeps then out of the bad.

We need in our homes the kind of Bible teachin that God commanded through Moses. As Christian we should measure up to that and go above it. Whe Christian parents are more impressed by the Word God than by the words of newspaper correspondent when they implement the Word of God in the daily walk of life, and when they begin and end th day with thoughts from God's Word, then childre have a chance to root their Christian character such a way that the storms of temptation cann knock them over. Children in our homes must he more of God speaking than of the newsreporter they are to be children of God and not children this world. It is the Christian duty of parents teach the Bible in the home.

May the words of Deuteronomy 11:19 stand o in our hearts in their full importance on May 14 wh we commemorate the Festival of the Christian Hom formerly called Mother's Day. "And ye shall tea them your children, speaking of them when thou si est in thine house, and when thou walkest by the wa when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."—r

A Suggestion

The articles on the visitation of the sick are particular significance to ministers, but they are a of great significance to lay readers. They help t layman to understand as to what he can do to h his pastor as he visits the sick. Furthermore, sir laymen also visit the sick and do so as Christians, th can probably use the same techniques as the pas employs.

Ernest Voth, Sunday School superintendent of the ennonite Church at Orienta, Oklahoma, contributes s second article on the subject of Sunday School ork. Read his statement on the purpose of the Sun-ay School. Don't miss out on the other important articles which are not in series form.

In this morning's mail was a card from a reader on which he stated how much he had enjoyed a recent article. Write in and tell us which articles are most helpful to you.—rw.

A Ministry-at-Large -- What Has Been Attempted

By J. H. Langenwalter

By the calendar, the work of the Minister-at-Large the Pacific District Conference began on October 1943. Much planning had been done before that ate. There were sixteen churches to be visited. At at time there were five Civilian Public Service amps within the area of this Conference. There ere long distances to be covered. There were many gles to be considered as to travel, convenience of urches and camps and as to priority of needs.

It was thought best to spend the better part of a eek at each church or camp in order to become well ough acquainted to really find common ground on hich to work. The public work was begun on nday morning and extended to Thursday or Friday ening. In order that there might be a broad basis r thinking together, consecutive studies were underken. The first six chapters in the Book of Acts ere used as a basis for Christian approaches to the oblems of life. A series of messages on "THE AY" were based on a brief survey of the Life of sus, followed by a study of Matthew 5-7, usually lled "The Sermon on the Mount." There were ief devotional periods in the camps before the work the day began on "A Thoughtful Approach to od and Life," "A Reverent or Respectful Approach God and Life," "The Principle of Live and Let ve," "The Principle of Common Human Rights and eighborly Thinking."

These messages were intended to pave the way for rsonal or group discussions of the problems with hich individuals or groups might be wrestling.

The evening meetings were closed promptly at the signated hour. Whoever was interested in further scussion might then remain for questions and exange of thought. There was no segregation of oups according to denominations. The intent being at only problems of common interest and value ould be discussed. Controversial questions were t encouraged but were briefly answered if presented.

The discussion groups often revealed strange ways which fears caused men to seek for information hich should have been open to them. It came as no rprise to find that if men are repressed they seek stealth what should have been a joy for them to scover. It is to be deplored that the joy of achieveent, found in childhood, is so soon lost in the lives adults and even youth. One feels rewarded to see e response when somebody discovers that the Author Truth wants men to be free from all which hides e Truth.

In the early stages of the discussion periods there re many questions concerning possible escapes from at which was inconvenient or of which one was raid. During the later stages of these discussions ere was a welcome broadening of the horizon of interests which can be helpfully pursued.

During the first seven months thirteen of the sixteen churches have been visited. All five of the Civilian Public Service Camps have been served and one Army Camp was entered at the request of young men, in accordance with the regulations of the Government.

One of the Civilian Public Service Camps has since been changed into a Government-controlled camp for Conscientious Objectors.

The Churches of this Conference are far removed from each other. There are many differences in background and customs. There is a lack of acquaintance which, if remedied, could lead to a better understanding of each other. There is much difference in opinions and interests which tends to widen breaches rather than to bridge them. There is too great a divergence in motives, and in attitudes. The things which Jesus said about Love and fear need to be faced more frankly and more sincerely in many cases. Men who are uprooted in a time like this see very much more clearly than ever before the futility of trying to cover fears, prejudices, hatreds, quarrels, and any other children of selfishness by fine ceremonies, "long prayers," and pious words that lack the Spirit of the "Great Commandment" of Jesus. They not only see these things more clearly; they expect the people at home to see them also and act as though they believed them.

The discoveries have not all been discouraging. There are many who have gone on year after year being real Christians. These are found in all walks of life. They are the kind of people whom Jesus called "The Meek", i.e., people who seek to find their places and to fill them well. These have usually been discovered through personal conference and by observation.

In the light of the foregoing it has been the purpose to give such information as might be helpful both to endure and to grow toward God and with men. It has also been the purpose to encourage where that might help others to see more clearly and to act more nearly as it behooves human beings to act.

The third and last subtitle under a MINISTRY-AT-LARGE will be, "What of the Future?"

Draft Manual Supplement Prepared

The Peace Section has recently completed an up-to-date supplement of the Peace Section Handbook and Draft Manual. This was necessary because modifications have been made in draft regulations since the publication of the Handbook. Copies of the supplement will be sent out over the regular mailing lists. They may also be secured from the Headquarters Office at Akron.

Bond Subscriptions

Subscribed by Peace Churches and others in Canada in the form of non-interest bearing certificates and bonds with stickers attached, as of October 14, 1943—$2,042,985.00.

Subscribed by Peace Churches and others in Unite States in the form of civilian bonds, as of April 19, 1944—$4,066,310.50.

The Purpose of the Sunday School

By Ernest Voth

A present day Sunday School must look at its constituents as they assemble with the knowledge that many have been given but very little in the line of Christian education since the church dismissed the previous Sunday. Therefore, the Sunday School must recognize that what will be taught is all that many will receive during the next week. The importance of giving them some soul food becomes very apparent.

Recognizing also the fact that the Sunday School is the agency of the Church which gathers Christians and non-Christians in a community for the study of the Word of God, so that they may know the relationship of God and Man and the Will of God manifested in Jesus Christ. The purpose of the Sunday School is threefold:

The first purpose is that of evangelism, leading souls to Christ. Leading souls to Christ, while not the only purpose, is the one phase that must be given emphasis. When we think of evangelism it is largely that of child and youth. It has been found by students of evangelism that seven times as many boys and girls are converted at the age of sixteen as at twenty-six, so that between the ages of twelve and sixteen the Sunday School is the great agency influencing the pupil to be a Christian convert rather than otherwise.

However, often in our Sunday Schools, that acceptance of Christ is not clinched because the individual is not given a chance to accept him. It behooves those who are teachers to present material that will convict and cause the pupil to accept Christ. It may mean a complete change of attitude, a turning from willful disobedience and waywardness or it may for others possibly mean the public acknowledgment as Savior.

It is the first great business of the Sunday School to see that all its members love Christ as Savior and follow him as Master.

The Sunday School must, however, not be conten with being a life saving station only because it ha to be a life building station as well. It is therefore a teaching institution. It is also spoken of as buildin Christian character, as instruction, as teaching. What ever we call it, the Sunday School must give it's pupil enough spiritual food to bring them not only to saving knowledge of Christ, but also to further thei spiritual growth. There is a danger of becomin spiritually stunted through a lack of spiritual foo

Sunday School teaching is spiritual work. It mean soul culture. When the Sunday School pupil h been led to Christ, the work has been but fairly begu Everything possible must be done to help the pup form habits of Christian living.

In the light of what we have considered and wh will follow, teaching a Sunday school class is a se ious undertaking.

The Sunday School is more than an education and evangelistic agency. The fact that for far t many it is the sole school of Biblical instructi available to youth should convince us that it mu more effectively reach the great army of pupils n in Sunday School. Measured by the quantity its instruction the Sunday School can never hold high rank among educational institutions, but it pe meates with its sacred influence the homes and t schools where our pupils go, and we are in du bound to extend widely its appeal and power. T Sunday School is missionary as well as education and evangelistic.

The privilege of giving to Christ's cause and t duty of engaging in some definite line of activi should be laid upon the conscience. The teach should keep before the pupils the joy of Christia service. Christ delivers not only from sin's guilt, b also from sin's selfishness. We are saved to ser if saved at all.

The Church Tract Shelf

A church that has a well selected supply of tracts for people to use has a real advantage. Good tracts are like good tools. They make willing workers more effective if they know how and when to use these tools. A person who goes to visit a sick friend may bestow an added comfort by leaving a tract like "Daily Comfort." In a conversation about marriage the tract, "Before You Marry" may be handed out to give valuable pointers that young people prefer to read and think about when alone. When in a conversation the question of drinking comes up, the tract, "Shall I Take a Friendly Drink?" will help people to think straight on the matter of abstinence. Especially in efforts of lay evangelism do good tracts prove helpful. A wide range of good evangelistic tracts makes possible a selection of the tract that is likely to meet the particular need of the person whom you want to help. When, for instance, you find seeker after God who feels that he has sinned t deeply to be forgiven, give such a person a tra like, "To the Uttermost," and he will come to s that if God could save the sinner of that story can also save him.

This is pointing out only a few situations in whi members of the congregation may make good use tracts. The tracts which the Evangelism Committ has selected for Mennonite churches are meant to of practical use. They should be studied with t idea of using them in local situations. The Evang ism Committee hopes that the pastors who receiv sample packets will give their congregations guidan on how these various tracts may be used.

Ascension Day Message

By Homer Leisy

Theme, "Why Stand Ye Gazing?"

Text: Acts 1:10-11. "And while they looked stead-stly toward heaven as He went up, behold, two men ood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye en of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? his same Jesus, which is taken up from you into aven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen im go into heaven."

Introduction: Why stand ye gazing, at the "good old ys"—the "great revivals" of the past, and forget that still have "This same Jesus," and can have this me power. If we, like they as our context reveals—ve in our hearts and minds the reality of His Vir-ous Life, His Voluntary and Vicarious Sacrifice, His ctorious Resurrection, and now with His Ascension, s Valuable Intercession and the Promise of His Vis-e Return and the Great Commission of Acts 1:8 nging in our ears, why stand ye gazing? This is ood News"—it calls for action. When Isaiah saw e Lord, he saw himself; then he saw his people, and rvice follows. (Isa. 6:1-10). Likewise, Paul (Acts . When he saw the Lord, he saw himself, he saw e fields, and "straightway he preached CHRIST" erse 20). Why stand ye gazing? We have this me Jesus, for. . . .

I. Jesus is the same yesterday, today, and forever. he Living Word is the same.) We often hear how od picks out Certain men and endues them with spe-l power, denied to the rest of us. If that were true, od would be a "respector of persons," which He is t. It would be more scriptural to say that there some men whom God uses more mightily because ey have a more definite and full surrender to the rd. Finney, Moody, Spurgeon were used mightily the Lord. If we make their sort of a committal to d, if we pay the same sort of price for the same t of power, GOD has not changed. We have his same Jesus;" we are the ones who have anged. The question is not so much of *OUR VING THE LORD......*but of the LORD HAV-G US. Too often we stand gazing—and are not lling to pay the price of a full, definite, and com-te surrender. Who is to blame? The first to me are we preachers, and the first one I want to ke over the coals" is myself. God forgive me, d help me to be ever on the altar of a complete rrender to Thy own sweet will, giving Thee the EEMINENCE in ALL THINGS. Then, when hear the people make excuses and alibis that is or that" trivial thing kept them away, we lose r zeal because of the indifferent, half-hearted atti-le. We begin to realize that it is not because of O MUCH this or that, but TOO LITTLE of the IRIT, hence too little love, power, fire, and con-ration. Beloved, fellow Christians, the channels our lives are choked, the POWER OF GOD is t flowing through us as it might. We do not e this same Jesus the same right of way.

II. THIS SAME JESUS IS STILL THE ONLY VIOR. (The Written Word is the same.) "There is no other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." In spite of all the ideas, and "isms" (fly-by-night religions) this same Jesus is the only Savior for a lost soul, and His Precious Blood is still the only possible agency for salvation. You do not have to explain Jesus, or decorate Him, just lift Him up, and He will do the rest. It is the same CROSS and the same GOSPEL. Point men to the "LAMB OF GOD." There's power in the blood; the WORD has not changed.

III. THIS SAME JESUS HAS THE SAME WORK TO DO. (The Work is the same). We do not have to wonder or ponder what Jesus would have us do. We have but one task—Acts 1:8—In the Power of the Holy Spirit to be witnesses unto HIM. All else must be secondary; much of it is excess baggage and impedes our progress. God sent His Son, His Disciples. He sends us to win souls. It is possible to spend so much attention to the machinery that the product is forgotten. If we MAJOR in soul-winning secondary things will take care of themselves. If we "go," we will "grow," and "glow."

IV. THIS SAME JESUS HAS THE SAME ORGANISM THROUGH WHICH HE WORKS. (The workers are the same.) The TRUE CHURCH is the EVANGELIZING AGENCY of the Lord Christ. The Church sent Paul out, it trained a Luther, it gave Wesley his start, Moody organized a church, and Spurgeon pastored a church. You cannot be loyal to Christ without being loyal to HIS CHURCH. The church in the hands of the Holy Spirit has been CHRIST'S INSTRUMENT down through CHURCH HISTORY. He looks to us to do His work.

V. THE WORKINGS OF THAT BODY ARE ALONG THE SAME LINES. (The Workings are the same.)

What are the demands of Jesus?

1. Jesus Says, "If any man love Me, he will keep my commandments." If you are HIS, show it in word and deed. Make HIS BOOK your GUIDE BOOK, your daily manna until the heavenly Canaan is reached. As AMBASSADORS for the KING of KINGS, keep in touch with Him—obey HIS orders.

2. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." That means to give God FIRST PLACE. This "seeking first" took David Livingstone into the heart of Africa, it took Paul on four hazardous journeys, it caused Betty and John Stam to pour out their lives as a drink offering unto the Lord. They counted no effort too great, no price too dear if it would defeat Satan and GLORIFY GOD.

3. This same Jesus demands thirdly that we all, each of us gather in the golden grain to His pierced feet. That's why He left us here. Why stand ye gazing? Let's discard our alibis, forget our excuses, and get right with God. Obey the commands of Jesus, and before our days are up there will be such a manifestation of the MARVELOUS GRACE OF GOD, that you and all about you will KNOW that this SAME JESUS is the same, yesterday, today, and forever; for the RESULTS will be the same.—Dallas, Oregon

Post-War Problems Facing Mennonites

By J. Winfield Fretz

Only a few years ago we read, at first with interest but later with increased apprehension, of the things demanded from the Italian, Russian and German people by their governments. We read how by gradual steps the existing political institutions and economic systems were overthrown and the social and religious conditions radically changed. We heard of universal military conscription for all males over eighteen years of age; of military indoctrination programs for boys from six to sixteen and we were constantly reminded that women were being pressed into doing men's work and later that civilian labor was being conscripted and told where it could or could not work. We remember the daily pictures appearing in newspapers and magazines showing government work programs, women standing in lines at stores with ration coupons and crowds of unemployed radicals marching somewhere in protest of something.

We pitied these people and blamed it all on the wicked dictators who, most people said, were the cause of it all, but the popular attitude seemed to be "It can't happen here," because with a self-righteous implication we thought we were a democratic country and even better, a Christian nation. Today this attitude of complacency and false sense of security reminds us of the Israelites in the days of the prophets when they refused to listen to the prediction that God would destroy Israel for her sins as well as the non-Israelitish nations. The Israelites for a long time believed that because they were God's chosen people He would not punish them as he would other wicked contemporary nations. They had to learn through bitter experience that God chastens His own as well as those who do not claim to be His own.

Things To Come

The things we used to think happened only in foreign countries ruled by dictators can and are happening in our own country which claims to be democratic and Christian. But more is yet to happen. We can expect a prolonged and intense period of wide-spread disillusionment. There will be a moral and a spiritual slump as much greater than any previous post-war slump as this war is larger and more expensive than any previous war. Millions of citizens will be bitter and cynical about everything from themselves to the United States Congress and the King of England. There will be orgies of drunkenness and excessive debaucheries by those who want to forget it all; there will be disgust and antagonism toward religion by those who prayed that their sons might be spared in battle and that victory might be ours, but if their prayers were not answered they will say: "there is no God." Others will be keenly disappointed because "unconditional surrender" will not have resulted in a righteous world. Victory, final and complete, will not bring the peace and the prosperity that many expect, instead the world shall see the victor nations grabbing the spoils of war, seizing additional territory from conquered countries, building up stronger military systems with which to police the world and, in a word, lay the foundation for a Third World War.

Hatred

The techniques of hatred, bitterness and disregard for the personalities of those we do not like, nurtured and cultivated during the war, and taught to millions of our best young men at home and abroad will find expression in national selfishness and domestic greed and jealousies. There will be increased racial hatred between Jew and Gentile, Negro and White, Oriental and Occidental. Because of these conditions many will become pessimistic and lose faith in all that is good in life. This cynicism and disillusionment is one of the post-war conditions with which we shall have to deal.

Further State Control

There is every indication that the post-war world will see an increase of totalitarianism or state control in our own country. Evidences of this are already obvious on many fronts. The steady growth of government regulation of business, industry, and agriculture; the far-reaching governmental provision for social security, fittingly called the "cradle-to-the-grave" program, claims to provide for all who need it in times of sickness, accident, unemployment and old age. There seems to be much evidence that we shall have not only universal military conscription but conscription of civilian labor as well. These policies of regimentation in the post-war period wil be partially the result of war pyschology, partially the result of veterans' pressure groups to hold and expand whatever power and position they can, and partially the result of necessity to guard, supervis and educate the countries, as well as to regulate unemployment by means of public works programs and the rapid shifting of labor from one area to anothe as needed.

It is to be expected that the educational system i America will become increasingly an instrument o the government. The educational diet now being fe the public school children is only one step in the dir ection of what a thoroughly dominated state educa tional system can mean. As in the European coun tries which our country is today fighting and at th same time imitating, the aim of education is to crea enthusiastic and loyal followers of Caesar not fre sons of God and devoted disciples of Christ.

Church and State

The political state will continue to seek close cooperation with the churches, and if the America pattern follows the European pattern, the State w gradually seek to subordinate the church to it. Th churches which will refuse to "cooperate" with th State will naturally come into disfavor with it and th two agencies will be thrown into open conflict wi each other. Thus we are headed for a period history when the Church and the State will once mo be at odds with each other. This is an old proble ot a new one. The early Christians faced the problem rankly by acknowledging that both institutions had heir God-given purpose but that the Christian's irst allegiance was to God. Our Anabaptist foreathers had to endure much grief and pain to re-stablish the doctrine of separation of church and tate and to win the right to openly give their highest yalty to God.

In the face of moral disillusionment, the spiritual allousness and the increasingly greater demands of the political state upon the Christian, it remains to be seen what the Christian Church, and especially for our concern, what the Mennonite Church will do. With a disappointingly large number of Mennonite men taking military service and thus renouncing the Biblical doctrine of non-resistance there is no ground for complacency. On the other hand, the 2500 young men who have gone to C.P.S. camps in obedience to Christ and conscience give us much ground for gratitude.

And Ye Visited Me

By Walter A. Gering

Part II. Preparation For The Visit

Years ago I read of a minister and his small son ho attended a small church one Sunday evening. he minister was to deliver the message that evening s guest speaker. As they entered he saw a small ox attached to the wall near the entrance. It was e offering box. Taking from his purse a small oin and dropping it into the box the two made their ay into the auditorium. At the close of the service e officers of the church thanked the minister for his essage and placed into his hands the contents of e evening's offering: one small coin. As the little on and the minister made their way home the lad ddenly exclaimed "Daddy, why didn't you put ore in—then you would have gotten more out."

Visitation Is An Art

So it is in this matter of visitation of the sick. Vhy do we get so little out of it? Must we not con-ess with shame that only too often we put too little nto it and consequently get little out of it? Visita-on is an art in much the same degree as the playing f an instrument or the painting of a picture; the ctual doing of it is but the product of long, careful reparation. The musician sways the emotions of is hearers because hours of preparation have made e selection a part of his inner nature. The minister ho is most effective in his hours of visitation is the ne who in like manner has spent much time and nergy in getting ready for the call.

Preparation For The Visit

Several factors enter into the preparation period. n one occasion our Lord surrounded by great mul-tudes pressing upon Him turned with the question Who touched me?" One who was sick had in faith uched the hem of His garment believing that even ich a touch would bring healing unto her. It did, ut Jesus felt that "virtue had gone out of Him." isitation of the sick always drains the physical rength of any minister, and if he would be at his est he must keep himself physically fit for the task. o enter the sick room tired, weary, and listless ells defeat from the very beginning; such a spirit an hardly bring new hope, enthusiasm, and courage the sick. Difficult as it may be under the pressure f modern society and its many duties, yet one of e primary responsibilities of the pastor is to keep imself physically fit; regular hours, proper rest, aily exercise must be a part of the daily program. he minister must make time for these by the observ-nce of a carefully planned schedule. Too often we pride ourselves that we are too busy about the Lord's work to take time for these necessary things. How often our busy hurry concerns itself with things which might rightly be left for someone else to do. There is no merit in priding ourselves that we are "burning out" for the Lord in a few years a body which the Lord intended should serve Him for many years. If we would enter into the ministry of the sick we need to give due consideration to our own bodies.

The Kitbag

A second factor which enters into the preparation for the visit has to do with the kitbag of the ministry. When the physician makes a general call upon a patient he brings with him his kitbag. Therein he has placed the instuments and medicines which he may be called upon to use in the course of a general call. One by one he takes these from the kitbag and applies them as the occasion may demand. Some of them he does not use; they are there for use if needed. In like manner the minister as he steps across the threshold of the sick room brings with him his kitbag. In it he has stored that which he may use in ministering unto the life of those whom he visits.

Into this kitbag he has stored away information concerning the physical condition of the patient. One of the greatest assets which the pastor may have as he enters the room is a knowledge of the patient's condition. It will be invaluable to him in the brief moments which he spends with the patient. It will explain many things which otherwise he might misunderstand. Such knowledge can be obtained often by consulting the doctor or nurse; members of the family can usually give helpful suggestions. A knowledge of the patient's condition is one of the items in the kitbag.

A second item which may be placed into the kitbag is an understanding of human nature and the reactions of people under the pressure of sickness. No two patients are alike in their reactions for their problems are all different. There are those who are laboring under spiritual tensions and conflicts due to sin in their life, lack of living faith and understanding. There are those who have problems of family adjustment caused by quarrels, suspicions, long established feuds; others have problems of worry and concern over the pressures of daily life; some are lonely and discouraged in their old age.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Arnold Nickel, Mountain Lake, Minnesota

MAY 16—"The Word of our God shall stand forever." Isa. 40:8b. Read Isa. 40:1-11.

The Word of our God, and those obedient to that Word are the only two that live forever. The thing then of real importance to us is, not the fruit of our toil, but the Word of our God. The Bible is God's written revelation to man. It was not written through the knowledge and wisdom of man, but it was revealed by God and written by men who were guided by the Holy Ghost. Man would not write the Bible if he could, and he could not write it if he would. Let us search it with diligence and reverence each day.

MAY 17—"These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life." I John 5:13. Read I John 5:1-13.

Where faith is, there is life; where it is not, there is death. This metaphor of life and death runs all through Scripture. The busy life of ambition, work, pleasure, and success is what the world calls life, whereas it is the result of living. True life begins by trusting in the Giver of life. As the physical life has its beginning in another person, even so must the spiritual life begin in the Person of Jesus Christ. Faith will result in work and life, but work alone results in death.

MAY 18—"Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ." I John 1:3b. Read John 15:1-14.

If we could but fully grasp this one truth, how would all life be elevated and inspired! Fellowship with God is impossible apart from Jesus Christ. In Christ we see God whom we can know, who still wears the glorified body, who speaks to us in that still small voice, and who is our closest friend. The Scriptures were written that we might understand more clearly, and that we might fellowship more conscientiously with the Godhead. Fellowship with the world will separate us from Christ, but fellowship with our Redeemer will keep us from the enticements of the world.

MAY—19 "Work: for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts." Hag. 2:4b. Read Matt. 25:14-30.

Work must be approached in the right spirit, it must be in God's vineyard, and it must be for God. Thousands of Christians work, nay, slave to further their own interests. Such work is but idleness, and corrupts the heart. The Christian should work as if he must live forever, and he will live as if he must die at once. There is no work that will give more satisfaction and impart more blessings than does the work for God. God's harvest is ripe. Are we labouring to bring in His fruit, or does our own harvest come first?

MAY 20—"Beloved if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." I John 4:11. Read I John 4:7-21.

God is love, and His purpose is love. We love God because He manifested His love to us. But to love our fellowman who perhaps does not love us is another thing. Our love is as deep as it will reach the most unlovable. A hypocrite can love one that loves him, but only a Christian is able to love one that hates him. It is only God's love manifested through His witnesses that will draw all men. Have you loved God with all your heart? Have you loved your neighbor as yourself?

MAY 21—"See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise." Eph. 5:15. Read Eph. 5:1-17.

Godliness is possible, but it is not possible without effort. There is nothing worth anything that can be gained without paying the price that nature, man, and God have established. Christ has paid the price for our salvation, and we are commanded to pay the price by our walk. To walk circumspectly means to walk carefully, prayerfully, and watchfully. The Christian walk is an open gospel to the world. It will either drive the world from Christianity and God, or it will convict the world of their sin, and cause them to come to our Saviour who is willing to introduce them to the narrow way of life.

MAY 22—"Brethren, ye have been called unto liberty." Gal. 5:13a. Read Gal. 5:1-15.

The Bible, rightly used, is the book of freedom. The Scriptures are the truth, "and the truth shall make you free." By the Bible Christians are freed from all things which enslave the body and the soul; freed from anything and everything but the law of faith, the law of grace, the law of liberty, and the law of Sonship. The Christian is not free to do as he pleases, but as God pleases. "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." (Gal. 5:1).

MAY 23—"And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." I John 3:3. Read I John 3:1-10.

Very often earthly hope bursts as a bubble and leaves us and our future shattered. But heavenly hope is grounded on the Eternal Rock that never sways under any circumstance which would threaten to destroy it. Such hope inspires our efforts, and causes doubts to vanish away. Hope in Christ will solidly root the Christian, and enable him to withstand every storm that may enter his life. Without Christianity there is no hope, and without hope in Christ there is no purification. Our hope undergirds our Christian faith.

Service Men in White

By Marvin Dyck

In Duke General Hospital, located on the Duke University Campus, Durham, North Carolina is a group of men known as Civilian Public Service, Unit No. 61. It is a group of forty-five men representing all three Historic Peace Agencies and many various church affiliations. The unit is sponsored by the Methodist Commission of World Peace.

Unlike other hospital units there is a diversity of project work at Duke. There are fifteen working in the psychiatry department, ten men in the operating rooms, ten men at Highland Hospital, (Ashville, North Carolina Private psychiatric hospital to be taken over by Duke) and ten men engaged in research individual projects, blood bank technicians.

In the interest of brevity, this article interests itself with the men and their work in the psychiatry department and ward.

Meyer Ward, named in honor of Adolph Meyer, eminent psychiatrist, has beds for eighteen patients. The ward is always filled to capacity and the waiting list is long. Upon entering the ward, through a locked door, one is struck by the absence of the usual conception of an "insane asylum"—padded cells, dingy rooms, bars at the windows, wardens with keys jangling from a long chain. In contrast the rooms look like any hospital rooms—bright and cheerful, the attendants are cheerful, and there are no keys visible. Upon closer examination of the rooms there are differences. The bars at the windows are cleverly concealed behind the lattice work of the window. The mirror on the wall is of steel, not glass.

Down the hall is the day room equipped with soft easy chairs, ping-pong table, fire place, games of all sorts and magazines. Here the patients spend the time playing games with the attendant, listening to the radio, or quietly reading. Frequently a stranger on the floor will remark, "Where are the patients?"

There is a disturbed section. Here patients who are unable to socialize properly are kept. There are three small rooms, unpadded but stripped of non-essentials where patients may be locked in if occasion demands. However patients are kept in the hallway as much as possible for the locked room is considered poor therapy. The patient is immediately moved to the open ward when he proves himself able to live at peace with fellow patients.

The C.P.S. men in the psychiatry unit have a wide range of jobs to do—two men are ward typists (type all histories and official communications of the doctors of the ward); one man assists in the testing program as carried on in the psychiatry clinic; two men work with the electroencephlogram, (a device which measures graphically the minute electrical impulses of brain cells; the tracing produced when read by an expert aids in giving an accurate diagnosis for brain tumor, epilepsy, and other abnormalities); one man has lately begun working with speech deficiencies and difficulties of patients. Another man works in the poorly adjusted childrens' clinic in town. The rest of the psychiatric unit are attendants on the floor.

There are C.P.S. men on duty twenty-four hours a day. They work primarily with male patients but upon emergency assist the nurses with women patients. Their work varies from playing shuffelboard with patients to nursing care, from janitorial duties to friend and counsellor of the patient.

As a nurse, the attendant takes routine pulse, respiration, temperature, blood pressure, assists doctors with therapies, watches over patients who are getting fever treatment or protracted narcosis, records carefully on a chart patient's behavior, mood, amount of food eaten by patient, amount of sleep.

As a janitor the C.P.S. attendants assist the negro janitor in keeping the ward clean at all times. As the friend and counsellor, the attendant makes the patient feel at home, plays games with him, reassures the patients at all times, encourages the patient to "spill" to the doctor, that is telling the doctor points of tension and problems which are the cause of the mental condition. In a great many cases the attendant has a great deal of influence with the patient's recovery.

Much of the work is dull routine. There are many unpleasant tasks to do, many unpleasants sights to witness. And after the regular working day is over, there is nearly always special duty to do. That is voluntary but nearly imperative that it be done. Some of the treatments require twenty-four hour attendance on the patient, and it is impossible to do his on regular work time; so the attendants have to do it on their "free" time—attendants receiving a small amount of cash for this overtime.

It is a great personal satisfaction and thrill to talk with a patient who has recovered. To know that we as individuals have aided to a certain extent in the recovery of a person's mental condition is a superior reimbursement to receiving material gain for services rendered or time put in. We know then that being a conscientious objector has not been in vain.—Box 3805, Duke Hospital, Durham, North Carolina.

Suzanna Wesley

and thoughtful and her expression is serene."

In one of her letters, her son, John Wesley expresses amazement over the cheerfulness with which his mother surrounded by thirteen children took care of her manifold duties, wrote letters, conversed, and entertained.

She was not only beautiful in face but was beautiful in character and in intellect, possessed of that "inborn dignity which compels respect." She was submissive to authority, yet of a very strong will. The high tone of her mind can be seen "in its independence, its self-control, and the warmth of her devotional feelings." When we read her biography we find that she is meditative, orderly, methodical, kindly, gentle, pious, courageous, has initiative, and a strong sense of duty to God and service to mankind.

She was well educated, and could judge books and people. "She had the talent and discrimination, judgment, investigation and comparison."

Dr. Adam Clark says, "Suzanna was always a favorite with her father, who gave every attention to her education. Greek, Latin, French, logic, metophysics formed a part of her studies." She was permitted to think for herself. She was deeply interested in the absorbing religious discussions of the day even as a young girl. When only thirteen years old she studied and examined the whole controversy between the Church of England and the Dissenters, and although her father was a Non-Conformist she adopted the creed of the Church of England. This action was opposed to his views, but this difference in their religious views caused no disturbance of that inner bond between father and daughter.

From her earlist childhood religion had a prominent place in her life. It was practical rather than mystical. Her definition of sin gives us an insight into her spiritual nature. "Whatsoever weakens your reason, impairs the tenderness of your conscience, obscures your sense of God, takes away your relish for spiritual things; whatsoever increases the authority of your body over your mind—that is sin."

At her death, before she lost her speech she said, "Children, as soon as I am released sing a Psalm of praise to God."

She was married at nineteen to Samuel Wesley, who was almost seven years her senior. In many respects he was exactly her opposite. He was a pastor, poet, and writer but was not practical. However, he too, possessed her conscientious independence in questions of religion—expressed his views freely—even though it meant persecution. He knew no fear, was an untiring student, cheerful, and devoted to his work. The rector spent most of his time in verse making and writing his sermons. The rest of the work, the business of the home as well as the rectory farm, the distribution of the tithe and the education of the children he left to his much more practical wife.

The parsonage home was almost a perfect Christian household. It was characterized by a seriousness and strictness on the one side and by a kindliness and cheerfulness on the other. Order and simplicity was the rule. Their simple diet was bread and milk with a few vegetables. They could seldom afford any meat or sweets.

The children were taught never to address each other without prefixing "brother" or "sister", (brother Charles, sister Martha). Courtesy was practiced in the family circle. If a child confessed a fault and promised reform he was not punished, nor was he ever reminded of it afterwards. From their birth the children were trained to a regular schedule. They were early taught to obey. Acts of obedience were commended. The little ones were taught to cry softly. "The house was usually so quiet as though there were no children in the home." The mother was very firm but also very patient. Once when she repeated the same thing to one child twenty times, her husband said, "I wonder at your patience, you have told that child twenty times the same thing. "If I had satisfied myself by mentioning it only nineteen times," she said, "I should have lost all my labor. It was the twentieth time that crowned it."

The children must be educated. There was no income for schooling. The rector's income was so small that he was at times confined in Lincoln Castle for debt. The wolf was never far from the door. Since the father had no time to spare from his church and his writing,—the mother took over the responsibility of educating the children. She began her household school, and for six hours a day through twenty years she continued it.

Psalms were sung every morning and night at the opening and the closing of school. They were taught to repeat the Lord's prayer as soon as they could talk.

Each older child took a younger one morning and evening and read a chapter in the Bible with him or with her after which each went to his private devotions.

At six there were family prayers and suppers; then each was washed and undressed and to bed by eight.

The children were not taught to read till they were five years old. On its fifth birthday each child learned the alphabet. Mrs. W. writes, "One day was Early rising was the rule in the Epworth parsonage.

llowed each child wherein to learn its letters, great nd small and each did it except Molly and Nancy. They needed a day and a half for which I thought hem very dull." The Bible was their first reader, eginning with Genesis. Each child read long be-ore the age of six.

Finding no text books available that met her severe equirements she prepared three text books for the nstruction of her children: "A Manual of Natural Theology," "An Exposition of the Leading Truths of he Gospel Based upon the Apostles' Creed," "A Practical Exposition of the Ten Commandments," and lso sixty pages of, "A Religious Conference written or the Use of My Children in the Form of a Dialogue With My Daughter Amelia." She wrote many long etters to her sons when they attended the universities.

She gave one evening each week to each child eparately. "I take such a proportion of time as I can best spare every night to discourse with each child on something that relates to its principal concerns. Monday I talk with Molly, Tuesday Hetty, Wednesday Nancy, Thursday, Jacky . . ." These Thursday talks with John were never to be forgotten by him, and years afterward he wrote her, "If you can spare me only the little part of Thursday evening which you formerly bestowed on me in another manner, I doubt not it would be as useful now for correcting my heart as it was then in forming my judgment."

She was a most wise and affectionate mother to her children, a true preacher of righteousness.

During her husband's absences from Epworth she continued family worship holding services every Sunday evening in the rectory kitchen for the benefit of her own children and the servants. Others asked permission to come till soon two hundred or more were present and many were obliged to go back for lack of room. She would read a sermon and a prayer then talk to the people on some religious subject. The Curate, who preached in Mr. Wesley's absence, objected so that he wrote to his godly intellectual wife remonstrating with her. In answer to his letter she writes in part, "If you do after all think fit to dissolve this assembly do not tell me that you desire me to do it, for that will not satisfy my conscience, but send me your positive command in such full and express terms as may absolve me from all guilt and punishment for neglecting this opportunity of doing good—when you and I shall appear before the great and awful tribunal of our Lord Jesus Christ."

She looked upon her children as talents committed to her under trust by God and continued her instruction of them even after they were grown, writing them letters on religious questions that troubled them. A few sentences from letters written to Samuel, the first born, when he was at Westminster school, where he was distinguished for his scholarship prove her concern for them and her wise counseling and teaching.

"If you have wasted or misemployed your time take more care of what remains."

"Set apart the hours of Sunday from 4-6 for prayer and meditation. (I will also)"

"Never spend more time in any matter of recreation in one day than is spent in private religious duties."

"Appoint so much time for sleeping, eating, for company, etc., but above all things my dear Sammy, I command you, I beg you, I beseech you, to be very strict in observing the Lord's Day."

The husband and father wrote thus beautifully of his noble wife to his beloved Samuel.

"You will, I verily believe remember that these obligations of gratitude, love, and obedience and the expression of them are not confined to your tender years, but must last to the very close of your life.

"You will endeavor to repay her prayers for you, by doubling yours for her, and above all things to live such a virtuous and religious life that she may find that her care and love have not been lost upon you. In short, reverence and love her as much as you can."

What a wonderful blessing to have a consecrated, godly mother!

From a Heart to Heart Talk

By C. H. Suckau

In John 14:1-6 we have what we may call a heart to heart talk between Christ and His disciples. The use of the first and second personal pronoun abounds. The third personal pronoun is not once used. We would do better if in our conversation we would make less use of it.

Christ, in this precious passage, which is well worth memorizing, emphasizes three things. First, in the face of trouble ahead for His disciples, He speaks peace to their heart. He points out that it is not sufficient to believe in God; they must also believe in Him. Many today believe in a god but not in Jesus Christ. In these days of trouble we can have peace and quietness of heart only through Jesus Christ.

He next gives to His disciples the promise of His return. "I will come again." This promise is repeated thrice in John 14 and is found seven times in Revelation. How comforting it is to know the blessed hope of His return in these days of strife, and to know that when He returns to set up His Kingdom, nations will learn war no more.

In the sixth verse Christ points out that through Him alone do we have access to the Father. "I am the way," not a way. "No man cometh unto the Father, but by me." There are different ways by which we may travel to Wichita but only one way to heaven. Next He says, "I am the truth." In John 8:32 He says, "The truth shall make you free." It is Jesus Christ the truth Who makes us free from sin. Therefore He said, "I am—the truth,—no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." His last assertion in this verse, "I am—the Life." Not a life but the life. Christ was not only unique and supernatural in His birth, death, and resurrection, but also in His whole life. Therefore He could say, "I am—the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me."

May we realize that in Christ we have comfort, hope, and the way to the Father.

(The above is the essence of a message given in the Bethel College chapel recently.)

And Ye Visited Me

There are those who have enjoyed rich experiences in their hours of illness and are longing to share them with others. Still others are baffled with the question "Why?" No two patients are alike, and as the minister enters the sick room he passes into an unknown world; at any moment he may see that which he did not expect. Yet inspite of all that, human nature in many respects follows the same pattern and the minister does well to have in his kit at least some knowledge of the reactions of the human mind; in other words he ought to be acquainted with life.

That knowledge can be obtained in two ways, directly and indirectly. Good books are constantly appearing on the art of counseling. Increasing emphasis is being placed upon the importance of the eye to eye talk, and out of this many valuable suggestions have been recorded in books which others may profitably read. Even more valuable than books is daily contact with life itself. The man who would understand human nature must live with others in their daily experiences. A constant eating, working, and visiting with others provides a rich background of knowledge.

A third item in the kitbag as the minister enters the sick room may be a well thought out, planned procedure. That does not mean that it must be followed out in detail. The circumstances revealed in the first moments of the visit may be such as call for an entirely different procedure. But that does not eliminate careful, studied planning of the procedure to be used. I remember reading years ago a statement to the effect that a minister ought to prepare more diligently for his meeting with a single individual than for his meeting with the congregation in a regular service. That statement presents a tremendous challenge for it embodies a principle which we too often neglect. We excuse ourselves by saying that we are depending upon the leading of the Holy Spirit to direct our visitation. That is necessary; we must yield ourselves unreservedly to His guidance. Unless our efforts are directed by Him all is in vain. But divine guidance does not eliminate intelligent thinking and planning. Before entering the sick room we can quietly and carefully consider the facts which we know about the patient and his condition. On the basis of these facts we may plan our procedure asking the Spirit of God to direct our planning. Subjects of conversation, scripture passages, suitable for the occasion and content of prayer may be planned and placed into the kitbag. Why cannot we believe in the guidance of God's Holy Spirit in the study as well as in the sick room? The minister who brings with him into the sick room a plan of procedure brings with him a spirit of confidence and sense of mission which will eliminate much purposeless social visitation. After all, the minister enters not as a social caller; he enters as man of God ministering to the soul of man. His time is too valuable and the cause too sacred to be spent in mere social visitation.

Christian Literature

Then there is the field of Christian literature. It is here that we are missing one of our greatest opportunities. God has given unto His children the gift of putting into written form an expression of the deep spiritual experiences of mankind. Hymns, poems, tracts, pamphlets, books—all can become the means of inspiration for many a lonely soul. The history of the Christian church is a constant affirmation of the fact that Christian literature, deeply spiritual, is a gift of God intended for the happiness and welfare of mankind. We make too little of it; we ought to give ourselves in quiet meditation upon the expressions of the inner experiences of God's people. In preparing for the art of ministering unto the sick the minister may well gather into his treasure box such bits of literature as have been helpful to others. It may be the very thing which will be instrumental in his hands in helping some sick soul. In preparing for the call why not take out of the files some choice bit of literature, place it into the kitbag and leave it with the patient? It may be a gift; it may be loaned until read; the method may vary, but we need to explore with greater emphasis the possibilities of good Christian literature.

Visitor's Own Devotional Life

The item which is mentioned last but which is first in importance is that of our own devotional life. Within our kit as we enter the sick room we must have the reality of a deep personal experience with the Lord Jesus Christ. We enter the sick room with the purpose of ministering unto the spiritual life of the patient. We come that we might bring to the patient a quiet living faith in God as the Giver of good gifts, as the ever present Comforter whose heart of love is boundless in mercy. We enter the sick room that we might depart leaving behind us a new vision of the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour and abiding Companion in hours of suffering; we are to leave behind us new faith, hope, and courage. That is our purpose and we shall accomplish that only as we experience and radiate that same spirit in our own personal life. Thus preparation for the call involves a deep consecrated life of devotion day by day, a life of prayer, study of the Word of God, and a humble walk with God. These are the foundation stones of primary importance upon which effective pastoral visitation is built. A kitbag may be ever so full of other items, ever so empty, but this personal life of devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ must be present each time the minister steps across the threshold.

Visitation of the sick—what a privilege for service it offers. But also what a challenge to present unto those who look unto us for spiritual guidance, the best that we can offer. Let us be as willing to give ourselves wholeheartedly to this cause as the world is for its causes.

"A pauper who divides with a dog is greater than a prince who takes from the poor."

When Prevention Fails

A great many young parents soon come to realize how important proper teaching and example are for the growing child. However, with the best of intentions prevention sometimes fails. What then? Then the more difficult cure must set in. Where there is neither prevention or cure there is bound to be a sad story. Below we reprint a question and an answer from the personal counseling department of The Protestant Voice. The department is conducted by Mrs. Paul Krauss, a minister's wife.

Dear Priscilla:

In a young mothers' study club one of the mothers said, "My little boy is so naughty sometimes I don't know what to do with him, but I'm afraid to punish him or cross him for fear he'll turn against me. I don't want him to hate me." What is your answer to this mother?—INTERESTED MOTHER.

Dear Interested Mother:

She should begin immediately before it is too late to take charge of the training of her boy with a firm, wise but just and kindly discipline, lest he have no respect for her. A few years from now, when the world begins to deal him the heavy blows which his arrogant, selfish spirit will inevitably deserve and get, he will be more likely to hate her than to love her. He will have a feeling of resentment if not scorn toward his parents for not teaching him in childhood the important lessons of obedience, self-control and consideration for the rights of others. The only way this can be taught is by punishment for wrong doing. It needn't be severe but it is necessary if he is to have moral character at all. God, Himself, the Father of us all, has taught us that punishment is often the kindest treatment. Administered at the right time to her boy, it will teach him there is a difference between right and wrong and it matters which he chooses. Occasional praise for good behaviour is equally as important as disapproval of wrong doing. Gradually teach the boy that doing right is the normal and expected attitude toward life. Do not pat him on the back too often or he will become a weather-vane, capable only of doing right under the incentive of flattery.

Letter From Sam Goering

22 Club Back Road,
Byculla, Bombay.

Mrs. Sam J. Goering,
North Newton, Kansas.

Dear Pauline:

This is my last letter from India. About three weeks before my birthday you are going to have me back again. Of course this is only a guess but should not be far out of the way. Now that we are on our way we are anxious to go as fast as possible and you may be sure that we will proceed just as quickly as we possibly can.

We were in Iindia about a month on our way to China and now again we had six weeks here. This gives one a good chance to make comparisons. On the one hand one moves as it were in two different worlds; on the other hand one is constantly aware that this is "one world." Just now it is India rather than China that is at the "cross-road," where the race of men go by. Men and women from everywhere. Bombay is a beautiful city. I love to stand and watch the crowd move back and forth on Hornby Road. Reminds me of a poem I learned as a youngster. Here they go and here they come. Where they going and where they from? Hear the patter of their feet moving down the city street. Rich and poor, and high and low, here they come and there they go. Some that smile and some that frown; powdered white and honest brown. etc. Well here they all are. With us here stay a doctor and Mrs. Anwar. She is an American and he Afganistan. She is white, he rather dark. She is a musician and he a chemist. She is a Christian and he a Mohammedan. Three years ago they were students at Columbia University. Now they are students together in life. Mrs. Anwar would like to get back to the states, but at this particular time no transportation seems to be available for women or children, and no telling how soon there will be. Wish you could hear Mrs. Anwar sing the negro spiritual, "Nobody knows the trouble I'se seen . . . . Glory Hallaluha." Dr. Anwar is an outstanding chemist and was teaching at one of their universities. I think he would have liked to continue, but Mrs. Anwar is anxious to get back to the States. This was her first experience away from home and she looks back to America as a land of milk and honey. Not all feel that way, however. India has made a lot of progress since 1926 when you and I were here together. Maybe I should say 'progress as we think of it' because some who should know claim that India was civilized when, as one guide book puts it, "some of the most simple things were an unknown art to our ancestors." I have tried to learn something of Hinduism while here because that still is the heart of India.

BOOKLET AVAILABLE

The supply of the reprinted booklet, Power Through Prayer, is sufficient to offer free copies to Sunday School officers and teachers if they mean to read them. We would rather have the booklet distributed and really read than keep the supply and wait for orders. The Committee and the brethren who financed the reprinting of the booklet did this to make the valuable message available to as many leaders in the church as possible. When you write for free copies, kindly enclose stamps for postage. Copies may be obtained by writing to W. F. Unruh, Moundridge, Kansas.

The Evangelism Committee

Dependency Problems of Men in Service

There always was a dependency problem connected with the drafting of men under the selective service act. It was more acute in the case of men who went to Civilian Public Service Camps, because these men served without pay. But the dependency problem definitely was not confined to them.

In the early stages of Civilian Public Service, the problem was comparatively simple because, (1) those with dependents were generally deferred, and (2) those who had dependents generally found it possible to provide for them for a temporary period. Now the situation has definitely changed. The war continues. Some men have been in camp for three years. It becomes increasingly difficult to provide for dependents as time drags on. Furthermore, more men with dependents are being drafted constantly. Men having two and three children or having aged parents that need continuous care are now being inducted. This condition affects the young men of our Conference no less than it affects others. It is, therefore, becoming increasingly urgent that our Conference make some careful, wise, and understanding provision for dependents suffering hardship because of the war effort.

In the early stages of the draft, the Mennonite Central Committee as well as our Conference took the position that it was best to handle dependency cases in the traditional Mennonite way which was regarded as good practice. Mennonites have always believed in the scriptural principle that we should bear one another's burdens, and that we should be deeply concerned about those belonging to our own household of faith. According to Mennonite custom, the immediate family or relationship would try to help the young man and his dependents find a satisfactory and honorable way to provide for themselves without undue hardship. If the family group or group of relatives felt unable to do so, the local church would assist in ways which were thought wise and acceptable. Where necessary, the Emergency Relief Board stood ready to give needed assistance. The Mennonite Central Committee likewise was ready to assist wherever necessary.

This system worked reasonably well while there were only a few isolated individuals involved, but it was not entirely satisfactory because those concerned did not like to be regarded as objects of charity. Leaders of the M.C.C. as well as of our Conference understood this feeling and sought an answer that would have sensitive regard for the feelings of those most concerned.

Since this problem was becoming increasingly urgent, the M.C.C. called a special meeting of representatives of its various constituent groups on March 17-18 to consider this whole problem. At this meeting, a plan of assistance was unanimously agreed upon by the cooperating groups. The details of this plan are described in an M.C.C. folder which has been mailed to local churches and to C.P.S. Camps, and so will not be described here. The M.C.C. does certain work for all the co-operating groups, but it was thought best to have the various constituent groups indicate how they wanted to put the plan into operation.

At its meeting on April 18-19, the Emergency Relief Board after careful deliberation undertook to assume this responsibility for our Conference believing its Conference responsibility would include that of providing for dependents of drafted men, whether in C.P.S. Camps or other camps. The Board authorized setting aside a small but adequate sum to serve as a revolving fund to be drawn on as needed in the judgment of the Board. In its payments to dependents the Board would follow the policy agreed upon at the above M.C.C. meeting. This revolving fund would be replenished monthly from undesignated funds in the Relief Board treasury. Contributions designated for special causes would as always continue to be spent for the purposes intended. The Relief Board, however, would like to invite churches to make special contributions to this fund whose purpose is to give needed assistance to dependents of drafted men. At present, the sum needed for this purpose is not large, but with the increasing draft of fathers it is bound to grow.

Churches in Four Districts have Plan

Churches in the Pacific, Northern, Middle, and Western districts have adopted the 100 Per Cent Plan. Nineteen in the Western District have the plan, four in the Northern District, four in the Pacific District, and two in the Middle District. Perhaps some church in the Eastern District will adopt the plan in a year, and then all districts will be represented. —rw.

RELIEF NOTES

Garments for Greek Relief

Mennonite women have accepted the invitation from the Greek War Relief Association to share in the making of children's garments for relief purposes in Greece. Thirty thousand yards of material have been sent to the three cutting rooms where it will be cut over standard patterns and then be sent out to the sewing circles to be made into garments. The work is to be completed and sent in sometime between June 1 and 15.

Experiences in a Refugee Camp

The following paragraph is taken from a letter written by Delvin Kirchhofer, Mennonite relief worker at a Yugoslav refugee camp in Egypt.

"We are within fifteen minutes walking distance of the Canal (Suez) and occasionally I see our own flag which looks good indeed. We have had two severe sand storms since I have been here. Both times some tents have been blown down, but fortunately mine has stayed up so far, although the last time I barely managed to save it. At such times everything gets covered with sand, and it is impossible to keep anything clean anywhere. Our dress suits and white shirts are getting much-needed rest for they are out of place in such a camp."

Food in France

One-third of the school children show signs of emaciation, it is stated. Teachers report intellectual apathy, loss of memory and attention, insufficient concentration and instability—all due to insufficient food. There is a great increase in tuberculosis, both in number of cases and in severity. (Report of Famine Relief Committee,

-3-44)

Camp Paper from Hospital Unit

The C.P.S. unit at Western State Hospital, Staunton, 'irginia, is the first Mennonite hospital unit to publish camp paper. The first issue came out for the month f March and is called C.P.S. No. 44 Unifier. The state ospital at Staunton was the first mental hospital to eceive M.C.C.-C.P.S. men, and has been in operation ince August, 1942.

Discharges from C.P.S.

All men released from Mennonite camps, for physical isability or other reasons, will receive upon their discharge a letter of farewell from the Mennonite Aid Secion of M.C.C. The representative on the Council on Menionite Aid from the camper's denomination will also eceive a notice and a report of the discharge. This pracice is a result of the interest of the churches in the ehabilitation of C.P.S. men.

IN MEMORIAM

SARA WEDEL SCHMIDT was born on September 19, 867, in Alexanderwohl, South Russia. In 1874 she came vith her parents to a new home in McPherson County, Kansas. She was baptized in 1885 by Elder Jacob Buller and received into the Alexanderwohl Church. She was nited in marriage to John P. Schmidt in 1889. She assed away on February 16, 1944. She is mourned by he following children: Mrs. A. U. Reimer, Hillsboro; 3. B. Schmidt, Canton; and Frank J. Schmidt, Newton.

P. A. HIEBERT, son of Abraham and Helena Pankratz Hiebert, was born February 8, 1873, in South Russia, and died April 18, 1944. He came to this country with his parents. In 1901 he was baptized by Rev. Hirschler and received into the First Mennonite Church, Hillsboro. He served his church as Sunday School superintendent, choir leader, deacon, and otherwise. He received his early education in the Hoffnungsthal School and later he attended Bethel College and McPherson College. He and Emma Weyand were united in marriage in 1903. Since 1918 they have lived on their farm west of Hillsboro. His wife and six children survive him.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES

Evangelistic Meetings will be held at the Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, of which Rev. Garman Wedel is pastor. These special meetings will begin on Sunday evening, May 7 at 8:00 p.m. through Friday evening, May 12. Rev. Clyde H. Dirks, pastor of the First Mennonite Church of Hutchinson will be the speaker. He will bring messages on the following topics:

May 7: "The Greatest Pledge
May 8: "The Greatest Preference"
May 9: "The Greatest Proposition"
May 10: "The Greatest Power"
May 11: "The Greatest Proclamation"
May 12: "The Greatest Preparation"

The public is cordially invited to attend all these services.

JOTTINGS

—The Bethel Mennonite Congregation of Perkasie, Pa., enjoyed four days of special services. We were privileged to hear the Rev. Henry J. Heydt, president of the Lancaster School of the Bible, and Bible teacher. Rev. Heydt is a graduate of Moravian College, and studied further in both America and Europe. He spoke on the themes "Power in Prayer," "Work of the Holy Spirit in the Believer," and "Unto You He is Precious." Mrs. Heydt and others brought messages in song. A fair attendance and manifest interest marked these services. A few weeks earlier Rev. Heydt conducted Bible lessons at the Springfield church which is the Rev. Ward W. Shelley's other charge.

On the following Sunday the young peoples' chorus of Springfield presented the Easter cantata, "Hail King of Glory," in our church. The chorus made up of thirteen voices showed careful training. The rainy spell we are having this month brought us a rainy day which cut down the attendance somewhat.—FEL. Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Halstead, Kansas: No church services were held here on April 23, due to the flooded conditions of Halstead and surrounding community. This was much regretted due to the fact that Rev. J. E. Amstutz of Trenton, Ohio, a former pastor, was to occupy the pulpit, and following the morning services a fellowship meal had been planned.

This is the second flood experienced here during the month of April. Some property and live stock losses are reported. A number of residents were forced to evacuate their homes after basements were filled and water was entering the homes.

Communion was held on Easter Sunday, and in the evening a special program of scripture and music, taken largely from Stainer's "Crucifixion" was given.

The Bethel College Academy students gave a splendid program here in March. On April 16, the Bethel College A Cappella Choir rendered a program of music at a Union church service held in our church.

On April 18, church members gave a shower for the Paul Schroeder family whose home and all contents were destroyed by fire. Miraculously the family escaped uninjured. Brother Schroeder had recently been elected as a new member of the church board of deacons.

Brother Walter Berger a former member of the Halstead church but now of Arlington, passed away and was laid to rest in the Halstead Cemetery on April 10.

Theodore Bausemer, a member of this church, serving his country, passed away in Italy on January 31, about two months after his brother Orville passed away in service. This is a great sacrifice for their parents, who have another son in the service. He is the fifth Halstead Casualty in this war.

Brother Jacob Friesen, Bethel College student, who serves as Rev. D. C. Wedel's, assistant, brought the message on two Sunday morning services during the first quarter of the year.

—Brother Paul Wenger, who with Mrs. Wenger is now studying at Biblical Seminary, New York, brought the morning message to the First Mennonite Church, Philadelphia, on April 23, while Rev. Plenert was in Kansas. Brother Plenert is treasurer of the Home Mission Board of our conference.

—Berne, Indiana: The Mennonite Ladies Choir, under the direction of Mrs. C. T. Habegger, gave their annual spring concert at the First Mennonite Church on April 30.

—Rev. P. Moutett, who served as a minister of the Brudertal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas, for many years and is the father of Rev. Solomon Mouttet, pastor of the Eden Mennonite Church, Inola, Oklahoma, was found dead in his bed in Hillsboro, Kansas, on April 24. He was seventy-nine years old.

—Bulletin, First Mennonite Church, Upland, California: "In the absence of the pastor next Sunday morning Mr. L. J. Horsch will give a report of a Committee (Peace) meeting he attended at Newton, Kansas, this past week."

—The Deep Run Mennonite Church, Deep Run, Pa., has decided to excavate for a basement under its meetinghouse.

—The Mennonite Central Committee has put out an attractive folder on "Gifts in Kind." This deals with the canned and dried foods program for the Mennonite C. P.S. camps. Your pastor may have a copy for you. The folder also has a section on clothing and soap for relief.

—There were 395 converts on our India mission field last year.

—The Springfield (Pa.) Mennonite Church gave as its Easter cantata "Hail King of Glory." This cantata was also presented to the Bethel Mennonite Church, Perkasie.

—First Mennonite Church, Paso Robles, California: Rev. Hege preached his final sermon Easter Sunday. Words cannot express how we feel about losing our pastor. We hope and pray that God will open a way by which we will find a new minister. Chaplains from Camp Roberts have been filling the pulpit since Easter Sunday and will do so until we secure a new minister.

April 12 the Ladies Missionary Sewing Society held their annual Silver Tea at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gus Toevs. The afternoon was spent hemming dish towels for the C.P.S. Camps—Lydia Quenzer, Corr.

—A Sunday School Class as Large as a Church: Can you imagine a Sunday School class of two hundred in one of our Mennonite churches? We have a goodly number of congregations whose membership do not come up that figure. But on Sunday morning you can find a class of this size in the back part of the meetinghouse in Berne. Indiana. Teaching the class is Elmer W. Baumgartner.

—Watch for a series of articles that will be entitled "From Gerald Stucky's Scrapbook." This series will tell of his journey through Latin America. It will give his personal observations in a vivid, interesting way.

—The Hebron Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kansas, has a meetinghouse that impresses one with its neatness and beauty as one enters it. No disorderly arrangement of songbooks here. Every rack holds a certain number of books, all turned in a certain direction. This suggests care and orderliness at once. There were some Sunday School quarterlies in the men's hall; they were there for distribution. Now such supplies easily get strewn around. But these weren't. They were in their exact order. Right above them was a mirror. That is not unusual, but it was unusual to find a comb rack with some good combs right underneath it. This church house is over fifty years old, but the woodwork glistened with varnish. The floor was clean and varnished. The wall paper was fresh and clean. The benches have a unique style and are old, but no scratches stand out on them. Two fluorescent lamps provide adequate light for the choir. Neatly arranged in the front were some potted plants and a bouquet. Even the loose petals of these were picked up. Directly in the back and in the middle is the nursery room. The young women, called Candle-lighters have fixed up this room. In it there is a good couch with protective blanket, two comfortable, upholstered rocker chairs, two beautiful little cradles painted in white and both over fifty years old, and a little table also over fifty years old. The table was once in the basement with layers of dirt and varnish on it. No one wanted it. Mrs. Dietrich Dick, the caretaker's wife, took it home, cleaned off the dirt and varnish, and refinished it. Now all adore it. This meetinghouse is not ornate or elaborate, but one likes to enter into it because it is clean, neat, and orderly. To Mr. and Mrs. Dick goes much of the credit for it being so, the editor was told. But it was also evident that the members as a whole desire that kind of an atmosphere and help maintain it. Rev. Alvin van der Smissen is pastor of the Hebron Church.

—Mr. and Mrs. Henry P. Buller spent Easter in the Swamp Mennonite Charge (that of Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander). They were the guests of Rev. and Mrs. Neuenschwander. At present the Bullers are located at the M.C.C. office at Akron. On March 15 Mr. Buller spoke of the relief work in the West Swamp Sunday School and to the Bethany Sunday School on Easter forenoon. In the afternoon he spoke at Flatland. Mr. and Mrs. Buller were interned at Baden-Baden, German for some time.

—The Buhler Mennonite Church, Buhler Kansas, gav $49.60 for the Publication work of our Conference in recent Sunday morning offering. Such offerings hel our publication work greatly, for our papers are not money-making proposition. Last year one of them wen $400.00 into the red. They are an educational-missionar effort of our conference. and the board seeks to kee their price low so that they may go into many homes

—Bethesda Mennonite Church, Henderson, Nebraska

I. A member of our congregation who has recentl been released from C.P.S. due to physical unfitness an who has taken up farming on a small scale was surprise one evening by a neighborhood group showering hi with groceries, feed for livestock, etc.

II. The C.E. Service Committee changed their regula routine of writing a letter to each man in service from our congregation for the month of April and instead passed out four sets of names to whom Easter greetings were to be sent, thus each man in service receiving four greeting cards.

III. The Easter Cantata. "He That Liveth" was rendered by the choirs of our church on Easter Sunday evening. An offering was taken for choir music and loud speaker fund which netted nearly $65.00.

—Benj. P. Waltner completes his twenty-fifth year of teaching at Freeman Junior College: Benj. P. Waltner first joined the College teaching staff in the fall of 1919. It was shortly after his discharge from the army where he served as non-combatant in the World War I. That was also the year when he chose Adina Graber, class of '09, to be his life companion. Previous to the war he had been Principal of the Big Stone City High School for one year and instructor in Agriculture at Jackson High School in Minnesota for two years.

Mr. Waltner received his formal training in Freeman College Academy, Redfield College, South Dakota State College, Iowa State College and the University of South Dakota. During his quarter century of service at Freeman he has taught Science, Agriculture, and Normal Review subjects. He has served as Acting-President of the College on two different occasions, Principal of the Academy, Registrar, and Dean of the Junior College.

—Rev. Willard Claassen, pastor of the Salem Mennonite Church, gave the Baccalaureate sermon to the graduates of Freeman Junior College in May 7.

—Dr. J. Winfield Fretz will give the commencement address at Freeman Junior College this year. He will speak on "The Shape of Things to Come." The commencement exercises will be held on May 12, beginning at 8 o'clock.

OUR HOME MISSION WORK

A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary of the Home Mission Board

HOME MISSION BOARD MEETING
Memorial Hall, Bethel College
North Newton, Kansas
April 18-21, 1944

Tuesday Afternoon 3:00 p.m.

Present of the Board were: J. M. Regier, Chairman; . Harley King, J. E. Amstutz, A. J. Neuenschwander, J. Plenert. Visitors were: Rev. William H. Stauffer, igarcreek, Ohio, and Rev. Freeman H. Swartz, Norris-wn, Pa. All members and visitors participated in the ening season of prayer. Minutes of the 1943 meeting ere read and approved.

Rev. William H. Stauffer, Field Worker for the last ar, was asked to make a complete report of his ork. A Miss Goering, stenographer, took the report shorthand and it will be edited by Rev. Stauffer and ade available. The year of labor entailed much travel id effort, but it was a year filled with rich spiritual periences as the various camps and detached units C.P.S. men were visited. Rev. Stauffer visited all ie district conferences and also presented the work one in C.P.S. in a majority of general conference iurches. Brother Stauffer's recommendations, and milar ones that have come to the Board through presentatives of the General Conference at M.C.C., kron, Pa., will be given due consideration, and action ter on. Dr. J. Winfield Fretz, M.C.C. worker also ime into our meeting before the afternoon was over id offered some valuable suggestions, which were also onsidered later on.

The advisability was considered of having joint meet-igs with the Relief Board and the Peace Committee iasmuch as some of our work would be of mutual oncern. The Evangelism Committee, working under ie direction of the H.M.B. was to come and report on ieir work. Rev. Jacob J. Gerbrant, Drake, Saskat-hewan, and Rev. J. F. Sawatzky, Newton, Kansas, were be present when the Canadian field would be con-idered.

Wednesday morning 8:30 a.m.

The matter of choosing and arranging for good Bible eachers to visit our C.P.S. camps, units and home hurches was considered. This was suggested by Rev. tauffer and General Conference men connected with I.C.C., Akron, Pa.

In the mid-forenoon the Peace Committee came in to oin in this problem. Motion, It is the sense of the two roups, the Home Mission Board and the Peace Com-mittee that we cooperate in the effort to secure good ible teachers, to do the kind of work as suggested and sked for by above named groups, to give systematic ible teaching to our men in C.P.S. camps and units nd in the home churches, to give more unity in the basic Christian principles from our Mennonite viewpoint. This program to be worked out on a three month basis, if possible. Carried.

Wednesday afternoon, 1:30 p.m.

The Relief Board and the H. M. B. met jointly. Dr. J. Winfield Fretz, was asked to give the main points of his paper on "Giving Mutual Aid, in the form of loans etc., to our young people, especially as this concerns men in service."

Motion: We request that each of the three groups, the Home Mission Board, the Relief Board, and the Peace Committee, select an individual who is to act as a fact finding committee to set up the organization for the giving of Mutual Aid to our young people. This committee to submit their findings or plan to the three boards for study so that action can be taken by the time of General Conference. Carried.

After the departure of the Relief Board, the H. M. Board turned to the work of the Evangelism Committee. Membership for past year: W. F. Unruh, 1944, Erland Waltner, 1945, Walter Gering, 1946.

The Secretary having received a letter containing the resignation of Erland Waltner, presented this to the Board.

Motion: That we regretfully accept the resignation of Erland Waltner, as member of the Evangelism Committee. Carried.

Motion: That we nominate W. F. Unruh to continue on the Evangelism Committee for another three year term, ending in 1947, and that we appoint Rev. John T. Neufeld, 4215 South Rockwell Street, Chicago, to fill the unexpired term of Rev. Waltner, expiring in 1945. Carried.

Thus the Committe is to be: W. F. Unruh, 1947, Walter Gering, 1946, John T. Neufeld, 1945.

At 4:45 p.m. the committee of two, Rev. Unruh and Rev. Goering, came in to report of their efforts and accomplishments. They have a large number of carefully selected tracts on hand. They have sent out sample tract packets. The supply is at the Bethel College Secretarial Bureau, where orders are filled out. Orders are coming in and it is hoped that in the near future more articles will appear in our church papers giving direction as to how to use the tracts to best advantage. All General Conference ministers and churches are encouraged to send their orders in to either Rev. W. F. Unruh, or Rev. Walter Gering, Moundridge, Kansas.

Motion: That we allow the Evangelism Committee additional financial support for their tract work. Carried.

The Secretary turned over to the Board the resignation of Rev. Sylvan S. Lehman, Quarryville, Pa., R.F.D. No. 2.

Motion: That with regrets we accept the resignation of Rev. Sylvan S. Lehman, as Pastor of the Calvary Mennonite Church, Mechanics Grove, Pa., and that the secretary write a letter to Rev. Lehman expressing the Board's thanks and appreciation for the good work done, and that we pray for God's choice blessing as he goes to the new field in Lima, Ohio, as of June 1. Carried.

Motion: That in view of the needed change at Calvary Church, Mechanics Grove, we request the two members of the Home Mission Board of Pa. to confer with the E. D. Home Mission Committee, to study the Lancaster field with a view of locating a church in that city. The congregation in Mechanics Grove to be cared for and opportunity be given for the spiritual care of the membership. Carried.

The Secretary presented the matter of the New York Mennonite Fellowship, especially a letter from Rev. Paul R. Shelly, 600 West 122nd Street, New York, 27, N. Y. The request has come from the New York group that some Mennonite student be engaged to contact all Mennonites in the New York area in order to encourage them spiritually and if possible to bring them into a closer fellowship.

Motion: That we contact Robert A. Behnken, a Mennonite, 310 E. 42nd Street, New York, 17, N. Y. and ask him to assume this task of contacting Mennonites in the city with a view to enlist their interest in the New York Mennonite Fellowship and assuring them that the Mennonite church is interested in their spiritual welfare. That we appropriate (the amount necessary) for this work. Carried.

In response to an appeal from the Literature Committee of the Women's Missionary Association, to help in printing leaflets for use in connection with the General Conference, the following action was taken:

Motion: That we allow the Literature Committee of the Women's Missionary Association, $50.00 toward their printing. Carried.

In response to an enlarged program to care more adequately for the scattered Mennonites in the Chicago area, and in response to action taken by the two ministers, Rev. John T. Neufeld and Rev. Erwin Albrecht, for religious meetings in the afternoon of the first Sunday in the month in the Loop District. Action was taken:

Motion: That we appropriate $100.00 to the plan of the Chicago Mennonite Fellowship meetings and expenses to be held in Dixon Chapel in First Methodist Church, in the Loop District. The money to be sent to Rev. Erwin Albrecht. Carried.

Thursday Morning 8:30

Rev. J. J. Gerbrandt was with us. Rev. Gerbrandt is from Drake, Saskatchewan. The various fields of labor in Canada were enumerated and discussed, one by one. While this was going on, Rev. J. F. Sawatzky, Newton, Kansas, came in by invitation and Mrs. Goerz and Mrs. Lohrentz of the Women's Missionary Association, visited with our Board.

The news was received with real satisfaction that the Steinbach church group had repaid the entire $1,000.00 loan.

A letter was read from Rev. J. B. Wiens which gave information as to how the Mennonites in Vancouver, took care of the C.O., men who were stationed near to that city during part of the past year. The joint effort of Mennonites from different conferences in Vancouver made us feel that perhaps something similar might be worked out by the Brethren in Ontario in the city of Toronto, to minister to the spiritual needs of the young men stationed in camps near Toronto.

By common consent this thought was accepted—namely that all Canadian H. M. fields and workers be studied carefully by the Canadian Home Mission Committee and Rev. David Toews. The results to be submitted to th Secretary for the Board.

Afternoon Session, 1:30 p.m.

Motion: That we as a Home Mission Board favor tha steps be taken by the Board of Trustees of the Genera Conference to accomplish Registration of the Genera Conference in Canada, to facilitate holding of property in Canada. This resolution carried.

With regard to the proposed visitation work of Rev J. J. Easu to the Canadian North-West, British Columbia and Alberta, that he follow the suggestions from these two provinces as to the best time to visit each one after June 1.

Motion. That we as a Home Mission Board sanction the undertaking of a retreat of promising ministerial students from C.P.S. camps at Bethel College, in connection with General Conference and underwrite our share of the travel expense involved and lodging expense, after offerings have been taken in public meetings to help defray the all over expense of the retreat. Carried.

At 5:00 p.m. the Board of Education came in to further consider and discuss the program of working out the details of the Bible teachers to be sent to C.P.S. camps and units, this also to reach the home churches.

A joint expression was made that the Board of Education would cooperate with the H. M. Board in carrying out these plans.

Friday morning, 8:30 a.m.

Rev. W. C. Voth and Rev. Gerald Stucky, who had recently visited in Paraguay, South America, gave a report of their findings. Their report on Paraguay was read. Verbally they reported further and discussion followed.

Mennonites in Curytiba, Brazil, via Rev. David Koop, have sent a request for some spiritual aid, with the Brethren Voth and Stucky. The language—only Portuguese to be used.

By common consent, it was agreed that we continue to study the Paraguay problems, via: 1. Dr. John R. Schmidt. 2nd. via Prof A. E. Janzen, Hillsboro, Kan. 3rd. Through our contact with M.C.C. when Stucky, Plenert, and Neuenschwander visit with Orie Miller, Ex.-Sec., M.C.C. Akron, Pa. 4. via possibility of helping students who desire to come and study in the United States. 5. via possibility of supporting the newly organized Bible School. 6. via opportunities as they develop in the Asuncion, Mennonite center.

Motion: To authorize the payment of bill from Mennonite Publication Office, for $99.30 for books, S. S. Quarterlies, The Mennonite subscriptions to C.P.S. camps, and one-half of 42 Bundesbote subscriptions, sent to leaders in Paraguay, S. America. Carried.

Motion: That for the coming year we agree again to assume our one-half share of the books, S. S. Quarterlies, and Mennonites, to be sent to C.P.S. camps and one-half of the 42 B. Bote subscriptions to Paraguay. This motion carried.

Motion: That our support to Portland continue as in the past. Carried.

Friday Afternoon 1:30 p.m.

Mrs. W. C. Voth came in as a visitor, she being a member of the Womens' Missionary Association.

The matter of our connection with the Mennonite work and workers in Kentucky mountains as well as the work of Miss Elsa E. Grantland, was considered.

Motion: That we ask Rev. J. E. Amstutz, Trenton, Ohio, to visit the Kentucky field and call on Rev. Abraham Unruh, Elsie Pfister, and Margaret Slotter, with a view of cooperating with them in their fields. The Secretary to contact the home churches, East Swamp and Grace Church, Landsale, with a view of having these churches send their support through the Board. Miss Elsa E. Grantland also to be visited by Amstutz. Carried.

Motion: That we authorize the Treasurer of the Home Mission Board to transfer all his funds to the United General Conference Treasury, P. A. Penner, Treasurer, 722 Main St., Newton, Kansas, as of July 1, 1944. This to permit Rev. Plenert to complete the trienium. Carried.

Motion: That we sanction the repairing of the church at Smith Corner, if possible, one of the sills needs to be repaired; and also to purchase a few acres for our church worker's use, if possible. Carried.

Motion: That we recommend to General Conference that the Home Mission Board turn over the Colonization work to the Relief Board, since this kind of work falls much more logically into activities of the Relief Board. Carried.

Mrs. W. C. Voth reported that the Women's Missionary Association was going to work with the Home Missions Council of N. A. for this summer, to carry on Migrant Work. Mary Becker or Fern Bixel to be invited to do this work.

Discussion of details and mechanics followed as they relate to the choosing of Bible teachers who are to visit the camps and detached units and also the home churches, to give systematic Bible teachings on our principles of faith.

Motion: That the Home Mission Board meeting be adjourned. Carried. This was at 7:15 p.m.

Our Chairman, Rev. J. H. Regier offered the closing prayer.

Very Sincerely in Him,

A. J. Neuenschwander, Sec.

OUR FOREIGN MISSION WORK

P. H. Richert, Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board

REPORT OF THE FOREIGN MISSION BOARD SESSION HELD APRIL 18-21, 1944 IN THE MEMORIAL HALL, NORTH NEWTON, KANSAS

The session was opened by the President of the Board. He read Is. 60:1-3 and Matthew 5: 13-16. He pointed out that both passages, one from the Old Testament and one from the New Testament, speak of the great light that is to shine in the darkness of this world through Christ, who is the "Light of the World," and also through the children of light, to whom Christ said, "Ye are the light of the world." What a challenge that is for us today, when there is still so much darkness.

Then followed a season of praise and prayer.

All Board members attended this meeting: P. P. Wedel, A. E. Kreider, H. G. Nyce, A. P. Waltner, P. A. Penner, P. H. Richert, and part of the time also C. E. Krehbiel, President of the General Conference, and Philip Wedel, Secretary; also the officers of the Women's Association, Mrs. R. A Goerz, Mrs. Frieda Regier Entz, Mrs. A. M. Lohrentz, and Mrs. W. C. Voth. Part of the time also the following were present: C. E. Rediger, Sec. of the Congo Inland Mission, the two delegates to South America, G. B. Stucky and W. C. Voth, and missionaries Bro. and Sister Brown.

The first report read was that of the new Treasurer, P. A. Penner, assisted by his Secretary-bookkeeper, Mrs. A. T. Mueller.

Since the change of treasurers took place in the middle of the year, this report covered only 6 months. The total income (including the $6189.88 received from the former Treasurer J. E. Regier) was $105,900.34, and the total expenditures were $44,029.65. The following is a brief resume of the report:

Bank Balance Jan. 1, 1943	$ 2,773.41
Receipts, Jan. 1—July 1, 1943	55,962.04
Receipts, July 1—Dec. 31, 1943 (from J.E.R.)	99,310.46
Total Income (for 12 mo.)	158,045.91
Total Expenditure	96,119.26
Balance	61,926.26

1. Resolved to adopt the report of the treasurer.

2. Resolved to thank the treasurer and his secretary-bookkeeper for their efficient service and good report.

3. Resolved to include the following resolutions of appreciation and thanks in our minutes:

"The Foreign Mission Board of the General Conference wishes to express its appreciation to Brother J. E. Regier for his many years of faithful service as its treasurer. We are aware, at least in part, of the time and labor required by the duties of this office. He has given his time and counsel freely, without receiving any remuneration. He has provided his own clerical help without accepting remuneration from the Board for the same. We as a Board by formal vote are hereby expressing our sincere gratitude. May God's continued blessing be with him."

Oklahoma

4. Resolved to approve of the budget for Oklahoma as follows:

Canton, Longdale, and Fonda (Arthur Friesen, Canton, Oklahoma)
Station account	350.00
Painting Longdale and Fonda Churches	200.00
1943 Deficit	85.46
Native Help account	600.00
Clinton, Hammon, and Thomas (J. B. Ediger, Clinton, Oklahoma)
Station account	350.00
Painting Hammon church inside, including furniture	100.00
1943 Deficit	35.31
Native Help account	800.00
Total	2540.77

5. Resolved that in view of the fact of the heavy expense involved in maintaining some of the older model cars by the missionaries among the American Indians, we encourage them to get full information about the possibility of exchanging their car for a later model, and that the Mission Board assures them of reasonable financial aid.

Montana

6. Resolved to allow the following budgets:

Ashland	200.00
Lame Deer	260.00
Total	460.00

7. Resolved that we allow the repairing of the Ashland house roof and the installing of two furnaces at Birney and Busby and needed repairs at Lame Deer, besides the above mentioned budget of 460.00

Arizona

8. Resolved to accept the Arizona budget as follows:

Moencopi
Fuel	$ 80.00
Repairs and other expenses	200.00
Total	330.00

Hotevilla
Building	550.00
Fuel	$ 45.00
Other expenses	20.00
	615.00
Oraibi
Interpreter's salary	$500.00
Repairs and other expenses	100.00
	600.00

9. Resolved to allow the salary, traveling expenses, and board for two helpers in vacation Bible school.

10. Resolved to approve of the plan to employ and train Willard as interpreter and full time Christian worker at Oraibi.

Congo Inland Mission Cooperation

The Congo Inland Mission Board had proposed a few amendments to our plan of cooperation, which were now discussed and acted on in consultation with Bro. C. E. Rediger as representative of that Board.

11. Resolved to accept the first amendment (to item 5) of the plan in regard the missionaries' reports, and to administrative authority.

12. Resolved to accept the second amendment (to item 7) of the plan regarding the joint control of our missionaries while on furlough at home.

13. Resolved to ask Bro. P. A. Penner to go to Manitoba at the time of their conference July 1-5, in order to discuss the application of Bro. and Sister D. H. Loewen with them and their church council.

14. Resolved that our standard of qualifications for missionaries which we send to Africa be the same as that of the CIM Board.

15. Resolved that either the President or the Secretary of our Board is to attend the CIM Board meeting.

16. Resolved that we plan to send the following couples to Africa under our cooperative plan with the CIM: Bro. and sister George B. Neufeld, Bro. and sister Elmer J. Dick, and that we aid to the extent of one half of the trip expenses and salary for the return to Africa of the missionaries Bro. and Sister H. A. Toevs and their two children, and that we send Bro. and sister Waldo E. Harder also as soon as feasible.

17. Resolved that the Executive Committee in cooperation with the mission candidates and their pastors work out the programs for the ordination of Bro. and sister Geo. B. Neufeld and Bro. and sister Elmer J. Dick.

South America (Colombia)

18. Resolved to lay before the General Conference the recommendation by our delegates that we open work in Colombia, South America. (See the recommendation below.)

19. Resolved to extend a vote of thanks to the delegates G. B. Stucky and W. C. Voth for their very good reports (each of about 10,000 words).

20. Resolved, if the conference accepts our recommendation to start work in South America, that Bro. and sister Gerald B. Stucky be commissioned and ordained as missionaries during the session of the General Conference.

21. Resolved that we ask Brother W. C. Voth to visit the Western District churches between now and the General Conference.

22. Resolved that we aim to send 4 or 5 workers to S. A. this coming fall, including a nurse. (Where is a consecrated and prepared nurse, willing to go with these first missionaries to S.A.? Let the mission friends pray for one.)

23. Resolved that in regard to the length of term that missionaries are to serve in Colombia, we follow somewhat the practice of other boards.

24. Resolved that we ask our missionaries in Colombia to spend at least one year in formal language study.

25. Resolved to approach sister Mary Becker about the possibility of her going to Colombia in case we do not get word soon from London that she can go to India.

China

For the discussion of our China mission we had called in Brother and sister Brown. Brother Brown reported how the missionaries had prepared the native churches and workers for just such an emergency, when they would have to get along without white missionaries. What the church there can accomplish under the terrific stress and strain of war time and rival factions in the country, remains to be seen. But indications are that they do as well as could be expected. So we are waiting now until at least some missionaries can return, not so much as official leaders but as brothers and sisters and co-workers, even under Chinese leadership.

26. Resolved that we set aside 10,000.00 for China (including the 8000.00 which were earmarked for X-ray by special gifts before the war.)

27. Resolved that we allow up to 75.00 for the printing of leaflets and pamphlets for distribution at the General Conference by the Women's Missionary Association.

28. Resolved to ask Brother A. E. Kreider and one of the missionaries to go over Brother Brown's manuscript (for a book which relates the experiences in China during the time of war) for the purpose of eliminating nonimportant matter, or matters regarding the Japanese, that may be risky to publish, and then have the book printed in an inexpensive form.

India

29. Resolved, that we wait with action on resolution No. 1 of the India report till Miss Burkhalter comes home. (It deals with the proposal to ask Sister Burkhalter to solicit a fund of 15,000.00 for the Bible School plant.)

30. Resolved to defer action on resolution No. 3 for at least another year. (This refers to the building of another bungalow at Jagdeeshpur, estimated to cost 6000.00.)

31. Agreed to let the total budget stand as accepted some time ago, namely $29,292.00.

32. Resolved to accept resolution No. 11 of the Resolutions Committee in India, and to comply with it as soon as possible (It asks for more workers).

33. Resolved to authorize the Treasurer to send occasionally some money for our leper work in India. (Which otherwise is supported by the "Mission to Lepers")

34. The resolution to send the Wengers and Sister Elenor Schmidt, and Sister Augusta Schmidt, two nurses, to India this year was passed some time ago. We have at least some reason to hope that they can get passage.

General Matters

35. Resolved to continue the 10% increase of salaries of those on the foreign fields.

36. Resolved to thank the brethren Nyce and Unruh for their report from the last week's meeting of the National Association of Evangelicals at Columbus, Ohio. They were well impressed by the spiritual atmosphere, and spirit of prayer. This organization is a protest against liberalism in the Foreign Missions Conference. Brother Nyce had been sent there as our delegate.

37. Resolved to allow the Committee of Reference and Council 15.00 for their budget.

38. Resolved to allow the Presbyterian Board of F.M. $10.00 for sending their information bulletins about interned missionaries also to the relatives of our interned missionaries in China.

39. Resolved to send Brother Nyce also next year as delegate to the National Association of Evangelicals.

40. Resolved to send also a delegate to the F.M. Conference.

41. Resolved to ask Brother Waltner to write the next annual Board letter to the missionaries.

42. Resolved to ask Brother Nyce to visit Montana this year.

43. Resolved to pay Brother and Sister Wenger regular furlough salary for the time they lost out on their furlough by working in Roaring Springs awhile.

44. Resolved to allow our share of expenses for the proposed Christ and Workers' Retreat to be held just before the General Conference session.

45. Resolved that we encourage our missionaries to accept appointment under the M.C.C. (who have been approached for service in China), and that we request the M.C.C. that they may have the opportunity to make contacts incidentally with our field and work while in China.

46. Resolved, in view of the fact that we cannot at present send Miss Fast back to China, we advise her to seek employment wherever it is most congenial to her. (Preferably under the M.C.C., as stated above).

47. Resolved, in view of the practice of the Board, not to pay traveling expenses of missionaries who attend the General Conference, we offer only to pay the extra expenses involved by attending the proposed Missionary Conference at Henderson, Nebr.

48. Resolved to continue our present arrangement with Brother P. J. Wiens. (He files mission material and labels it).

49. Resolved to thank Bethel College for the free use of a committee room, and for the free lodging arrangements, as also for the good boarding service.

50. Resolved to thank Brother C. E. Krehbiel, conference president, for attending our sessions as much as time permitted him.

51. Resolved to thank all our mission friends, churches, C. E. Societies, and Women's Association for their faithful and growing support of our mission work. This growth is, no doubt, largely attributable to the increased spreading of mission information through the "News and Notes."

52. Resolved to thank all our mission workers at home and abroad for their faithful service, including the good reports for our church papers from time to time.

53. Resolved to thank the Lord for his continued blessing of our work in so many ways. We think especially of the safe return of three interned missionaries from China, of their report that the other two there are safe and well, of the report from the Philippines, that the six interned missionaries there are also safe and well, of the safe return of our delegates from their search for a new field in S. A. with the good report they brought back, of the two new missionaries to Montana, of the three missionaries who received permission and passage to return to India, of the four who are ready to go there as soon as passage can be secured, of the over 400 souls saved the past year, and of the growing income, which has increased from 116,000.00 in 1942 to 158,000.00 in 1943—of all this we think with profound gratitude toward God.

54. Resolved to accept as our total budget for 1944 103,216.77.

55. Resolvdd to adjourn.

Brother D. J. Unruh led in the closing prayer.

COLOMBIA

One of the finest opportunities for mission work to be found anywhere is in Colombia. This Spanish-speaking country is the fourth largest in South America and has an area about ten times the size of Ohio or Pennsylvania. The population is nearly 9,000,000. The chief city of this republic is Bogota, situated ideally more than 8,000 feet above sea level. It is a city with a population of nearly 4,000,000 and is the commercial center for more than a million people. The climate is cool; average temperature is 57 degrees Fahrenheit.

Not until recently has Colombia received much attention from the Christian Church. Nevertheless, for years it has been white unto harvest—but few have volunteered to bring in the harvest. It is entirely possible that we too would have overlooked this field of opportunity had the Lord not caused us to pause there through the illness of Mr. Voth. Because of the latter's illness, which took place in Bogota, it was not only necessary to remain until he was well, but it was also the causative factor which made us stay until we learned both the real need of Colombia and the great opportunity for us in that land. It was significant that our Colombian "pause" took place in Bogota, for in this fine city we not only received of the best medical attention in Colmbia, but we also were entertained in the home of the man who was probably the best able to help us in our mission survey of Colombia. We believe that it was through the guidance of God that we were directed upon our arrival in Bogota to the home of Dr. and Mrs. Edward G. Seel, executive director of the Presbyterian Mission in Colombia. It was in this home that Mr. Voth was taken care of during his serious siege of typhus. It goes without saying that we owe a debt of gratitude to Dr. and Mrs. Seel. It may also be said that it was largely through conferences with these Christian friends that we heard the "Macedonian Call" of Colombia.

The mission situation as it exists in Colombia today is briefly as follows:

1. Of the 9,000,000 people in Colombia, there are only about 1,500 evangelicals. In other words, there is only about one evangelical to every 7,000 people.

2 Dr. Edward G. Seel, executive director of the Presbyterian mission in Colombia, a missionary of about thirty years' experience in Latin America, believes that if all of the missionaries were withdrawn from Brazil, Argentina, and Chile, that the work would go on; but that if the missionaries were withdrawn from Colombia the work would collapse.

3. During the last twenty years, about twenty new mission societies have entered Colombia with approximately 200 missionaries. Stll Colombia is large, and not nearly all of it has an evangelical witness. The situation is such that:

a. The Chaco is practically untouched
b. Marino is practically untouched
c. Lower Santander has only about two missionary couples working among 5,000,000 people
d. Western Boyaca is largely untouched
e. The territory in south western Colombia along the coast south of Buenaventura is worked very little
f. Cundinamarca, with its capital Bogota, has a population of 1,174,607. The Presbyterians have a school in Bogota and the WEC (World Evangelistic Crusade) has a small number of workers here—but that is about the extent of the work that is being carried on among more than a million people. Here there is vast opportunity and need.

4. There is great need of itinerant evangelism, primary and secondary schools for evangelical children, an evangelical press, of numerous orphanages for unwanted children, child evangelism, clinics for the poor—just to mention a few of these pressing needs.

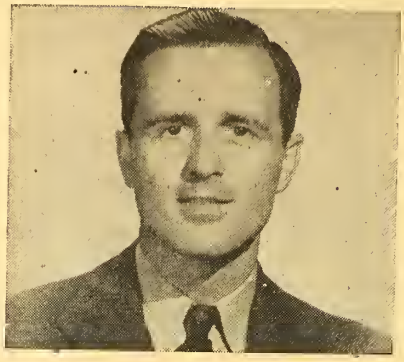
5. The government, although not openly enthusiastic concerning the Protestant missionary work, is liberal and does allow the entrance of evangelical missionaries.

6. The Roman Catholics are offering the Evangelicals organized opposition.

One cannot travel in and through Colombia without being impressed with the needs of hundreds of children who roam the streets—unwanted and uncared for. It is a tragic sight to see little seven and eight year old children, ragged, dirty and hungry having no place to live except the street, and having no place to sleep but the nooks in buildings. Yet even greater is the need that we found in a leper colony in Agua de Dios. Here is a colony of about 7,000 people—about one half of whom are lepers. In this colony live men, women, and children, both lepers and non-lepers. Some of the people are relatively well, other cases are very far advanced and very tragic to behold. Although the needs of this colony are numerous and great, the outstanding need that was presented to us was the need of getting the non-leprous children out of the colony, giving them a home of a Christian nature, and giving them a chance in life. As long as the children remain in the colony they are constantly in danger of contracting the dreaded disease and becoming maimed for life. As long as the children remain—they have no future. There are in the colony a number of evangelical families. These above many, would desire to have their children removed from the colony, for not only are their children in danger of contracting leprosy, but they are also discriminated against in the colony's Catholic schools to the extent that it is not wise to send them to school. Not only is there a present definite need to get these children out of this colony, but besides this colony there are yet two other colonies in Colombia—each of which needs to have the children taken out and cared for. At present there is practically nothing being done for such children—untainted children of leper parents. The Colombian government is anxious to have someone undertake a work with these children. The American Mission to lepers offers to supply the land and the buildings and partial support of the children if some mission agency will undertake to staff the project, to care for the children's education and spiritual welfare. The government has also offered partial support of the children. The Mission Society taking over the project would have the liberty to dictate the policies of the Home for the untalented children, and would also receive from the American Leper Mission the deeds of the land for the Home.



This is Gerald Stucky who together with W. C. Voth made a tour of 25,000 miles through Latin America to investigate opportunities for a new mission field. If the General Conference decides to open a new field in Colombia, South America, then Brother Stucky and his wife will begin the work there.

This project was offered to the Presbyterians about five years ago. It was turned down at the time because of lack of staff and finances. They felt that they could not undertake it at the time. Then it was offered to the W.E.C. mission. The W.E.C. (World Evangelistic Crusade) headquarters in London approved of the project, but since that time the American Mission to the Lepers sent a representative to Colombia to investigate the project and they have concluded that possibly the W.E.C.'s were not the ones to undertake it. The W.E.C. has the personnel, but not the finances—apparently. So, the Society again appealed to the Presbyterians to take over the project which is in immediate need of attention. The Presbyterians in their own recent mission meeting in January have considered the matter at length but because of their present limited staff and limited budget feel that they still are not in a position to undertake this project nor to take advantage of this great opportunity for service. After the Presbyterian mission meeting, Dr. Seel, the Executive Secretary of the mission wrote to us as follows:

"Our main difficulty arises from the fact that we cannot at this time spare personnel to undertake this project. Our Mission as a whole is heartily in favor of this type of work, and several members have expressed themselves as being ready personally to accept an assignment to it. Unfortunately we cannot release them from their present duties. Our Board indicated some months ago that under prevailing conditions, it would not be able further to increase our staff as would be necessary if we were to start the Home for Untainted Children. On the other hand, your expectation is that the Mennonite Board will be able to provide adequate personnel and funds at once, so that the institution probably would be better taken care of under its direction than under ours. Consequently, our Mission voted 'to urge the Mennonite Board to undertake this project, and to assure them of our deepest interest and prayers for this valuable service.' We still hope that in the future the way may open for us to enter upon similar work, either in cooperation with the Mennonite group or in the form of a separate unit."

The opportunities of the project are unlimited. The number of children that need help, both in the Leper colony and on the streets of Bogota are almost unlimited. Already the American Mission to Lepers has purchased property in the suburbs of Bogota—and has also assured us of complete cooperation if we would be willing to undertake the project. The opportunities and advantages of this project may readily be seen in the following considerations:

1. Because of the basic similarity between Catholicism and Evangelical Christianity it is difficult to win converts among adults, but it is relatively easy to win children. This project presents a wonderful opportunity to win and train at least a part of the youth of Colombia for Christ.

2. A home for unwanted and or untainted children gives opportunity for maximum Christian influence with minimum Catholic opposition.

3. Such a home will not only help those in dire need of help physically, but will give us opportunity to shape the personality and character in an evangelical Christian mold.

4. Such a project gives opportunity for a school, a church, a clinic, and a definite vocational guidance program, as well as a spiritual program for winning the children for Christ and for the futherance of the Gospel in general.

5. Dr. Allen, Senior Presbyterian Missionary in Colombia, claims that there are greater returns in Christian workers from this kind of project than from any other kind of work.

6. Helping untainted children ought to give a definite ntrance and opportunity to win leper parents in leper olonies for the Lord.

7. A project of this type offers limitless room for expansion.

8. A project of this type will readily absorb almost any number of both single and married missionary candidates who may apply for missionary service.

9. The financial obligations of such a project will receive help from the Mission to Lepers, possibly from the government, and will have a universal appeal not only to our church, but to all who have the interests of the needy at heart.

10. Such a project will serve as the base for community evangelization, as well as evangelization in the province. The project is planned to take place near Bogota, which is both the capital of nation and state. The state alone has over one million people—of whom not one thousand are evangelicals. The need here is great.

11. Such a project will be blessed with both the welcome and cooperation of existing mission societies as well as the government.

12. Such a program will fit well into the program of the Mennonite church.

Other considerations can be given, but the above should suffice to reveal the great opportunity which has opened for us in Colombia. A program like this will require the minimum of one couple and one single lady (preferably a nurse) immediately. It will require at least one or two other couples within the next two or three years. It is to be admitted that the demands of a mission program like the above are great and possibly strenuous, and the heart aches are seen to be not a few, but the opportunity is golden—and the door stands not only ajar, but OPEN.

Note: Both Brethren Voth and Stucky, have written separate reports of about equal length.

The plan was at first to combine the two reports on Colombia by the Brethren Stucky and Voth, and make one of them. But close comparison showed that the essential information was so much alike, that a combination would not change it sufficiently to spend the time to do this.

As additional proof of the great need of this field, Brother Voth reports that about 65% of the children are illegitimate. The main emphasis of the existing church is on outward conformity. The Bible is a closed book to most of the common people. Therefore, Christ, the Savior of men, is unknown. He has become but a symbol, surrounded with magic and superstition. And while Brother Voth has also noticed in some places opposition by the Catholic church against evangelical work, he underscores the words, "The door is open."

Brother Stucky has been asked to open this work, and so it is natural that we publish here his wording of the report rather than Brother Voth's especially since both reports are in remarkable agreement, which has helped the Board much to come to a decision for this field.

P. H. Richert, Sec.

RECOMMENDATION

(In regard to a Latin American Missionfield)

It is to be seen from the reports of our survey that the Lord has revealed numerous doors of opportunity for service among our neighbors to the south. We believe that each of the listed opportunities is an open door, and that each one is of sufficient merit to warrant our serious consideration. The situations in Mexico and Paraguay are of such a nature and need that we believe that the Board should take some action in behalf of them. However, after much prayer, thought, and analysis, we have concluded and assuredly believe that the place that the Lord has especially opened for us is the work with untainted children of Leper parents in Colombia. We believe this work and this country to be our particular place of opportunity and duty for the following reasons:

1. Through the illness of Mr. Voth the hand of the Lord caused us to stop not only in Colombia, but more particularly in Bogota, until we learned of this genuine opportunity and need.

2. The work with untainted children as outlined, is a pressing need both spiritually and socially. It is a need that we are in an excellent position to fulfill.

3. Such a project would have both a definite immediate value in social amelioration, and it would also serve as the base and basis for a present and future program of spiritual ministry to Colombia.

4. One of the most promising methods of evangelization and mission work is that of work with children. The outlined project would give ample opportunity in this field. This is especially important in Latin America, for here Roman Catholicism has so perverted the Christian Gospel that adults trained in Catholicism are difficult to win.

5. This project permits nearly unlimited expansion, and also has the capacity to absorb almost any number of both single and married missionary candidates who may apply for missionary service.

6. The work in Colombia appears to have more potential influence for the Kingdom of God than any of the other outlined opportunities, particularly because of Colombia's leading position in South American Affairs.

7. We have been invited by both the American Missions to the Lepers, and by special action of the Presbyterian Mission in Colombia. The latter especially, we feel to be a definite answer to prayer.

8. The Colombian Government is liberal and permits the entrance of new missionaries.

9. This project is in line with the kind of mission work which we have done and have found successful in India.

10. This project fits well into the overall program of the Mennonite Church. It combines a definite spiritual ministry with a ministry of social welfare and physical relief.

For these reasons, and especially because we believe that the Lord has especially opened this door for us, we recommend that the General Conference of Mennonites of North America, accept this open door of opportunity to do service for God and His Kingdom in Latin America.

Gerald Stucky

PICTURE OF OUR MISSION WORK IN MONTANA
1943

In 1900 President McKinley established the Tongue River reservation, in southeastern Montana, as a permanent home for the Northern Cheyennes, who had refused to remain in Oklahoma. They had been taken south as prisoners of war after the Custer massacre. . . It is so called, because the Tongue river which begins in Wyoming and empties into the Yellowstone at Miles City, forms the southeastern boundary of the reservation.

First visit with view of mission work also with these Indians by our General Conference was made by Missionary Petter in 1899. Second visit, Missionary Petter made in 1901. Third visit Missionary Petter made in 1903. Busby station was established by Missionary Linscheid in 1904. Lame Deer chapel was dedicated November 26, 1908. Lame Deer house was built in 1913. Birney station was built in 1910. Ashland chapel was dedicated, December 13, 1917

Population of the reservation, Jan. 1, 1940........1606
Population of the reservation, January 1, 1944....1701

Increase in 1943 7

Northern Cheyenne Indians were exempt from military service during World War No. 1. . . A few volunteered and served overseas. Many have been drafted for World War No. 2, and are serving in almost every theatre of conflict. Others are being called continually. . .

The reservation is divided into districts, of which the Lame Deer District is more than twice as large as any other. . . . It is centrally located. Here the Indian Department of Washington, D. C. maintains an Agency with a large corps of government employees who handle all business matters that concern these Indians. Although all Indians were declared citizens on June 2, 1924 by President Coolidge, and have since that time the right to vote in national, state, and county elections, they are still under guardianship by our Federal Government. . . A strong movement is under way to abolish this system and place the Indians under their respective states.

Besides the Agency buildings and a number of business places, Lame Deer has a large public school plant, operated by the state of Montana. It consists of two main buildings, three teacherages, and employs five teachers.

The Busby District is next in size; with a government farmer located there who cooperates with the main office at Lame Deer in handling the business dealings with the Busby and Upper Rosebud Indians. Very prominent in the Busby District is a very large "up-to-date" Boarding School for any Indian Children from the entire reservation who prefer to go there. The government was extremely lavish in the erection of this plant. It is maintained by the Indian Department and is not under the state control.

Birney has a small, well equipped, modern day school plant, with two teachers and a cook who serve noon meals to the pupils. This day school is under the Indian Department at Washington, D. C.

Ashland is a town close to the Indian reservation, and the District receives its name from that. . . Prominent in the Ashland District is the large Catholic School and Mission Plant, which has operated for more than fifty years. Practically all the Indians of that district have received some measure of education at that mission school and have been baptized.

The large government hospital for the entire reservation is located at the Agency in Lame Deer. It is modern and well equipped with a corps of trained nurses, nurse aids, helpers, janitors, and a doctor in charge, who is also a surgeon. . . This hospital is under the Indian Department. Any Indian at any time may enter this hospital for medical or surgical attention, and remain as long as desirable, with no expense whatever to himself for either services, lodging, or board. Some Indians who are employed by the government pay a nominal fee for this most extraordinary benefit, which perhaps no other people in the world enjoy.

Since the Agency is located centrally here at Lame Deer, all the Indians of the entire reservation come here for important business matters. . . The Tribal Council of the tribe, with members chosen in the various districts, also meets regularly here to consider all tribal matters and confer with the government. . . Under the New Deal, this Tribal Council was given considerable authority. . . . The Indian Court which hears and tries all offenders of the law and regulations, also meets here at Lame Deer, presided over by an Indian judge or judges.

Total collections for the year $115.9

Of this amount, $58 was birthday bank money and money from sale of stamps sent out by the American Bible Society. The entire $58.00 was sent t them in New York City, as a small token of appreciation for their great help in the publication of the entire Cheyenne New Testament.

$35.50 remained as a surplus, after all Sunday School supplies, coal, and other expenses had been covered. This will be used for some redecorating of the interior of the chapel.

Funerals during the year 5
Weddings during the year 3

An informal farewell meeting to honor the superintendent of the public schools, who was leaving, was a most enjoyable occasion. Mr. Gregory had been especially fine as teacher of a group of boys and girls in the Sunday School. . . . Gifts totalling $10.00 in value were presented to him by the children and the grown-ups. The Indians again decorated the chapel elaborately with evergreen for the Christmas Eve program, which drew a full house and appreciative audience.

Miss Anna Baerg from Lustre, Montana was again with us during the summer for a Daily Vacation Bible School. An enrollment of 41 in spite of Indian "sun dance" and Fourth of July side attractions was encouraging.

The visit of Rev. D. J. Unruh and family during the summer, and Miss Aganetha Fast over the holidays brought inspiring messages and new blessings.

BIRNEY MISSION STATION

Served from 1926 to June 1, 1942, by Frank Littlewolf, who usually went travelling on his Indian pony during the week-end. Served since June 1, 1942, by Rev. and Mrs. Milton Whiteman, who occupy the mission building, and keep it in perfect order. It is a pleasure to visit there.

Accessions since the work was started 51

Three asked for baptism on Easter, 1943, but circumstances hindered baptism. They were finally baptized on January 21, 1944. Regular Sunday morning services are conducted during the entire year with an encouraging group in attendance. Average attendance has been about 21. The sacred tepee of the Northern Cheyenne Indians is centrally located in this district, closely watched by its keeper and his assistant. This intimidates many from an out-and-out stand for the church. Milton and his wife being Indians, thoroughly familiar with Indian life and thought, are perhaps more able to cope with that situation there than most white missionaries. At least we get interesting weekly reports. . . .

ASHLAND MISSION STATION

Served by Mrs. Valdo (Laura) Petter, since the death of Rev. Valdo Petter on May 6, 1935. She is ably assisted by Miss Marion Gibbs who has had a Bible School training.

This field offers great difficulties.

The small town of Ashland exerts mostly a baneful influence. Immorality and drunkenness are the order of the day. Neither Mrs. Petter nor Miss Gibbs spare time nor effort to win their people for decency and right living. Regular Sunday morning services are attended by a small group. Sunday evening song service draws especially the young people. Efforts to win the underschool-age camp children during the week, with Bible story telling and entertainment are being made. . . . A soldier from the battle front in North Africa or Italy wrote of his terrible experiences, "I have been through hell.' Only now I begin to appreciate fully all your efforts in my behalf. I hope you will still be in Ashland when I return, for I want to prove to you that your labor for me has not been in vain."

Respectfully submitted,
Mrs. Rodolphe Petter

Dear Brother Richert,

It is always hard to give the living membership. God only knows that. Paul said, "I do not remember whom I baptized. I came not to baptize but to preach the gospel. We have ever been reluctant to deal in figures.

LETTER FROM F. J. ISAAC

Durban, S. Africa, Mar. 24, 1944

Dear Brother Richert:—

Greetings from S. Africa! We are grateful to God that all of us are in good health, and that the second lap of our journey has been accomplished without mishap. Now we are eagerly awaiting the opportunity for the last part of the journey. We have thus far had no reason to complain except that it was hard to be patient. On the water Mrs. Isaac was very sick for two days, but after that she was much better.

We have had three remarkable experiences in which God made a way for us. The first was at Washington with our passport. The second was at Buenos Aires where, repeatedly, the Argentine boats were being delayed—no sailing in sight. Suddenly an opportunity came by a way that had been excluded by all who knew shipping there. And it proved to be a comfortable, fast service, and less expensive than the Argentine lines would have been. The third experience was at Capetown when no space on trains to Durban could be promised until the 20th. (We arrived on the 9th.) Nevertheless, we actually got away within 30 hrs.

When we add to the above God's daily blessing of good health and general provision, and when we remember how we were led step by step in all preparations for the journey; how the Board believed it right to send us; and how the churches encouraged us: then we have great confidence to believe that we are in God's will, and that He will see us through.

At the moment our special prayer is that we might arrive in time for Miss Schrag to enter language school on its opening day.

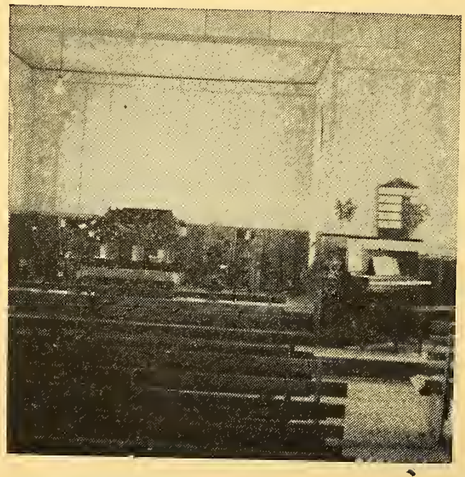
Sincerely yours,
(signed) F. J. Isaac

Much Later: We are about to proceed.

Are You Doing Your Rightful Share For C.P.S.?

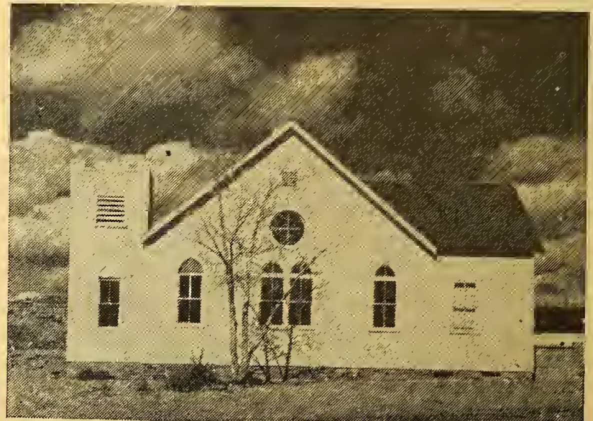
Pictures of the Work at Oraibi, Arizona

This is the place which John Mark and Edith Elsie call home. There are very few trees around the place. The natural growth there are the sage brush and Russian thistle. The Hopis call this place "the Mission." It is almost a mile from the village. In the background you can see part of the village with its 500 inhabitants. About two miles away is a mesa. On it is the old chapel which was built over forty years ago and which was struck by lightning and burned three years ago. About a quarter mile north of the chapel we find the Oldest Continuously Inhabited Village in the United States with approximately 115 inhabitants. —Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Suderman.



The inside of the church is finished with light-colored celotex. Most of the inside work was put on by the Hopi Christians. The benches are home-built, and made of native pine lumber from Flagstaff, Arizona. The missionary made the pulpit. The two-manual organ is a gift from Rev. Nyce's church at Upper Milford, near Allentown, Pa. The piano is the personal property of the Sudermans. The coverings on the pulpit, the Sunday School table, piano, and organ were made from black velvet and odds and ends of curtain fringes sent in by Mrs. P. R. Schroeder. The simple electric light cords and bulbs have been replaced with electric, fluorescent fixtures donated by Mr. Peter Staufer. The Sunday School register was also made by a Hopi Christian. The flowers are geraniums from the mission home. Many a precious hour has been spent here in prayer, in song, and around the Word. —Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Suderman

It was Christmas day. All the Christians and a few non-Christians had attended the morning worship, in which their attention had been called to the greatest gift that ever was given to man. God gave "His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." After the service was over we got most of the group together for a picture. A number of them had already gone home before the picture was taken. Notice the sacks of candy and nuts from your gracious gifts, also a few gifts in the hands of the little tots. —Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Suderman



This is the meeting house of New Oraibi which was enlarged three years ago. Much of the labor was donated by the Hopi Christians and a few non-Christian men. ome of the men said, "We expect to come to this church some time and so we want to help." In the background you will see a few Hopi homes. We love that place, and our prayer has been and is that God's Word may be constantly preached in truth and in the power of the Holy Spirit. In the cornerstone at the northwest corner were placed an English Bible, a Hopi gospel, a list of all the missionaries that have labored on the Hopi Mennonite field, a list of all who have been baptized, and also a written prayer .—Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Suderman.

"Pray till the tears come. Work till the sweat comes. Give till it hurts."

HINGS FOR PRAYER AND PRAISE AT ORAIBI, ARIZONA

"Continue in prayer and watch in the same with anksgiving, withall praying also for us, that God ould open unto us a door of utterance, to speak tde ystery of Christ." Col. 4:2,3.

How often we need to be reminded to continue in rayer! We are so busy. Our young men have had to ave our homes, and much work now demands our me and attention. Our hearts are disturbed and anxous about our young men and the condition of this old n-burdened world. We give ourselves to worry. Even ur prayers are beginning to be focused more on the hysical well-being and protection of our immediate amilies. We are in grave danger of deafening our ears o God's call to behold His field ready unto harvest, nd thus we forget to pray for more laborers. One is eginning to hear the cry of sadness from some of God's ervants when they ask, "Have people at home forgoten to pray for us?" The great apostle Paul repeatedly alls our attention to pray for those who are out preachng, those who are truly out on the battlefronts of our ord's Kingdom work.

As we remember the Lord's work in Hopiland we reaize as never before that Satan is doing his utmost to inder the work among the Hopis. New-born babes in hrist are persecuted by members of the immediate amilies in making life miserable and trying at home. Missionaries are tested and tempted to discouragement. Seeds of jealousy and unforgiving attitudes are dropped mong Christian groups. And thus the church becomes rippled and loses its clear, ringing testimony.

May God abundantly bless and reward you for your nterest, your prayers, and support in the mission work.

As we are thinking about that new chapel in Oraibi, we think of the testimony it is to the Hopis. The Word of God goes forth a few times each week; there the Hopis gather to worship and to pray, and to learn of God's will. Though some of the details have not all been finished in the chapel, little by little it is nearing completion. This continues as time and strength and funds allow. It might be of interest to the readers that the Mr. Peter Stauffer, who as a government employee on the Hopi reservation fifty years ago invited the General Conference Mennonites to establish mission work among the Hopis, is still living. This last year he donated a good sum of money for a memorial to the church at Oraibi. This has been used for lights in the church. The new church is lighted by electricity. We have also installed fluorescent lights, which according to the authorities are cheaper to operate and give better light.

Mrs. Frieda Regier Entz presented a beautiful silk Christian flag and a United States flag. Efforts are being made to secure an appropriate sacred picture for the wall behind the pulpit. The Rev. C. J. Frey family presented an anniversary wall motto with the words, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and forever."

One other much appreciated part of the Jubilee celebration was the daily noon meal of the second week. This was made possible by a gift from a mission society in Montana. The Hopis too brought very generously from their own food. They brought Hominy, watermelons, grapes, and bread. I remember how a twelve year-old boy, who had his own watermelon patch, saved his choicest melon for the occasion, and it was a delicious one. Pray that this Hopi boy may be saved.

We are praising the Lord Jesus Christ during this year of furlough that He is so graciously blessing us in the midst of a praying and evangelistically-minded church. We are also very grateful to Him in leading the Mr. and Mrs. Waldo E. Harder to Oraibi to continue the ministry of the Word there. Let us all pray unceasingly and fervently for these two faithful and true ambassadors of our crucified Lord a they labor in Hopiland and also as they wait for their journey to Africa.

Our children, John Mark and Edith Elsie are deeply enjoying a full year of good things. When they talk about "when we get home" (meaning to Oraibi) they wish that all their new friends in Kansas and Indiana would move into visiting distances of Oraibi, Arizona.

yours in Him,

John P. and Mabel Suderman, Berne, Indiana

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Arnold Nickel, Mountain Lake, Minnesota

MAY 24—"He shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you forever." John 14:16b. Read John 14:16-31.

The weary and heavy laden cherish comfort above all else. The disciples were sorrowful when Jesus told them of His departure, but their sorrow turned to joy and praise at Pentecost.

Christianity is the only religion that gives its followers the promise of the indwelling Spirit. He is the believer's comfort in moments of distress, his Help in weakness, and his Rest when he is weary. Without the Spirit's aid and comfort Christian people would be helpless and hopeless in this world. Let us follow the conduct of the Spirit, and we shall have the comfort of the Spirit.

MAY 25—"After that ye believed, ye were sealed with Holy Spirit of Promise." Eph. 1:13b. Read Eph. 1: 1-23.

By the Spirit believers are sealed, that is, separated and set apart for God, and marked as belonging to Him. The seal placed on a Christian signifies his identification with Christ, his genuineness before God, the unchangeableness of its time meaning, and a finished transaction. The seal of the Holy Spirit leaves an impression whereby the Christian becomes an epistle nown and read by all men. Christ was sealed because of what He was in Himself; we are sealed by the Spirit of promise because of what we are in Christ.

MAY 26—"He that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Gal. 6:8b. Read Gal 5: 16-26.

Every Christian may sow to two sources. He may either sow to the flesh and reap corruption, or to the Spirit and reap life everlasting. Those who live a carnal life, who spend all their thoughts, care, and time, about the flesh must expect the fruit of corruption. But those who are under the influence and guidance of the Spirit do live a useful, serviceable, holy, and spiritual life which assures them of comfort in this present life and spiritual life, and a happy eternal life. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." (Gal. 5:7).

May 27—"He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." John 16:8. Read John 16:1-11.

The Spirit is not the Comforter of the unregenerate, but He is their convicter. By the Spirit through the Christian will come conviction upon the world. The world will never be convicted by a worldly church. Believers everywhere are commanded to preach the Word that reveals the past judgment on sin, that shows the present righteousness of Christ, and that declares he future punishment on Satan and his followers. The Holy Spirit is willing to become the world's Comforter, instead of being its Convicter. Have we as Christians preached such a Spirit-filled Word of conviction to lost world?

MAY 28—"For through him we both have access t one Spirit unto the Father." Eph. 2:18. Read Eph. 1-22.

By the virtue of the Holy Spirit's mediation we hav access or admission into the presence of God. Th Spirit has opened the throne of grace for our petition and He has given us strength and liberty to com boldly to that throne. Without access by the Spirit th prayers of men would be vain repetitions that neve reach heaven, and neither would there by any answer to prayer. We draw nigh to God through Christ b the help of the Holy Spirit. Prayer is the source c Christian power. Are we praying as much and as intelligently as we should?

MAY 29—"Thou gavest also thy good Spirit to instruct them." Neh. 9:20a. Read Eph. 3:1-21.

The Spirit makes known unto us the things of God He is the Master of all education, and the teacher o all truth. The wisdom and instruction of this worl are mixed with or influenced by error, but the wisdom of God and the instruction of the Holy Spirit are the whole truth and nothing but the truth. To be led int truth is more than just to know it; it means to be intimately and experimentally acquainted with truth The Spirit's instruction is not only head-knowledge but it is God's truth in the heart of every believer.

MAY 30—"Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God." Acts 10:4b. Read Acts 10: 1-8.

Today is Memorial Day. In time of war Memorial Day is every day because in some foreign land, or on sea a loved one is missing in action. The death of such a dear one is not a pleasant memory; rather it is heart-rending to the ones at home.

God, too, has memorials for His loved ones. But these memorials are different from ours. He has forgiven and forgotten all our transgressions, and remembers only the good things that we have done to others and to Him. Will our prayers, our alms, and other deeds become a memorial to God or are they iniquities that need to be forgotten?

MAY 31—"Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come." Rev. 4:8b. Read Ps. 99: 1-9.

It is well to ask ourselves whether we believe in this Triune of God with all our heart, and soul, and strength. Might not many churches be designated to the Unknown God? Do not many even worship the Anti- Trinity composed of the World, the Flesh, and the Devil? Unhappy is the person, though he have rank and wealth, who knows not and loves not the living God; but happy is he, though despised and poor, who can say from the innermost of his heart, "This God is our God for ever and ever."

"He Careth for You"

By Marguerite Sprunger

As I sit at my desk I hear the lilting song of the rds and see the pale azure blue of the sky with a de expance of green below. All about is peace and iet with an occasional sound of a voice or hurrying otsteps. In the voices heard, as in the bird's song, ere is a lilting sound which denotes joy and freedom om care.

Why should we not be happy when we have a hea- nly Father who loves us and cares for us? The tle bird starts the day with a song and again he ngs as the evening shadows fall. The child of God s been given the privilege of living a life of trust d faith. In every vicissitude of life he may turn to s heavenly Father and by faith claim the promise of is love and care. To realize the perfect peace and y which God gives, faith must be exercised.

It took a lot of faith for Peter to step boldly out om the ship into the water when Jesus bade him, Come." He loved his Master; he wanted to go to m, and while his eyes were fixed on Jesus, his faith as strong. Courage was Peter's master grace and ade him more forward to express his love to the aster. He was usually the first one to speak, al- ough the other disciples perhaps loved Him as well.

Peter did not step out on the water without a call om Christ. He desired to do Christ's will and waited r permission from Him. We should not enter into zardous enterprises without a call from God. The rd does not call on us to expose ourselves to unneces- ry danger, but when He calls His grace is sufficient meet every need. He nows the end from the begin- ng and sees the way we take. Shall we not rest in im and trust Him to lead us aright?

Peter took his eyes off Jesus and looked at the isterous waves. His faith wavered; he began to nk. Isa. 26:3: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace nose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in hee." Peter's faith was imperfect. At the sight of e boisterous waves about him, he began to tremble d doubt and down he went. How true this is of our vn Christian experience! The Lord calls us to do me work for Him. The task may not be easy; it ay mean going through severe hardships and dangers. When the call comes, we are looking "full in His wonderful face" and our courage is at a high peak. We gladly answer, "Yes, Lord." But with the first step we meet the adversary or obstacles loom in the way, and we become afraid. We take our eyes off Jesus and, even as Peter, down we go.

With Peter's first cry, "Lord, save me," we see Christ's outstretched hand, ready to help. Though Peter's faith wavered at the realization of danger, his belief in Christ's power to save was not lost. Jesus' ear is never deaf to the cry of faith.

When Abraham looked away from himself and trusted God alone, then he became fully persuaded that what He had promised, He was able to perform. That is what God is daily teaching us; He has to keep away encouraging results until we learn to trust without them, and then He loves to make His Word real in fact as well as in faith.

As we walk with the Lord, moment by moment, He watches over us. He supplies every need and proves His grace sufficient. Who can fill the soul's deepest longing? Jesus only. Who can comfort in heartbreaking sorrow? Jesus only. Who will fill the need of the lonely heart? Jesus only. In whom do we have a never-failing friend? In Jesus only.

We walk by faith and not by sight. If we could see the path ahead, our hearts would fail us for fear. We know our heavenly Father is an all-wise God and His way is the best.

> "He knows, He loves, He cares,
> Nothing this truth can dim;
> God always has the best for those,
> Who leave the choice with him."

Miss Marguerite Sprunger is under appointment to go missionary to the field that our conference may open Codombia, South America. She is a member of the rst Mennonite Church,Berne, Ind., and daughter of r. and Mrs. Albert Sprunger. At present she is attend- g Bethel College.

SUMMER-SERVICE UNITS FOR WOMEN

As previously announced in these notes, plans are under way to form two service units in mental hospitals for Mennonite women who have expressed a desire to engage in Christian service throughout the summer months. At the time of this writing, sufficient interest has been indicated for the setting up of units at Ypsilanti, Michigan, and Howard, Rhode Island. Members of the units will receive a moderate income together with the opportunity for service and the permission to attend classes in relief training. Summer service units are not to be confused with the full-time, relief-training units for women in which preparation is being made for definite relief service. Service in a summer unit involves no definite commitment to do relief work.

For the direction of these units, relief workers, who have had the experience of service abroad, have been secured. Lois Gunden will serve as matron of the unit at Ypsilanti and Edna Ramseyer of the unit at Howard.

YOUTH JOTTINGS

—Young people of the Oklahoma Bible Academy have beautified their campus by planting an assortment of trees. The trees were secured by asking certain people to buy a tree of their choice. Thus some furnished the money, and the young people planted them. Some of the students recently gave the drama entitled "The Challenge of the Cross."

—The Bethel College "Graymaroon" is out. It is smaller in size than former ones, but seems to have more pages. It has a very attractive appearance and contains many features which are unique to this issue.

—The young people of the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchner, Ontario, will have two retreats this summer. The Juniors (ages 8-12) will have theirs from June 27 to June 30. The Intermediate and Senior group (age 13 and up) will have theirs from June 30 to July 3. Rev. Andrew Shelly and Mrs. Wilfred Cressman will be the leaders for the first retreat, while the second retreat group will enjoy courses on "Growing In My Prayer Life" and "Mennonite Beliefs and Practice" by Rev. Olin Krehbiel from Lansdale, Pa., and "Serving Christ Through Our Church" and Background of the New Testament" by Rev. Andrew Shelly. Brother Shelly, pastor of the church at Kitchener, comes from the Hereford Mennonite Church, Bally, Pa.

Miss Miller

—Teacher and pupils contribute money for a Civilian Government Bond: Miss Violet Miller, teacher of the Mennonite Bible Academy, Beatrice, Nebraska, and the pupils of that school have contributed $19.50 for the purchase of a bond that is to be the property of the school. Miss Miller is a wide-awake and efficient teacher. She graduated from Bethel College last year. She is an excellent pianist. This year, besides being busy in the school and the First Mennoite Church, she also directed the choir of the Second Mennonite Church, Beatrice. Miss Miller's home is Freeman, South Dakota. She comes from the farm and knows how to milk cows. She is engaged to Orlando Goering of Moundridge, Kansas. Orlando took ministerial courses while at Bethel College. Now he is busy farming and taking part in church work. He belongs to the Eden Church.

—"The young people of the Portland (Oregon) church, who meet every Sunday evening, have set aside the last Sunday of every second month for a 6:00 p.m. pot-luck supper and business meeting." —The Workers' Exchange

—"An Hour of Music, sponsored by the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Orchestra of the Reedley Church, was presented Sunday evening, April 16. The program of sacred music included eight numbers by the orchestra, several by the male quartet, and vocal and violin solos. There are sixteen members in the orchestra." —The Workers' Exchange —On every other Sunday evening the young people of the Second Mennonite Church, Paso Robles, California, meet for an hour of Bible study. Members of the group take turns in leading the discussion.

—"The project of the young people of Shafter (California) this year is the providing of an outdoor bulletin board for the church. As it is impossible to purchase a complete one, the C.E. decided to buy the board and the letters, and to build the frame." The Workers' Exchange

—Maybe you have wondered sometimes how ministe and missionaries are led into their work. In a comin issue we plan to run an article by one of our missionarie that gives an inspiring sidelight on his call. It ma help you to make a decision that perlexes you. Watc for the article.

—Be sure and read the article by Miss Marguerit Sprunger in this issue. Miss Sprunger is at preser studying at Bethel College. She is under appointmer by the Foreign Mission Board to go to the new field t be opened in South America by Rev. and Mrs. Geral Stucky. Miss Sprunger comes from Berne, Indian She is one of the students who helps to set up the typ of this paper.

—The Inman (Kansas) Mennonite Church sends a mim eographed paper to those away from home. It carrie interesting summaries of the sermons brought over period of time. It also contains a pastoral letter an general news.

—Miss Salome Fast, R.N., a member of the Bethel Menn onite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, left for Puert Rico recently. By now she is undoubtedly busy servin as nurse in the hospital that the M.C.C. relief unit i running. "The hospital was originally started by th U.S. government, and the buildings and some of th equipment will be used by the M.C.C. unit." During th past months Miss Fast has worked in the mental hos pital at Ypsilanti, Michigan. She is a graduate of th Bethel Deaconess Hospital, Newton, Kansas. Miss Ern J. Fast, who edits the Mennonite Junior Quarterly, is sister to Salome. Salome's father, D. H. Fast, was teacher in the Mountain Lake Bible school for man years.

Miss Marie Fast, a sister to Dr. H. A. Fast and Mis Aganetha Fast, and Miss Bertha Fast, a niece, are plann ing to sail soon for Egypt to do relief work there. Bot are from Mountain Lake, Minnesota. They have spen some time at Akron. Part in preparation for their worl They will be part of a fairly large unit that will soo sail to do relief work.

—Dr. R. C. Kauffman, who has been teaching at Bethe College has also left for Akron to prepare himself fo the relief work that he plans to do in Egypt. Brothe Kauffman will very likely sail in the unit mentione above. (We hope to hear from all of these worker from time to time.)

—Ernst Harder, from Fernheim, Paraguay, is to addres a joint Christian Endeavor meeting of the First Menn onite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, on May 21.

JOTTINGS

—Rev. and Mrs. Ronald von Riesen now live near Walton, Kansas. Formerly they lived in an apartment on the Bethel College campus. Their new address is Route 1, Walton.

—Rev. I. J. Dick, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, wrote on May 4, "We have winter weather for a change. Had frost this morning, and it is close to freezing, even now in the afternoon. We may look for a heavy frost tonight. Very little grain has been sown. Spring is very late and wet."

—The Peace Committee of the Western District is to meet and discuss some important matters on May 16 according to a letter by Walter H. Dyck, Secretary.

—Bulletin, Burrton Mennonite Church, Burrton, Kansas "A Word to Home Canners: When you do your canning this summer do not forget our boys in C.P.S. camps. The following foods are greatly needed: peaches, peas, corn, beets, chowchow, sauerkraut, mixed vegetables, asparagus, and catsup."

—Students from the Mennonite Bible Academy, North Newton, Kansas, gave a program on the theme of "Christian Service" on May 7. A free-will offering was held for the school.

—Dr Elmer E. S. Johnson, pastor of the Hereford Mennonite Church, Bally, Pa., and professor of church history for many years, delivered the commencement address at Bluffton College on May 15, speaking on "Redeeming Our Heritage." (We are sorry that the program of the commencement week did not arrive in time for the issue of May 9.)

—The Mennonite Song Festival will be held at Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas, May 21, 1944. The afternoon meeting will begin at 2:30 p.m. and the evening meeting will begin at 8 p.m.

—Eden Mennonite Church, Inola, Oklahoma: In April Rev. H. P. Fast from Orienta served our church with evening meetings. He dealt with the Twenty-third Psalm. Pointing out that Jesus Christ is the head of the church, he asked, what happens to the body when the head is taken away? Two "Go-Ye Mission" workers gave a report on their winter work and stated that 400 Bibles and 700 Testaments had been given as rewards to children.

—Rev. Donovan Smucker, Wadsworth, Ohio, in preaching on the Bible during the first half of May, spoke on such subjects as, "The Infallibility of the Bible," "The Unity of the Bible," and "The Authority and Use of the Bible." Brother Smucker recently delivered some lectures to the student body of Bluffton College. Dr. M. C. Lehman is to visit the Wadsworth Church on May 28 and is to speak on "Relief Work in the Post-War World." Once a month the ladies of this church spend all day sewing. The Chapel of the Air broadcast, sponsored by this church, now runs thirty minutes instead of the former fifteen. The sermons given have here-to-fore been available in print. However, due to printing difficulties there will have to be a slight curtailment in this matter.

—"Sunday to some people is a WEAKday."

—The First Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, has in a few years raised $2,100.00 for a building fund and hopes to increase that amount substantially during this time.

—Oklahoma Bible Academy closes with mission conference: This school has arranged a mission conference from May 16 to May 18. The speakers are: Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Friesen, Miss Louise Heinrichs, Rev. H. J. Brown, Rev. R. F. Jantzen, and Rev. S. Mouttet. The alumni banquet will be held May 18, at 7 p.m. The corporation meeting and the annual dinner will be held on May 19. Brother Paul Kuhlmann will give the commencement address at 8:30 p.m. that same day.

A number of announcements and programs have come in too late for the best results in informing people. We are sorry that this is the case. Early submission of programs, etc., will help us to give the service that you like to have.

—Rev. Sylvan Lehman, who has served the Calvary Mennonite Church, Mechanics Grove, Pa., has resigned his position there to accept the pastorate of the First Mennonite Church, Lima, Ohio. The latter church is a mission work of the Middle District, while the Calvary Mennonite Church is under the Home Mission Committee of the General Conference. Brother Lehman also served as president of the Eastern District Conference during the past year. His home church is the First Mennonite Church, Berne, Indiana.

—The two Mennonite Churches at Beatrice, Nebraska, recently observed Deaconess Sunday with "appropriate emphasis, recognition, and intercession at both morning and evening services." At a joint meeting in the evening the Sisters, from the Mennonite hospital in Beatrice, gave testimonies about their experiences.

—Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, Pa. This church lists a complete Sunday School service in its church bulletin. Henry Buhler, of the M.C.C., recently spoke to the church.

—A bill has been introduced in the House by Congressman Celler which would authorize the naturalization and the admission into the United States under a quota, of Eastern Hemisphere Indians of India and descendants of Eastern Hemisphere Indians of India. This bill, if enacted into the law, would do for (East) Indians what the repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Law did for the Chinese, namely, the removal of the principle of racial discrimination in our naturalization and immigration laws. Under existing immigration quotas approximately 75 Indians would be admitted and eligible for citizenship within a twelve months period. The number now in this country, who will be eligible for citizenship under the law, is approximately 3,000.

—Bergfelder Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota; Members of the men's chorus went to the C.P.S. camp at Denison, Iowa, on April 23. They participated in the morning and evening services of the camp. The pastor, Rev. August Ewert, accompanied the group and gave the message at both services. Members of the mission societies sent along food such as eggs, and "sweibach" for the men in camp. The choirs of our church gave a musical program in the Butterfield Mennonite Church where Rev. Ben. J. Nickel is pastor, on the evening of April 30.—Mrs. Alvin D. Eitzen, Corr.

—The seating capacity of the Mauhadih Church in India is 400 and not 200 as recently stated.

—Rev. and Mrs. J. J. Balzer, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, recently observed tdeir sixtieth wedding anniversary. Brother Balzer is now eighty-three years old. The following account, taken from the Mountain Lake Observer, will undoubtedly be of interest to those who know this aged minister of our conference:

"Reverend Balzer's first years in this country were spent in teaching school in various homes and it was in 1882 that he left to attend college at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. In 1883 the crops were so poor that it was impossible for him to continue with his education so he taught public school in Mountain Lake. Sunday afternoons he started classes for children in the homes teaching them Bible stories.

In 1894 the Balzers were married and in October he opened a German School of forty students. He remained i nthat work until 1913 when he resigned and spent the following years traveling and preaching. From 1927 until 1933 he was elder of Bethel church. In all, he spent forty-seven years doing church work."

—The membership of the Eicher Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Noble, Iowa, is: 219 active members and 27 inactive members. The average Sunday School attendance the past year was 145. The average weekly offering was $7.61.

—Some impressions that Rev. J. E. Kaufman, pastor of the Inman, (Kansas), Mennonite Church, received on a trip east are listed below:

That the M.C.C. is doing a tremendous work in various fields and that the present day problems are bringing Mennonite groups closer together.

That the boys are doing a great work in the sospital units, and that their experiences will be most valuable to the future Mennonite Church.

That a personal visit to similar institutions of our boys reaching draft age would convince many of the Mennonite faith and position.

I was profoundly impressed in what can be done with and for our mentally sick, and I believe there is a great field for the Mennonite Church.

—Brother Ben Rahn, ministerial student at Bethel College, served the Grace Mennonite Church, Enid, Oklahoma, on May 14. On May 15 he began a week of evanelistic services for the Friedensfeld Mennonite Church, Tampa, Kansas. Rev. Walter Regier is pastor of the latter church.

EASTERN DISTRICT CONFERENCE NOTES

The 146th session of Conference was held in the Deep Run Mennonite Church, Bedminister, Thursday afternoon, May 4, to Sunday afternoon, May 7. The conference was opened with the first of a series of Bible lectures by the Conference Speaker, the Rev. Reynold Weinbrenner, editor of The Mennonite. After the reports of conference officers were read, the following were elected to serve for tde conference year 1944-45; Pres., Rev. Russell L. Mast, pastor of the host church; Vice President, Rev. Howard G. Nyce, pastor of the Allentown—Upper Milford Charge; Secretary, Rev. Olin A. Krehbiel, pastor of the Lansdale Church, and Treasurer, Mr. Alvin H. Alderfer, member of the Schwenksville Church. The Treasurer's report revealed that the conference budget went over the top by over $200. About half of the churches either met their quota or went over the top. Thursday evening the Vice-President, the Rev. Russell L. Mast was in charge of the Memorial Service. He read the names of the following who have died during the year, Horace B. Kratz, Deacon of the Schwenksville Church for over twenty-five years; Rev. Linford Foulke, former pastor of the Saucon Mennonite Church; C. H. Musselman, member of the Fairfield Mennonite Church, who with Mrs. Musselman have contributed much to Bluffton College, besides giving the money for the Musselman Library on the college campus; Della Kratz Alderfer, wife of our conference treasurer; Miss Laura Nolf, member of the Saucon Church and for many years interested in the Lehigh Valley Christian Endeavor work and faithful worker among young people, and John H. Landis of the Flatland Church. The retiring conference president, the Rev. Sylvan S. Lehman, pastor of the Mechanics Grove Mennonite Church, then delivered the conference sermon on the theme "Spiritual Impratives." Friday morning after the reports of the Mennonite Home were read, a motion carried unanimously authorizing the Board of Managers of the Home to plan to have an elevator installed.

Friday evening's program was the Women's Missionary Program. The devotions were in charge of Mrs. J. E. Hartzler. Mrs. Russel L. Mast, president of the organization was in charge of the meeting. Speakers for tde service were, Dr. William Mudge, Secretary of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches, Miss Elsie Pfister, member of the Lansdale Church who is doing Home Mission work in the Kentucky mountains, and Miss Wilhelmina Kuyf, missionary on furlough from China. The business session of the women's organization was held on Saturday afternoon. On Saturday evening the Brotherhood meeting was held and Mr. Ely Fretz, president of the Conference Brotherhood was in charge. A aumber of workers of the Mennonite Central Committee at the Akron office were present and introduced to the conference. Rev. Weinbrenner delivered the message on the theme "Ye Shall Be My Witnesses." Sunday School lesson was taught by the Rev. Paul R. Shelly and the communion service in charge of the host pastor followed the Sunday School session, with Dr. J. E. Hartzler delivering the message. Ministers of the Conference assisted in distributing the communion. The session came to a close with a young people's meeting on Sunday afternoon. Rev. Andrew R. Shelly delivered the message. The 147th session will be held in the Upper Milford Church next year.

Fairfield—The Pastor, the Rev. George S. Stoneback, is encouraging members to suggest sermon topics. In a recent bulletin the opportunity was given to fill out part of the bulletin prepared especially for that purpose.

East Swamp—The Rev. D. J. Unruh delivered the sermon on Sunday morning May 7. He is also scheduled for a young people's Bible Conference, May 30 to June 4. The dedicatory service for the new addition and home coming service will be held Sunday afternoon, June 4. The young people's convention will be held in the church on May 30, Memorial Day.

Lansdale—Rev. D. J. Unruh preached in the church Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings, May 7 to 10. Miss Margaret Slotter, missionary to Kentucky delivered the message Sunday evening, May 14. Miss Elsie Pfister delivered a message on Sunday evening, April 23. Sunday morning, April 23, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Buller of the M.C.C. from Akron, spoke in Sunday School and Church.

Allentown—The church is cooperating in the Christ for Allentown Canpaign. The pastor is a member of the Steering Committee. Rev. John (Jack) Mitchell of Portland, Oregon, is the evangelist. Meetings are held in the Allentown High School every evening except Saturday, also Sunday afternoon at 2:30 and Sunday evening's at 9:00 o'clock so as not to conflict with regular church services. Sunday afternoon, May 7, Mr. R. G. LeTourneau of Peoria, Illinois, was the guest speaker. It is estimated tdat about 2,300 people heard him in the high school and various meetings in the city during the day.

Sam Goering Safe in U. S.

Mrs. Sam Goering and son Robert, North Newton, Kansas, received a telephone call from Mr. Sam Goering at about 10:45 p.m., May 11. Mr. Goering was already in the United States but was not permitted to state where he was. He expected to arrive in Newton at 1 p.m., May 14. If all plans work out then Brother Goering should have been at home a few days by the time you read this item.

The Message of Pentecost

By Arnold C. Schultz

Acts 1:8 contains our Lord's promise to His followers in regard to their future: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." This promise was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. The word that would describe the results of this experience in the lives of the disciples is the word power. Everything these early Christians did was characterized by power. They had none of the things that we suppose should go with success. They lacked money, prestige, organization, education, and numbers. On the other hand we have all these things. But we do not have power. Why did the Spirit use these men?

These disciples were different in mental abilities, education, and in personality. But there were certain things in which they were all one. We believe the secret of the power of the early church lies in these things in which they agreed.

I. They were one in their convictions about the Bible. The early Christians looked upon the Bible as authoritative and final in matters of faith and doctrine because it is the Word of God. As Peter said, "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." The Scriptures were to be believed and obeyed implicitly. God's Word was not to be questioned and trimmed to suit their tastes. It was the measuring rod by which they squared their lives. This faith in the Scriptures as the Word of God on the part of the early disciples was openly declared and frankly stated. They have been called narrow, but the outstanding characteristic of the ministry of the early church was power.

The church of today has traveled a long way from these early convictions. Men no longer respect the Bible for what it is. So the sword of the Spirit has lost its cutting edge and men have made it ineffectual. There is an undeniable relation between faithfulness to the Word and spiritual power—the relation of cause and effect. Perhaps the modern powerlessness of the church can be explained here. However that may be, the first Christians had deep convictions about the finality and inspiration of Holy Writ and they were pre-eminently men of power.

II. They were one in their convictions about Christ. At first Christ was to the early Christians a prophet, then the Messiah of prophecy, then He was seen as the Son of God. Finally, they believed Jesus Christ to be very God and they worshiped Him as such. With the passing of the years this conviction deepened. They never believed that Christ was less than God. This conception is seen in their literature and in everything they did. He is the Creator and Sustainer of all things, the Redeemer, and Judge of all men. Compromising about Christ was not even thought of. Anyone who denied His Deity was considered an enemy and to be shunned.

Their convictions about the death of Christ could be summed up in the words of Isaiah, "he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him and by his stripes we are healed." Christ died to save men from their sins, not as a martyr to a high ideal. Their message was, "that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins."

They were men of power. By the preaching of this Christ about whom they had deep abiding convictions they turned the world upside down.

III. They were one in their preparation for their work. The apostles were about three years with Jesus Christ. They learned of Him. They watched His mighty works and listened to Him preach to the multitudes. They saw His compassion for the needy. They beheld Him dying on the cross as the atonement for the sins of the world. But they did more than observe. They drank in the spirit of the Master. He expounded the Scriptures for them. He enlightened their understanding, and He opened their hearts. They grew in knowledge and experience under the training of Christ.

It is important to notice that this training was the avenue along which the power came. When you have power you also have antecedent causes.

How about today? We may have all the education the schools can offer. But have we learned to trust and obey in the school of Christ? Multitudes of men of merely simple and guileless faith who accept the Bible from "cover to cover" know much more of God's will than the greatest scholars of the land. The cold intellect of the scholar gives him no advantage over the untutored disciple in the matter of an experimental knowledge of God. We should acquire all the training this world offers, but we cannot neglect the school of Christ.

IV. They were one in purpose. These men had only one purpose. It was to carry the gospel of the saving Son of God out as fast as they could. They refused to engage in other duties that they might devote themselves wholly to getting people saved. Everything was subordinated to this purpose. You say they lacked social vision? The gospel they preached so devotedly brought social revolutions. We are proud today of our various interests while we neglect that which we have been commanded to do.

We shall find no substitute for this power. Like the disciples of old we cannot begin our work until endued. But we must fulfill the conditions.

A Bottleneck in the Christian Church

The bottle that gurgled and sputtered and took in the water but slowly as we held it in the horsetank is a childhood memory that is suggestive. In this war there has been much talk of bottlenecks. We have been vividly impressed with the fact how a restriction in one area often tends to hinder the fast and extensive movement of another agency. Our government has insisted upon the breaking of bottlenecks. The war must not be hindered by them. There must be a swift and vast flow of goods and services all along the line.

Perhaps, there is a bottleneck in the Christian Church. Certainly there is in the Christian Church a great emptiness into which there should be an unhindered flow of the Holy Spirit and its power. The Church of today lacks in the Spirit of God. It has too much of the spirit of this world. The Church of today lacks in the power of God that would transform men and their relationships. It has bowed far too much to the powers of this world. The Christian Church needs a mighty infilling of the Holy Spirit and its power. But there seems to be a bottleneck that is hindering that inflow.

Isn't that bottleneck the refusal of Christians to yield themselves to the will of God as they ought to? Undoubtedly, God is just as willing and anxious today to bestow the Holy Spirit and its power as He was on the Day of Pentecost. It isn't God that is responsible for the slow and ineffective carrying out of His will. He is ever pouring out His Spirit as in a mighty Niagara Falls. But how can that mighty rushing of His Spirit fill a Christian life as it ought to when it has to enter through a bottleneck of incomplete surrender. And perhaps far too often the bottle of life is even tightly corked.

If the Christian Church of today is to have a great Pentecostal experience, then it must break the bottleneck of incomplete surrender. It must shatter the area of restriction and permit the Holy Ghost to rush in. It must permit God to have His way. It must pray in word and in deed, "Thy will be done and not mine." It must come to a realization that the resources of God are ever available and that it is our sinfulness that blocks the utilization of them. It must realize that God does not have to be persuaded to let His kingdom come and His will to be done, but that it is we that have to persuaded to let His kingdom come and His will to be done.

A recent cartoon in one of Chicago's great daili showed the multitudes of America bowed in prayer invasion day. Above the praying masses were the words: "Our Father who art in heaven, Hallowed thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done. . . Will His kingdom come by man insisting upon his ow way, or will it come by men surrendering to the will God? There is a bottleneck in the Christian Churc that is hard to break, but broken it must be if the Hol Spirit is to fill and transform.—rw.

Appreciating Cows

By Orlando A. Waltner

It was rather early in the morning when the young iother slowly approached the leper home office. She ad no personal belongings of any kind, for she was arrying two babies in her arms. I asked her what he wanted. I needn't have asked, for I knew perectly well what she needed, but my question gave er the opportunity to tell her story.

"I haven't any food for myself and I am unable nurse my babies. Please help me or my babies ill die". Just two sentences of need! Two sentences that were packed full of truth! I knew what should do but I wanted more details.

"Are both of these babies your very own?", I asked s I pointed to the youngsters in her arms.

"Yes, they are my daughters born just nine months go." The mother tenderly supported the little heads, r they were too weak to hold them up by themelves. The twins whimpered and she drew them loser to herself. They were hungry and restless. I new their little bodies had taken a lot of punishient. I wondered what a baby thought of when it as hungry all the time. And then, I looked up nd saw our cows which were grazing nearby. The iother didn't have milk for the twins, but our cows ould provide it. I was glad for our friends in America ho had helped us to meet a situation like this.

A little later the mother was lying on a hospital ed with her babies next to her. The period of nxious concern for her babies was over, but being elaxed she seemed even more tired now. Milk and ood food for the mother meant milk for the babies. o the mother got both. Very soon the twins themelves were drinking cow's milk out of the cup. Their hin, feverish bodies responded marvelously. Ribs ere tucked away under flesh, teeth appeared, cheeks ot fuller, legs grew sturdy, and smiles were brighter.

Today the twins are a year old and live in the Iealthy Girls' Boarding. Some day I'll tell them of he friends in America who helped us get cows for abies just like they were. Yes, they will be grateful you. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of he least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto ie." Matthew. 25:40

A Ministry-At-Large--What of the Future?

By J. H. Langenwalter

An uncertain future awaits all of us. None can hope to escape what it will bring. We must not continue to be or to become confused. There are certainties as will as uncertainties. The sun, stars, earth, and moon continue to run their courses as of old, despite the fact that man has created a lot of destructive disturbance. There is every reason to believe that the orderly arrangements for human nature are just as stable and as usable as are those for nature.

In the Pacific District Conference there are only sixteen churches in four states. That leaves us too far apart to do our best work. We do not learn to know each other as well as we should.

There is also great diversity in backgrounds, customs, opinions, understanding, interests, attitudes, and motives. This adds to the difficulty of doing our best in a critical situation. There is need that we get together wherever possible. There are three outstanding reasons for that. We need to get together in order that we may maintain ourselves as a part of the Kingdom of God, that we may perform our mission, and that we may be helpful to the world in its present crisis.

We can get together. Wherever efforts have been put forth in that direction there have been encouraging results. In order to get together successfully we need to learn to know each other better, to work in the right direction more patiently, and to learn to get a better perspective of what could be achieved if we really did the things which we know ought to be done.

There are difficulties to be met. We are beset by too many selfish promotors. These often get support which is all out of proportion to any service they might render. Many of them are, or seem to be, responsible to nobody but themselves, yet they continue to ply their trade of getting funds under strange pretenses, funds which are needed in well established work.

There is failure to enter sympathetically into the problems of our own workers. This is discouraging to workers now putting forth their best efforts and to young people who are thinking of entering upon some form of Christian work. This is due to a lack of vision and is often made the more harmful through the use of unkind and negative criticism and of half-truths. When people see clearly, these difficulties are reduced.

Fears have been allowed to play too great a part in the planning of much of the work. We need to remember the attitude of Jesus toward fears, and His emphasis upon the need of Love.

This is a good time to study the great "I AM" statements of Jesus. He speaks of Himself as THE WAY, THE TRUTH, THE LIFE, THE DOOR. Either He was mistaken, or these expressions have a meaning worthy of much consideration. In good days men have forgotten His WAY. In bad days they have blamed Him. In real difficulties they have sometimes seriously tried to appreciate what He meant. Men have talked about the Truth when they were essentially untruthful. That was a poor test. We learn to know the value of life when we really seek to find that value in the realm of "by their fruits ye shall know them." Doors have little meaning until we enter them. That is doubly true of personal "doors."

The things which men profess to believe about Jesus and His work never offered greater challenges than they do today. This is a good time to try out the value of "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God." Jesus never spoke of the Kingdom of God as though He thought of it as a bit of wishful thinking. To Him it was the goal of human achievement. He looked upon it as something free from Nationalism, Sadduceeism, and Phariseeism.

Jesus did not live in Utopian times or under ideal conditions. There were wars during the whole period of His life on earth. There were bitter clas divisions everywhere. Into this confusion He sowed seed thoughts of a better day. In the midst of intrigue and falsehood He spoke of the Truth that can make men free, free from hindering limitations and free to greater living. He found men who cringed before those whom they hated. Men followed Him in hordes for a short time and then allowed themselves to be driven against those who lent them no helping hand in the days of their distress. This i worth pondering in a day when conditions are evi and the times are far from Utopian. What a wonderful world this will be if and when men will be a loyal to Him who loves them as they are to thos who compel them!

The challenge of Jesus to love God supremely and our neighbors as ourselves has not been withdrawn It still waits to be tried in a way worthy of our professions.

What I Saw in C.P.S.

By Don. E. Smucker

"For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known."

This famous verse from Paul's radiant charity chapter is a perfect text for any survey of Civilian Public Service. In the first place the verse is drawn from the very heart of the Bible's most eloquent statement on love. Likewise, C.P.S. is existing as the greatest labor of love in the history of American Mennonitism. (With relief work and colonization there is a kind of "first mile" necessity; with C.P.S. there is an amazing outpouring of men and money for a "second mile" principle.)

C.P.S.—A Spiritual Opportunity

The foregoing leads very naturally to the first major impression I gained from visiting Civilian Public Service camps: While not all the facts are clear and though the Lord has not fully revealed the role of C.P.S. in His Kingdom, one gains the overwhelming conviction that these camps present the most wonderful spiritual opportunity American Mennonites have ever possessed during wartime. There is a powerful impression that, like the Great Apostle, the glass may be dark but through it, nevertheless, stream the rays of Divine light which eventually will reveal precisely where all this is taking us. With Mordecai we can ask, without fear and with considerable hope." . . . And who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" (Es. 4:14). I, for one, am strongly confident C.P.S. is a part of God's will for the Mennonite church. And this, in the ultimate, is the only question that matters. It is dangerous to ask that question in connection with sin and unrighteousness. It is heart-warming to ask it in connection with the various camps. "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever." (I John 2:17)

Problems of the Camps

Having made this statement, let me hasten to the second major impression: The problems of the camps —and they do exist!—are all essentially spiritual problems. Broadly speaking, C.P.S. is plagued by two kinds of difficulties: those imposed from without an those arising from within. Most non-Mennonites believe that the major problems come from the over domination of the camps by the government, th false supervision by the military rather than th civilian branch, the failure to provide pay for th men or support for their dependents, the lack o challenging work projects and, in general, a fata alliance with conscription and, therefore, war itsel To completely deny these attacks is both unwise an unrealistic. But the overwhelming majority of Mennonites have rejected the rigorous, legalistic logic o these arguments in favor of what they rightly believ is a more truly Christian conception of "second mile obligations in relation to a generous (and Divinely ordained!) government. This does not mean that caution, discrimination and independence must be sacr ficed—not at all. (And particularly since th government is Divinely ordained to keep order amon sinners and not in the true Christian community. In any case the upshot of the whole matter is tha Mennonites have not looked outside the camps for th source of the problems which beset C.P.S.; rathe there is the natural Biblical tendency to look withi the hearts of the men in the camps. There is th source of evil in any situation. "A good man out o the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth tha which is good; and an evil man out of the ev treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which evil; for of the abundance of the heart his mout speaketh." (Luke 6:45)

The Challenge C.P.S. Men Face

Before I go further with this point let me make quite clear that the C.P.S. men, on the whole, fac a much greater challenge to their Christian faith tha the folks back home. It is a terrible thing to lo the larger freedom of normal community life, to b separated from families (33 per cent of the men a Sideling Hill camp are married) and to learn radical new tasks. If there is a Spirit-filled heart, this wi be transformed into a gloriously creative life. The e fruit of the Spirit surges in—love, joy, peace, ngsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, d temperance—to redeem C.P.S. and to make it a annel of God's grace and goodness.

Paul makes an astounding comment at the conclu- on of the fruits of the Spirit passage in Galatians: ". . . against such there is no law." (Gal. 5:23) What shocking attack that is upon our complacency! here is no law against faith, gentleness, love, joy, eace, and all the rest. These great Christian virtues an be expressed even in jail, as Paul himself did. ut, when one has a hardened heart, Civilian Public ervice becomes a ghastly experience in suppression, rustration, and disappointment, and make no mistake bout it. Nothing is more difficult than to work with hose boys to whom the camps are a vast conspiracy gainst their individual rights. This loveless, faithless, nd hopeless personality is surely standing in the need f prayer. I rather suspect that this kind of person just as spiritually maladjusted back home, too; nly, it is less obvious midst decreased strain and tress.

Making Mennonitism Attractive

There is still another sense in which the main roblem of the units is spiritual. Here I refer to he rather common failure of the camps to make Mennonitism attractive to the non-Mennonite boys who are there. The reasons are various.

First I would assign a deep-seated tendency toward elf-righteousness and spiritual pride which falls short f the Gospel standards. "The Pharisee stood and rayed thus with himself, 'God, I thank thee that I m not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adult- erers, or even as this publican.' " (Luke 18:11) Our ord leveled his most vigorous indignation against hese self-righteous folks and made it quite clear hat humility is a cardinal Christian virtue. "And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted." (Matt. 23:12) All this is not to say, that we are to give up our sense of certainty, our straight and narrow Gospel standards, our willingness to reject the wrong and pursue the right. But it does mean that all righteousness comes as a gift from God's grace and not from ourselves. The truest Christian reaction to the sinner is this statement: "There but for the grace of God goes myself."

Another reason is the plain lack of love in our heart. A rebuff or two from the person who disagrees with us and we tend to say, "Oh, well I don't like you anyhow. Why don't you go back where you belong." That is not the answer of Christian love which forgives seventy-times-seven. "Love suffereth long and is kind." In this whole survey of the relation of Mennonites to non-Mennonites, I am assuming that the boys have a profound grasp of Mennonite history and Biblical doctrine and ethics. When that is absent then, quite obviously, there is nothing to contribute to the other fellow. C.P.S. has helped ever so many boys at this point. These 2,500 boys will likely return to their communities with a clearer vision of the Mennonite church than most any of us back home. As a Kansas Mennonite boy in C.P.S. recently wrote, "Mennonitism has never meant more to me than it does now. It makes me feel happy to be a Mennonite with the background that our forefathers have given us. At the same time it makes me feel very humble to think how little we sometimes appreciate our church and how we forget that our ancestors were martyred for the same beliefs that we now sometimes take so lightly."

C.P.S. and the Bible

On the other spiritual frontiers of C.P.S., it is quite clear that Mennonitism is a strongly Biblical religion. While preaching, one has a rich experience at this point. Almost everyone in the meeting has a Bible, poised for action. If you refer to the chapter and verse of the text, all over the room is the pleasant music of pages being turned to that place. This sort of thing continues throughout the entire message. How those boys love the Book of Books!

There is also definite testimony in regard to holiness of living. Coming off the train where profanity, liquor and smoking form an unholy trinity, C.P.S. is a pleasant surprise. There is an elemental simplicity of life which is heart-warming. (for these men are literally poor in pocketbook and in Spirit) There are many opportunities for worship, grace before meals, and a general rejection of worldly standards. Personally, I would like to see a longer worship service after breakfast. But the camp directors pointed out the difficulties involved. Mennonites in general need to improve the quality and the quantity of their worship, individually and in groups, however great the difficulties may be. In C.P.S., the detached service men and the mental hospital units have the greatest difficulty in merely finding time when they may be together for worship. The soil-conservation and park-service camps still have the most perfect opportunities to carry out a more normal worship life.

C.P.S. Discharges

Statistics made available by the National Service Board for Religious Objectors reveal that as of January 1, 1944, there were 1,730 C.P.S. men listed as discharged. The breakdown is as follows:

Physical disability	763
Military Service, I-A-O	346
Military Service, I-A	138
Military Service, I-C	40
Occupational	115
Walked out, refused to work, etc.	113
Over 38, C.P.S. Reserve	51
Dependency	50
Over 38, IV-H or IV-E-H	47
Parolees and Probationers	39
Deceased	13
Ministerial	10

The Work Project

As for the work projects, one has the feeling that the greatest morale builders are the detached service projects plus the changing from camp to camp after a maximum stay of, say, from six months to a year's time. There is no question that some work projects are more challenging than others—though part of this, to be sure, depends on one's background. A farm boy from Lancaster County can see more validity in soil conservation than a New York City chap who grew up on the thirty-sixth floor of a large apartment house, walking not on fields of God's good earth but on fields of stone and cement where the soil was something to be covered up! When all is said and done, I observed that the work question was not so much one of validity as of monotony. The objective case for soil conservation is tremendous. But, it still may be very boring to dig post holes eight hours a day, six days a week. I suppose there is not a job on the face of the earth without its quota of repetitious monotonous work, a fact which must be faced in all realism. On the other hand, a very highly respected Mennonite boy told me that his greatest problem on the work project was being forced to work with the inefficiency of the federal government after a long schooling in the famous frugality and discipline of the Mennonite farm. There is no easy answer to that objection as every student of government realizes. There was much talk among the boys as to the possibility of using this C.P.S. work pattern on a voluntary basis in the post-war world in great areas of human need. Surely, if it is valid under compulsion it is more valid under the healthy atmosphere of volition! A thought to ponder.

Primacy of Love

Since my messages dealt primarily with the Mennonite criticism of the modern peace movement, I could not avoid this reaction: The C.P.S. camps emphasize the primacy of love over justice. The modern peace movement tends to emphasize the priority of justice over love. But, clearly, the great commandment is to love God and to love the brethren. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another." (John 13:25) . . . "Blessed are the meek" . . . "and the greatest of these is love." War tells us to hurry up human goodness with bombs and tanks and airplanes. Many pacifists are caught in the same fallacy only on a less violent basis; they would say hurry up goodness with non-violent coercion in terms of political pressure, strikes, lockouts, big talk, and all the rest. At that point C.P.S. is not a very spectacular answer to them. It is too quiet, too slow, too isolated. They clamor for more noise, more protest, less work. Guy F. Hershberger of Goshen has written so perfectly in what might be a text for our camps and their inner genius: "The New Testament way is to aim at love not justice. In aiming at justice the result is frequently a selfish struggle for power, position, or wealth. In aiming at love, however, the result is often justice as well as love. But, if not, the Christian must continue to love anyway, for according to the teaching of Christ, His disciples ought to suffer even injustice rather than forsake His way of life." Concern for the underprivileged? Yes! Mercy for the starving? Yes! Bandages for the wounded? Yes! Goodwill to the dark-skinned peoples? By all means! But, all this must be done in love's own good time, recognizing that pure love is often crucified but never defeated. That God in the mystery of Calvary's Cross triumphs in the very midst of apparent defeat. C.P.S., I believe, rests on something of that genius.

Finally, these camps revealed to me the necessity of seeing our dual citizenship: a citizenship in heaven and a citizenship upon earth. "The glory of th celestial," said the Apostle, "is one; and the glor of the terrestial is another." (I Cor. 15:40). Ove against the visible order of things there is a highe order. It is this higher order in which we are mear to live. This higher order or Heaven is the real orde of our existence. We are not mere creatures of th earth, the here and now.

The last two chapters of the Book of Revelatio show this dualism as clearly as any part of Scripture It assures us that God is over the world and Hi cause is sure to conquer. Material things, war, disease cruelty, barbarism, political oppression, moral cor ruption, ignorance and error, all these, will not endure Only the Heavenly Kingdom endures. Those wh love Him and obey Him will survive in that nev Kingdom. For our humanity is eventually swallowe up in His Divinity. There will be a new heaven an a new earth. Mennonite Civilian Public Service ha helped me to catch a partial but very helpful glimps into that Godly order. I pray that God may permi more and more of His light to stream through tha dark glass of human existence of which C.P.S. is a part. Eventually we shall know even as also we are known.

RELIEF NOTES

First Aid in C.P.S.

Next to Bible courses, first aid courses, as outlined by the Red Cross, have received the most interest and study by C.P.S. men. First aid training proved valuable recently, when a tornado destroyed almost the entire Brethren camp at Magnolia, Arkansas, and injured over fifty campers. After the emergency the attendant physician made the statement: "If it had not been for the boys' knowing first aid, we probably would have lost four or five lives."

Puerto Rico Workers

On the morning of April 28 farewell services were held at the Akron Office for Salome Fast. She was scheduled to leave Miami early on the morning of May 2. Word has been received that Naomi Shank and Earl Maust have safely arrived at the LaPlata project and are busily engaged in the work there.

Middle East Refugees

The refugees in the Middle East, among which our relief workers are working, are Yugoslavs—mostly women and children. They were evacuated from a port on the Dalmatian Coast by British ships during the months of January and February. It is estimated that at least 20,000 of these refugees are in Egypt at the present time. Besides Yugoslavs there are also an estimated 10,000 Polish and 10,000 Greek refugees in the Middle East. (Bulletin of the United Committee of South-Slavic Americans)

Hospital Men Transferred

Several C.P.S. men who have served in mental hospitals a year or more have been given the opportunity to return to base camps. Work in mental hospitals is often of such a nature as to justify transfer after an extended period of service. There is no indication that it will be necessary to transfer any large number. Vacancies left by such men are filled by other C.P.S. men in the base camps who volunteer for such service.

And Ye Visited Me

By Walter A Gering

III. Within the Sick Room

Most ministers will admit that as they step into e sick room they do so with a certain sense of fear d trembling. It should rightly be so, for the moents spent in the sick room are of tremendous imrtance. Souls may be won or lost during those oments; the pastor's visit may be one long rememered, it may undo what others have sought to upuild. Small wonder is it that he stands hesitatingly pon the threshold of the door ere he knocks and eathes out a silent prayer unto God. No finer pracce could be established than that of passing a moment prayer before entering.

Flexibility Needed

The procedure in the sick room may well vary with ch visit; there are no set rules for pastoral calling. hat which is the right procedure in one case may entirely wrong in the other. As one has said "A an has largely to trust intuitions and his experience, r with a clear conscience before God and his nare open to Divine guidance he cannot go far wrong." here are no set rules; yet certain general principles ay apply. These principles are the basis for proedure in the sick room and it is our purpose in this ticle to suggest few such which have come out of e experience of men of God in their pastoral work.

Entering With Prayer

One of these has already been mentioned: a brief oment of prayer before entering the sick room. ll of us will agree that our own efforts mean nothg and unless the great Physician goes with us into e room all is in vain. All of us realize the need r divine guidance in our visits; we need the right ought and spirit if the patient is to be blessed rough the visit. The power of prayer has been monstrated over and over again in our pastoral lling. Yet how often we find ourselves hurrying to the sick room without pausing for quiet prayer behalf of ourselves and those unto whom we minisr. We feel the pressure of many duties, we are xious to make the call, and almost unconsciously e neglect that moment of intercession before the rone of Grace before we enter the room. The actice of pausing for a moment as we stand upon e threshhold of the door is a part of effective storal calling.

Beginning with the Patient

Within the room it has been suggested that it is good policy to start with the patient where he is. he pastor may have his own ideas as to what the tient needs or ought to be. But the place to ben is where the patient is. Then carefully directquestions and ideas may lead the patient to her things. In this respect it may be well to let e patient talk if he is in a talking mood. The stor should develop the art of being a good lisner. This is valuable for two reasons. It is od for the patient as it offers him an opportunity express himself to one whom he feels understands d is sympathetic. Often the greatest relief of nsions comes through such opportunity to "talk it out." On the other hand such a procedure is valuable for the pastor for if he is observing and thinking as he listens he can learn much about the patient's needs and inner conflicts. Usually the patient unveils his inner life almost unconsciously in such moments.

Be Brief

Briefness is an important consideration in the sick room. Usually the patient is not in condition to visit very long without draining his strength. And what is probably just as important is that brief visits help to eliminate unnecessary social visiting. Over and over again it needs to be emphasized that the pastor is NOT a SOCIAL caller. He is a representative of the Lord Jesus Christ about his Father's business, and in that spirit his calls are made. If the pastor and the patient know that the visit is to be brief they will not spend much time in preliminary casual remarks. The conversation will be pointed in definite directions. In all fairness it may be said however that the length of the visit depends upon the circumstances. Many people never open up their inner thoughts and conflicts in a few moments. It takes a while for them to "thaw" out. Many a visit accomplishes little because it is too brief; it has left the impression of being a hurried, businesslike call. But the general principles hold: let the visit be brief and to the point.

Scripture and Prayer

The problem of Scripture and prayer in the sick room has been answered in various ways. There are those who maintain it should always be used; others would consider the circumstances. For myself I have come to the conviction that there are few occasions where prayer is not appropriate in the sick room. I have not yet found an occasion in the sick room where I was sorry afterwards that I had offered a word of prayer; there have been times when I have regretted the lack of it. The minister who makes this his practice soon discovers that his people expect it as a normal part of the call. The reading of a passage of Scripture is usually appropriate. The quotation of a passage by memory is even more so. Such Scripture should be chosen before entering the room and not left for momentary haphazard choice. A fine practice along this line is to select a passage of Scripture in the pastor's study before making the call and then meditating upon the meaning of that passage while on the way to see the patient. Such a passage may always be laid aside if in the room the Spirit of God directs other wise..

The Larger Emphasis

Sometimes it is helpful to bring into the sick room some note of the larger interests of the Kingdom, so that the patient may realize that he is a part of a great movement of God in the world. Sometimes the patient can lose himself in the interests of the Kingdom in its larger aspects. He begins to realize that he is not alone but an integral part of the whole and in such thoughts grows out of his own ailments.

Along with the above general statements a few specific suggestions may well be kept in mind. The following are a few which various experienced writers have mentioned:

1. Let the patient know when you expect to come again. It will be an encouragement to him and give him something toward which he may look and center his thoughts.

2. Never allow alarm, horror, surprise or sorrow to appear in your voice or facial expression.

3. Avoid loud speech and nervous action.

4. Keep your hands away from the bed lest you shake it.

5. Sit where the patient can easily see you without straining eyes.

6, Help the patient to realize that God cares, for that is often one of the great problems of the patient.

7. Do not apologize for your infrequent visits; excuses seldom make matters better.

8. Consider the possibility of reading to the patient.

9. Never discuss the value of the doctor's treatment with the patient or family in a critical spirit.

10. Do not whisper to the nurse or some member of the family in the presence of the patient.

"Put off thy shoes from off thy feet for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." These words spoken by God unto Moses centuries ago may well be applied to the sick room. God give us grace that we may draw nigh with deep humility and dependence upon the Lord; we stand upon holy ground.

Three Years in Europe

By Henry P. Buller

(Brother Buller returned recently from Europe abroad the Gripsholm. He with his wife and Lois Gunden were interned for over a year at Baden-Baden, Germany.)

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Matthew 25:40.

"When you return to America and see your people, we want you to tell them how much we have appreciated what you are doing for us and for our dear little ones!" Many a time have we, who were in the work in France, been thus asked to express the appreciation and gratitude of the people with whom and for whom we worked in the various projects of the Secour Mennonite Aux Enfants. Not infrequently the feelings of the people had been deeply stirred and it was with tears in their eyes that they expressed their happiness to find that there were still those who felt for their sufferings and that there were those who cared enough to do something about it.

Among those whom we contacted in our work, and whose thanks we wish to convey to you who have supported the Mennonite relief program with money contributions and prayer, I would like to mention many of the authorities with whom we had to arrange for the distributions of powdered milk and dried vegetables. This includes many of the school directors of the Lyon and St. Etienne areas and the local city and state officials. Further, I should like to mention the workers in our children's home and the children themselves. Also the refugees who called at our office and who were most appreciative of the least little thing that we were able to do for them. Often it was nothing more than to listen to their problems and try to help them find a solution. I know that writing about these warm and sincere expressions of thanks does not and cannot bring the warmth that we felt at the moment but it is our desire, at least, that all of you know how your efforts have been received.

When I landed at Pier F, at Jersey City on March 15, 1944, from the Swedish motorship Gripsholm it was three years and a month since leaving for the field. Three years of varied experiences, including a little over a year in German internment at Baden-Baden, Germany. Three years during which time there were many occasions when I could say with the Apostle Paul, "Oh the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and His ways past finding out!" (Romans 11:33) There were times when one did not know what the morrow would hold in store. Times when we could not communicate with the office or our families at home. But His ways led us all back to America, and we are thankful that the Lord has brought us safely home. We ask nothing more than that we may continue to work and testify for Him.

Activities in France

When I arrived on the field of work late February, 1941, Dr. Henry Wiens was then the director of the Mennonite activities in France. Both Brother Wiens and I were at Lyon for the most part until July of that year when Brother Wiens returned to America. For three weeks in April, however, I had stayed at the Convalescent Home at Canet-Plage, helping Brother Jesse Hoover, who came to France one month after me, and Sister Charlotte Gerber, from Switzerland, arrange and organize the opening of that Home. During the months of August, September, and October, 1941, the projects were under the direction of Brother Hoover. He remained in Marseilles at the American Friends Service Committee headquarters and during these three months I was alone at the Lyon office. Beginning with November, 1941, until November 6, 1942, all our activities were under the direction of Brother Joseph Byler, who stayed at Lyon, too.

I am sure that many of you have followed the progress and development of our work as it has been reported by the delegates returning before me, so I will not go into any details of what preceded November 8, 1942—the day of the Allied landing on North Africa. Brother Byler left France, at Cerbere, on November 6, 1942. His joy in going home was a great comfort to us in the days that followed. We were happy that he escaped the trying days following the breaking of diplomatic relations between the United States and France and the subsequent internment at Baden-Baden.

Preparing to Leave the Work

With the break in diplomatic relations on November 11, 1942, came changes that affected our work and made it necessary to change all the plans we had had up to that moment. In the first place, it meant that funds were completely stopped and all contact with the Mennonite Central Committee office were cut off. Also, it meant that there was a great possibility that we as Americans might not be allowed to continue our activities, regardless of the nature of our work. There was also the possibility that the German authorities, after the complete occupation of France beginning November 11, 1942, might ask that we be interned by the French or might intern us themselves.

At the time of the break of diplomatic relations we were carrying on the following projects: the canteen for Spanish children at Cerbere; a bi-monthly distribution of food to Spanish families at Banyuls and nearby Port Vendres, the Convalescent Home at Canet-Plage for sick children from concentration camps, a Home for underfed boys near Lyon, and the central office at Lyon. In the office, besides having our administration centered there we were able to give some aid to refugees. With our funds cut off from America we immediately had to think in terms of liquidating our activities in such a manner so as not to bring difficulties to the people that we had been helping, in some cases, for almost three years.

Cerbere and Banyuls

The canteen at Cerbere was closed at the end of January, 1943, when it became evident that the need for which it had been set up no longer existed. For the bi-monthly food distributions at Banyuls we set aside sufficient funds in the "liquidating budget" for them to continue for a period of nine months ending about October, 1943. In our budget we provided for a minimum of one year's support for the Convalescent Home of Canet-Plage and possibly for a year and a half, depending upon the amount needed meanwhile for unforeseen expenditures. The Home, i.e., the children and equipment, had to be moved into the interior of France when the Germans began to fortify the beach upon which it had been before.

Work at Lyon

The Lyon Boys' Home we decided to terminate at the end of April, 1943, since that was the longest time the city of Lyon could assure us the use of their property. The Lyon office we tentatively decided to keep open until October, 1943. Plans to open a second Home, near Canet-Plage, for children on November 15, as well as another Home in the French Alps a few weeks later, we thought best to abandon. In place of these two Homes we supported for a period of nine months a project which had been organized by a French lady for needy French girls. This project was pointed out to us as worthy of our support by Mr. Samuel Ybargoyen, former Consul of Uruguay at Lyon, known to every Mennonite delegate who came to France. We have no definite news that all has continued as planned in January, 1943, but for the most part we believe it has.

Disposition of Funds

A problem in connection with our funds was that of where to deposit them. The American Friends Service Committee had acted as our bankers previously. However, when they turned their activities over to a French committee the French organization did not care to take over the responsibility for keeping the Mennonite funds. We were able to find trustworthy persons who helped us without danger of having funds "frozen" through a general governmental regulation. A large part of the funds we deposited with the Swiss authorities who took over the American interests and the funds were later released for use in the projects which continued.

The possibility that we might not be allowed to continue to work came shortly after the complete occupation by the Germans. That is, we were not allowed to travel as we had before but were restricted to the Rhone Department. Since so many of the problems in connection with the Convalescent Home and the other projects had to be investigated and arranged for on the spot we had to find some one who could go and do this for us. Also, knowing that we probably would be interned, we had to have some one to take over the responsibility for all the work. Here again, Mr. Ybargoyen proved a great help to us by introducing us to a French person, Mr. Roger Georges. Mr. Georges was greatly interested in our work and had a deep concern for the needy children. It was to him that we left the responsibility of carry-ng on as long as possible and we have had word that e has carried on very well.

Interned in Baden-Baden

On the 13th of January we received word from he Swiss Consulate that we were admitted to the orth American diplomatic group then at Lourdes, n southern France. Before we could join them the ermans had taken the entire group to Baden-Baden, ermany. We were asked on January 25, 1943, by he French authorities to go to Mont Dore, a skiing esort near Clermont-Ferrand, where the diplomatic roups of a number of the South American republics ere kept awaiting their turn to be taken to Germany. Ve arrived at Baden-Baden on February, 16, 1943, nd remained there until February 19, 1944, waiting or our repatriation.

At Baden-Baden we were kept in a comfortable otel and were given sufficient and good food. Espe- ally with Red Cross parcels every fourteen days, we ot along very nicely. For our own benefit and as pastime we organized classes, under the auspices our own "Badheim University," sharing any pecial training with our fellow internees.

In the way of sports we had the opportunity of sing a nearby sportsfield for softball and football mes, there were also some tennis courts available r those who had tennis equipment, and swimming as possible early in the morning during the summer. e could also take walks in the surrounding region the Black Forest. These walks as well as any tivity which took us out of the small hotel garden, ere under the supervision of one or two agents of e Gestapo (Geheime Staats Polizei—Secret State lice). They also accompanied us to dentists, doc- rs, and stores whenever we were fortunate enough get permission to buy something that was on the tioned lists. The Gestapo's business was to see that would return to our hotel but more important an that, to see that we did not make contacts with y of the German people.

The time spent at Baden-Baden was one filled with merous activities but for the most part they were ings that we did merely to be doing something. It s a very trying period inasmuch as contacts with r families were irregular and took long. Also the certainty of our stay—many of us did not expect get out until after the war would be over—made r all sorts of ups and downs in the general morale the group. But the most difficult for many of us, d especially the younger members of the group, s the impossibility of doing anything constructive a more permanent nature. No doubt it is some es good to learn to be patient and above all to st in God that His way for one's future is the best. the end we can say that we are very happy to home again and above all thankful that God has t us every step of the way.

'Most people suffer from the sins of others more n from their own."

'Everything we do, everything we say, and every- ng we think bears fruit of its kind through all nity."

RELIEF NOTES

Home for Nurses in Puerto Rico

The following account of plans for a nurses' home taken from the May issue of Rio La Plata, the monthly news letter from Puerto Rico:

"The ground work has been laid for the nurses' home. This thirty-by-seventy-foot, C.C.C. type barrack, which in connection with the relief program at La Plata, is built like our other buildings was moved from Buena Vista, and will be put up here. Posts have been placed and cross ties laid for the floor, and a few sections of floor have already been laid. We are trying to complete the nurses' home with the completion of the hospital, so as to house personnel that will arrive in the future.

"Two men, Albert Bohrer and Earl Maust, have been added to our construction crew on part-time work. There are now six of the C.P.S. men and eight or ten Puerto Rican men who are on the construction crew."

Clothing in Post-War Relief

A letter from Switzerland, received at Friends Headquarters and printed in the April Clothing Bulletin, contained the following opinion:

"Clothing is going to constitute one of the most important relief supplies in any post-war action. The people who come in from France now (and this can be said to be true for the last six months) have really nothing but what they are wearing and often this is pretty badly torn from crawling through the barbed wire frontier barriers . . . Please assure everyone at home who has contributed to the sending of . . . clothing that it is priceless in value, and represents one of the most important relief services that can be given in Europe now-a-days."

C.P.S. NOTES

Regional Directors Meet

C.P.S. Regional Directors for Mennonite camps have been in conference at Akron, May 8-9. The agenda for their meetings called for consideration of the following concerns: specialized projects, transfers, interpretation of Mennonite policies, orientation of new assignees, dependency, camp papers. The regional directors for M.C.C.-C.P.S. are:

Phil Frey	Eastern Area
Ralph Beechy	Mid-West Area
Harry Martens	Rocky Mountain Area
Rufus Franz	Pacific Coast Area
J. N. Byler	Hospital Units
Robert Kreider	Hospital Units (Ass't)
Titus Books	Eastern Area Pastor

"Compromise With War"

The above is the title of a new pamphlet published recently by the Peace Section, as a critique of the war philosophy of Charles Clayton Morrison, as expressed in the Christian Century. The booklet is a reprint of an article by Edward Yoder, which appeared some time ago in the Gospel Herald under the title, "Christian Thinking on War." Distribution will be primarily in C.P.S. camps where a distinct need was felt for rebuttal material to help the thinking of C.P.S. men. The booklet is also for sale at five cents per single copy; fifty cents per dozen copies.

YOUTH JOTTINGS

—The mixed quartet of the Mennonite Bible Academy of North Newton, Kansas is making a tour through some of the Western Kansas churches and Colorado. The quartet has appeared on a number of programs during the school year. It is composed of Gladwyn Schmidt, Evelyn Goering, Mary Lou Rich, and Harold Schmidt, all from the Newton vicinity. Marjorie Linscheid of North Newton, Kansas, will accompany them as one of the speakers. It is an endeavour on the part of these young people and the Academy to serve these outlying communities with such gospel programs. Such opportunities for service and fellowship are valued very highly as a part of their Christian training. Rev. Arnold J. Regier will accompany them on this trip.

—Inman (Kansas) Mennonite C. E. Every month our C. E. sends the C. E. Reflector to our church members away from home, such as those in the camps, in college, and those employed away from home. The young people of the Hoffnungsau C. E. gave us a program on April 16. We gave a return program on April 30. The young people have decided to go out on various evenings and bring some cheer to the shut-ins. Ruth Reimer, our Senior C. E. president, has announced her engagement to Elmer Wiens of Union Grove, Wisconsin. The Junior C. E. of our church numbers twenty-six. They meet every other Sunday, and they plan to have a social at every third meeting. They had a chili feed on April 28. An attendance contest is going on with the C.E. divided into two groups. The losing side will give the winners a picnic. The older people of our church meet every Wednesday evening at different homes for an evening of Bible study and prayer. —Florence Wiens, Corr.

(The above is the first correspondence received for the "Youth Jottings." Might more societies or groups of young people report on those activities of theirs which are particularly inspiring and helpful to others. The editor tries to pick up news about our young people, but jottings about them are very much desired by him. Send them in.)

—Maxlyn Smith, a member of the Bergthal Mennonite Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas, will teach three weeks of Bible school for her church. She will use graded material put out by the Old Mennonites and will conduct the school in the public school building which is located near the meetinghouse. Maxlyn graduated from Bethel College this spring with highest distinction. Because of her excellent scholastic work and other contributions she was also received into the Order of the Golden A. During the school year the students had selected her as "The Representative Girl." This past year she was also President of the Student Christian Movement. She intends to teach commerce in the Clearwater, Kansas, high school next year. When Maxlyn contemplated taking this job, she made clear that she was a Pacifist and that she wanted this to be understood by those who hired her. They understoo and hired her. Maxlyn has two aunts that are well known to many of our readers, namely: Sister Len Mae of the Bethel Deaconess Hospital, Newton; an Luella Smith, Bethel College, North Newton, Kansa.

—Verney Unruh, a member of the Bethlehem Mennonite Church, Bloomfield, Montana, was ordained to th ministry in his home church on May 21. The day wa observed as a young people's Sunday with the ordination as the main feature. Verney graduated from Bethel College this spring. He plans to continue his stud for the ministry.

An Expression of Gratitude

Praise God from whom all blessings flow
Praise Him all creatures here below
Praise Him above ye heavenly hosts
Praise Father, Son and Holy Ghost.

Brother Graber and I sang these words as our expression of gratitude that after an absence of ten months we were safely home again from our long trip to India and China where we went to investigate famine conditions for the Mennonite Central Committee. The Lord had been with us, and we were conscious of His guidance and His protecting care, all along the way, we knew that many prayed for us and that their prayers were being answered.

This picture of Sam J. Goering was taken before he went to China. He does not look as well rested now, for the trip of over 30,000 miles was a very strenuous one.

Some parts of the trip were made under very trying circumstances. Travel at this time presents many hazards. Our ship passed frequently through troubled waters. At last we had reached safely the final port. Our hearts were filled with thanksgiving and we sang.

We arrived in India when the famine in the Bengal area was at its height. People were starving to death on the streets of Calcutta and in the surrounding territory. A cablegram from Orie Miller, the executive secretary of the M.C.C., urged that we should do what we could to help relieve conditions and promised support of the program we would set up. We are glad that we could help establish a relief center there. The work is still being carried on and now is in charge of Missionary Ferd. Isaac. This work still needs our support, although conditions are much better than they were.

In China we found extreme inflation and prices very high. Living conditions are exceptionally hard for missionaries, teachers, preachers and others who depend on a fixed salary for their livelihood. Many mission stations, in both free and occupied China are without missionaries at this time and those who are left find themselves greatly handicapped in their work because of the high cost of living.

Travelling is very difficult in China at this time, nevertheless, we succeeded in going all the way across free China, from Kunming to the famine area in Honan. We spent Christmas at Chengchow and at one time were three miles from the Japanese line. This needy area stricken by war, drought, locust, flood, and bandits is filled with destitute people, whose lives depend on help from others. Chengchow was taken by the Japanese since we were there and many people had to flee, leaving behind what little they possessed. This intensifies the need for relief, funds, and workers. We hope that a unit composed of a doctor and other workers can be sent there. Pray that the Lord may direct definitely in this matter.

Sincerely yours,
Sam J. Goering

It Was Good to Be There

By Louise Ewert

Mennonites of the Chicago area had the opportunity to unite in a service of praise and consecration on Sunday afternoon, May 7. For some time the need has been felt for a central location for Mennonite worship services. The pastors, Rev. John T. Neufeld and Rev. Erwin Albrecht, realized this and have arranged a suitable meeting place for the first Sunday afternoon of each month. The chapel of the Methodist Chicago Temple downtown was found satisfactory.

Approximately forty attended this initial service and derived great blessing from the spirit of worship and brotherly admonition which prevailed throughout. The customary organ prelude and singing of hymns began the service. Rev. Albrecht spoke a word of welcome, read the scripture, and led in prayer. A few announcements were made by Rev. Neufeld, who also introduced the speakers. As he said, we remained faithful to Mennonite tradition by having more than one speaker.

Indeed it was fortunate that Rev. Gerald Stucky could be present to give a brief resume of his experiences and impressions of South America. The proposed missionary enterprise in Colombia was presented with a heart-searching challenge.

Dr. Abraham Warkentin brought the sermon. The congregation marvelled at the way the Great Physician has restored his health. Dr. Warkentin used Matthew 5:47 as his text—"What do ye more than others?" He pointed out that Jesus always asked questions which provoke thought and self-examination. A question such as this may lead one to compare himself with others, resulting in self-satisfaction. On the other hand, it can also test a person, and if he is honest he can see the many ways in which he has fallen short. In contrition, therefore, the Christian accepts the Lord's challenge to do more.

In the spirit of this benediction the meeting dispersed. The Mennonite custom of getting acquainted followed, and each went his way spiritually refreshed.

Two Brethren Receive Honorary Degrees

The brethren P. P. Wedel, Moundridge, Kansas, and J. H. Janzen, Waterloo, Ontario, Canada, were honored at the recent commencement excercises of Bethel College. The honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity (D.D.) was conferred upon each of these men. Below we give the greater part of the citations on the basis of which the degrees were conferred.

Citation for the Reverend Peter P. Wedel

"It is a great honor at this commencement to present for special recognition a man who over a period of years has rendered distinguished service to the cause of Christ and His Church. He is a native of Kansas, born near Moundridge, October 6, 1884, the son of Mennonite immigrants, John H. and Marie Goering Wedel, pioneer settlers of the Swiss-Polish migration of 1874.

This is Dr. P. P. Wedel, who has continuously served one church for a period of forty-one years. We are sorry that we have no picture of Dr. J. H. Janzen available for publication

His formal education he received in the common schools of his community and in Bethel College where he took special work in ministerial training.

His work in the ministry began at the age of 19 when in 1903 he was elected and later ordained by his home congregation to serve as assistant to the pastor of the First Mennonite Church of Christian, Moundridge. In 1917 he was elected pastor of this church serving continuously in this capacity to the present date. These forty-one years in the pastorate were characterized by a steady, sound, forward-looking leadership and by an unstinting service. His sense of community responsibility led him to give this same type and quality of leadership and service toward the promotion of the spiritual life and activity of his community and its youth.

During all these years he likewise showed a deep and consistent interest in the larger enterprise of the church. Repeatedly he has been chosen to serve in responsible positions of the Western District Conference and of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America. In the Western District he has served for longer periods as Vice President and subsequently two similar terms as President of the Conference. Twelve years he has served on the Foreign Mission Board, nine of them as its president. Five years he served on the Bethel College Board of Directors. In addition to these varied activities and responsibilities in church, conference, Christian education, hospital, and community he has found time to carry on valuable research studies on the history of the Swiss Mennonite migration from Poland, publishing his findings in book form.

His life has been marked by steady, constructive, responsible service. As a churchman he has been devoted to His Lord and the church; as a pastor, a true shepherd of the flock; as a conference leader, clear in vision, sound in judgment, dependable in his service, cooperative in attitude, conciliatory in spirit, active in missionary endeavors; as a citizen he has been loyal to the highest good of a man; as a person he has been a true friend, a wise counsellor, humble and gracious a Christian gentleman."

Citation for the Reverend J. H. Janzen

We are happy today to honor the Reverend Jacob H. Janzen of Waterloo, Ontario, Canada, who was born in Steinbach, in the Province of Tauria in South Russia on March 19, 1878. He is the son of the Reverend Heinrich Janzen and Maria Dirks Janzen, who, besides ministering to the Gnadenfeld Mennonite Church, were vitally interested and active in community and humanitarian service.

He was educated in the elementary and high schools of Russia between 1885-1894. After years of reading and private study he entered the Universities of Jena and of Greifswald. His broad interests were evidenced by the selection of these two schools so wide apart in their point of view and by including in his studies a wide range of fields including religion, philosophy, and science.

Earlier in his life he was active in the schoolroom, beginning as an elementary school teacher in 1894 in Molotschna, later at Postwa, Friedensdorf and at Rosenort, Russia. Between 1908 and 1921 he was head of the Girl's High School at Tiege, also South Russia.

His literary activity began with a novel under the freely translated title, "For My Eyes Have Seen the Lord." His four Low German plays have been widely read and produced in various local communities.

Among a half dozen other books and pamphlets we find texts in three grades as guides to Bible study. As author, Mr. Janzen has proved to be an entertainer and educator of young and old alike.

Ordained as minister of the Gnadenfeld Church in 1906 and as elder of the Mennonite Church in Ontario Canada, he has faithfully served the Mennonite Church in various capacities from that day to this.

Mr. Janzen has lived and worked on two continents commands several languages, understands and appreciates different cultures, unmistakenly demonstrates the ability to keep a proper balance between intellectual values of life and the spiritual, the sacred and the mundane, the serious and humorous. As a church man he has been self-sacrificing in his service, faithful as a shepherd of his flock, active in evangelism, steadfast in his support of conference activities, strong in his convictions and tolerant in his attitude, sane in his advice, wise as a counsellor, and humble and gracious as a fellow Christian."

JOTTINGS

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Buller, who carried on relief work in France and then were interned in Germany, are now visiting various Mennonite communities in the United States. They were recently at Bethel College, where they shared much that was of great interest. It is their hope to be able to continue in relief work. In case Mrs. Buller is not permitted to enter other countries for relief work (she is considered as an enemy alien in this country because of her birth in Germany. There again she was dis-owned as a citizen because her family was Jewish) she may continue language study in a Mennonite College with the view of teaching language. She already has a good command over five or so of them, but she needs academic rating for teaching. Her German, which she speaks very well, sounds pleasant to those who like to hear that tongue. The Bullers have gone to Upland, California. The First Mennonite Church there is Brother Buller's home church. We quote the following from a recent bulletin of this church:

"We appreciate the return of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bul- er. We welcome them in our midst. Next Sunday, May 21st they will have charge of the morning and evening service. Mrs. Buller will receive the sacrament of baptism. Mr. and Mrs. Buller were legally married year and half ago but at that time lacked the privilege of a religious ceremony. Hence next Sunday morning there will be a consecration of their marriage vows. On Wednesday evening, May 24, there will be a Fel- owship dinner in the Church dining room and a rath- r informal program when we will again hear from Ir. and Mrs. Buller. At this time you will be per- itted to ask questions and participate in an open orum."

-Burrton Mennonite Church, Burrton, Kansas: The . E. Society gave a Mother's Day program. A social honor of the mothers was held after the program. he C. E. Society is putting out The Burrton C.E. Echo, paper which is being sent to all the boys in the ser- ce of our country. The first issue contained a picture of our pastor and his wife

Baptism will be held on May 28. There are six boys the catechism class.

Rev. Epp and his wife are going to teach the daily cation Bible school, which begins May 22, to run for o weeks. A program will be presented by the children, when the term ends.—Evelyn Regier, Corr.

Immanuel Mennonite Church, Los Angeles, California: vo of our young people will be graduating from the egree Course here at the Bible institute this spring, d the Lord willing will be going forth into Christian rk. Homer Sperling has accepted a teaching position th the Oklahoma Bible Academy, and Leonard Hanes trusting the Lord to thrust him out into missionary rk in South America. Both of these young men have quested ordination and the church has granted them s request, and the Lord willing, will be solemnized nday morning, May 28. In view of this we as a rch wish to extend the following invitation.

"In view of God's marvelous leading in that He has led two of our young men, Homer Sperling and Leo- rd Hanes, into full time Christian work, we, as the manuel Mennonite Church of Los Angeles, have voted grant them their request for examination and ordin- on. The examination is to be conducted Saturday ning, May 27, at 8 o'clock and the ordination rites solemnized Sunday morning, May 28, during the morning service.

"We extend a most cordial invitation to all churches and friends to be present for this sacred occasion and rejoice with us for that which God has done."

—Walter H. Dyck, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, had as his sermon subject for May 14, "Whom Shall I Marry? A daughter of the King or a child of the world?" Miss Lois Gunden, former relief worker in France, recently visited this church.

—Rev. and Mrs. C. B. Friesen, who serve the Herold Mennonite Church, Bessie, Oklahoma, send out an interesting church letter to those of their members who are away from home. The crop outlook at Bessie is reported to be excellent. The church plans to have a youth rally on Memorial Day with Brother Henry Harder of Geary as guest speaker. Present plans call for a fellowship supper on the 29th and a picnic the next day. The young people of the Sicher church are joining in this project. Fifteen young people have been taking catechism instruction.

—Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Rev. and Mrs. D. D. Harder celebrated their fifty-fifth wedding anniversary on May 12.

—Bulletin, Buhler Mennonite Church, Buhler, Kansas:

"Maybe the church grounds do not as yet look like a well-kept park, but nevertheless around forty loyal church members were on hands and knees Monday evening digging dandelions."

"The M.C.C. has sent blanks to all churches. These blanks are to be filled by draftees going into C. P. S. camps and whose dependents need support. Definite provisions have been made by the M.C.C. to aid those who need help." This church has an emergency fund for C.P.S. men with dependents. A recent offering for this netted $86.47.

—The church council of the First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California, has passed a resolution granting Rev. P. K. Regier a month's vacation, during which time he is to attend the session of the General Conference.

—The theme of the Pacific District Conference will be "Demonstrative Christianity—Loving, Living, Serving Christ."

—The Chapel of the Air, sponsored by the First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, Ohio, runs from 9 to 9:30 a.m., Eastern Standard Time. The church and friends must raise $2,500.00 a year for this project.

—Lorraine Avenue Mennonite Church, Wichita, Kansas: The peace committee recently arranged for a program given by students of Friends University. Nina Tonita, a student and an American-born Japanese, spoke. The young people's C.E. gave a "Chinese program" that same evening.

—Oklahoma Bible Academy, Meno, Oklahoma: Just a few hours drive on Sunday morning, April 16, brought the three cars filled with Bible students from the O.B.A. to what they thought a foreign country—Little Indians everywhere! They were visiting the Indian reservation and boarding school at Concho, Oklahoma, where our missionaries, Rev. and Mrs. J. B. Ediger have S. S. for over two hundred children. The students rejoiced to tell Bible stories, teach choruses and Bible verses to these children.

April 30 the Bible students again visited Indians but this time at Long Dale, Oklahoma, where Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Friesen are the missionaries. Besides witnessing to the love of Christ in the morning and afternoon services they enjoyed a meal cooked and served by the Indians.

—First Church of Christian Mennonite, Moundridge, Kansas: Rev. Jacob H. Janzen, Waterloo, Ontario, Canada, brought the message on May 14. The Lord willing, twelve young people who have been taking instructions for several months will be baptized Pentecost Sunday. Each baptismal candidate is given a baptismal certificate and a Bible by the church on the day of baptism. —Corr.

—The East Swamp Mennonite Congregation at Quakertown, Pa., just recently completed the construction of a new addition to their present meeting house. This improvement will provide a much needed mothers' room, ladies' and men's wash rooms, and two additional Sunday School rooms. The interior of the meeting house was refinished with a clear white finish. The main auditorium was lengthened, and a new rug replaces the old one. Members and friends of the Eastern District Conference are invited to attend a special service in conjunction with the day of dedication, on Sunday afternoon, June 4, at 2:30 P. M.

The young people have planned to conduct their seventh young people's Bible conference from May 30 to June 4 in conjunction with this special occasion. The Rev. D. J. Unruh, member of the Foreign Mission Board and a representative of the Northern Bible Society, has been engaged as speaker. We will appreciate the prayer interest of our conference friends in behalf of these services. Rev. H. D. Burkholder, has served the East Swamp Congregation during the past six years.

—Miss Katie Andres, the librarian of the Western District Conference Loan Library, reports that 290 books were checked out during the first quarter of 1944. Three camps, eight churches and forty-one individuals checked out books. The greatest number of books checked out were fiction, and the next greatest demand was for religion and biography.

—Mennonite Bible Academy: On May 12, the students with the parents, teachers, and friends had a picnic dinner under the trees on the campus. The weather was such that every one could enjoy himself. After the meal the visitors were shown through the Academy building where a number of things made by the students were on display. At 2:30 we all gathered in the Student Union Room of Memorial Hall where the commencement address was given by Rev. Arnold Funk of Hillsboro, Kansas. Our first graduates were James Unruh of Hillsboro, and Melvin Klassen of Whitewater, Kansas.

The Mennonite Bible Academy is looking forward to a better year next winter than this first year we have just closed. Several new students have already reserved rooms for next year, and we would invite others to make their reservations now. Either write or come and see us about this at any time.

EASTERN DISTRICT CONFERENCE NOTES

The Eastern District Conference came to a close on Sunday afternoon, May 7, with a joint program by the Sunday School Union and the Young People's Union under the direction of Norman Geissinger, President of the S. S. Union and Ted Moyer. President of the Y. P. Union. Both groups reported splendid response from the Sunday Schools and the young people's societies for the mission projects. The speaker for the afternoon was Rev. Andrew Shelly, pastor of the Sterling Avenue, Mennonite church in Kitchner, Ontario. He presented a challenge to the young people based on Esther 4:14b. —Correspondent of Y. P. Union Fairfield—The pastor, Rev. George S. Stoneback, delivered the sermon at the Baccalaureate service. Miss Wilhelmina Kuyf will speak at the morning service, Sunday, May 28.

Springfield—The Church members are looking forward to making a number of repairs to the church as soon as possible. A sizcable cash donation was received from Miss Ruth Suerkon for this purpose.

Perkasie—In both the church bulletins printed by the pastor of the Perkasie—Springfield charge, the Rev. Ward W. Shelly, makes the following statement concerning the recent Conference session held in the Deep Run Church, "The Spirit of Christ was manifest throughout the sessions and a note of concern was sounded in behalf of the fundamentals of the Faith." May 21, was Missionary Sunday. Miss Wilhelmina Kuyf, missionary to China, spoke at both morning and evening services.

Allentown—The children of the Sunday School received the banner at the children's service in Zion Reformed Church for having had the largest representation from any Sunday School at the Christ for Allentown Children's Service. Over 14,00 have attended the Christ for Allentown Campaign the first two weeks. Last Thursday, young people's night, eighty-three young people accepted Christ as their personal Savior. We are praising God for the out-pouring of His Spirit and the manifestation of His power. Dr. John (Jack) Mitchell of Portland, Oregon, is the evangelist.

Lansdale—A prayer service in the interest of Bluffton College was held in the church on Wednesday afternoon, May 10.

Souderton—Rev. Paul Wenger, missionary to India, will supply the pulpit during June and July. He plans to visit his folks in Idaho, attend the General Conference in North Newton, Kansas, and then expects to leave for India in September if the way opens.

Bally—Dr. Elmer E. S. Johnson, pastor of the church delivered the Commencement address at Bluffton College Monday, May 15.

Gifts in Kind Program

The question "What are gifts in kind?" is fre-uently asked. There are two types of gifts that ay be made for the relief or Civilian Public Ser-ice activities of the Mennonite Central Committee; he first is cash and the second is in goods that can e used in the operation of the programs. The latter re known as "gifts in kind" and may be in the rm of foodstuffs, clothing, soap, or other usable aterials.

Mennonites have always been motivated to give ecause of their Christian faith and ideals whereby is right to clothe the naked, feed the hungry, and share our material blessings with those who are need. Along with this has always gone a ministry those who are spiritually impoverished. Relief foreign peoples has been given over a period of any years, but it is within the last few years that e opportunity for aiding our own brethren in ivilian Public Service camps has been afforded the hurches. The response has been generous to both lief and C.P.S. needs, and it has been an inspiration those administering the two programs to see an ver increasing flow of gifts despite the handicap of dditional men going from the home communities to mp.

Response from the churches last year to the Can-ing and Drying Project and the continuing enthus-stic response from the women folk to needs for lief clothing suggested that the announcement of e needs and opportunities in both areas for this year uld well be combined in a single "Gifts in Kind rogram" folder. In this way, it was felt, the contri-tions and help from each congregation could be ore efficiently planned. The folder has been dis-ibuted through the ministers of the churches on a embership basis; additional copies may be obtained request. The folder describes the specific needs r gifts in kind for both relief and C.P.S., and it fers detailed suggestions to local organizations for anning their work effectively.

nning and Drying for Mennonite C.P.S. Camps

A major purpose of the Gifts in Kind folder is give direction to the efforts of the local sewing cles, aid societies, and other individuals or organi-tions desiring to express their interest and support the C.P.S. program by the canning and drying of ods for the camps. It is important that all who rticipate in the work read the folder carefully to derstand the plan. Additional copies may be had on request.

Collection centers will be set up in various areas having large Mennonite settlements and are to be used cooperatively by all conferences. At least one collection center will be within a reasonable distance of most of the churches participating in the canning and drying activities. These centers will be announced in the church papers later in the season; in the meantime, canning groups should hold their goods until the locations of the centers are published. Most of last year's centers will be used with several additions to accommodate our people more adequately. The individuals in charge of the collection centers will issue a receipt for all goods brought to the centers.

Likewise the local work may be organized in whatever manner seems to be most efficient and adaptable to the group. Conference leaders may promote the program within their conferences as they feel led. Should assistance be needed in the form of advice or further suggestions, the Akron office will be glad to help. Groups last year found, as a rule, that one person should be responsible to M.C.C. for obtaining sugar ration points, purchasing jars, and other canning supplies, and to generally direct their efforts. Canning bees may be used as a means of preserving large quantities of food available for a short period of time. Canning a few additional quarts in each home along with the regular household canning is also to be encouraged as many congregations made sizeable contributions by this method alone. Families having one or more members in camp might wish to can an amount equivalent to what would normally be consumed by them if they were at home. An effort should be made to encourage the same high standard of food processing as last year; the men in camp appreciate the same high quality food they were accustomed to at home.

Individuals may use their own surplus canning sugar for C.P.S. canning; this is permissible under OPA regulations. However, since such surplus points will not be sufficient for the entire program, the canning sugar points to which the camps are entitled have been placed at M.C.C. disposal, the canning groups to use as needed. These points may be obtained from M.C.C. at the maximum rate of one pound of sugar per four quarts of fruit canned. One-fifth of the sugar allotted a group may be used for jams, jellies, and fruit butters at the rate of one pound per quart.

The following list of foods may be used as a guide to the camps' needs. Items marked with two asterisks () are greatly needed, those with one (*) are needed in considerable quantities, those with none are needed in limited quantities.

Fruits: peaches, prunes, plums, apricots, pears, cherries, berries, apples, applesauce, fruit juices, grapes, figs, cantaloupe, rhubarb, fruit butters, preserves.

Vegetables: peas, beans, corn, carrots, beets, asparagus*, chow-chow*, spinach, swiss chard, sauerkraut*, mixed vegetables*, catsup*, tomatoes.

Meats, Fats and Poultry: Beef, veal, lamb, pork, lard*, rabbit, chickens*, and turkey.

Canned meats and fats were not contributed last year, as arrangements could not be completed for receiving them; this year, however, these foods may be received. It is hoped that rationed meats such as beef and pork, as well as poultry, will be contributed now that it is possible to receive it. Lard is also needed by the camps in considerable quantities.

Congregations located in abundant fruit-producing areas are urged to emphasize the canning of fruit. Since many of the churches are located where there is frequently a shortage of fruit and where fruit prices are high, it is hoped that the fruit contributed in the more favorably situated areas will be large enough to supplement the smaller contributions from the less favorably situated areas.

Dried foods should be packed in insect-proof and moisture-proof containers.

Printed gummed labels should be obtained from M.C.C.; it is suggested that these be requested when canning sugar ration points are requested. A label should be placed on each jar or can to identify it by contents, donor, congregation, and conference. This information is necessary to record each contribution and to later report totals by conference on the M.C.C. annual report. Care should be taken in writing the labels, as clearly marked labels will make the work at the centers less difficult. Pickled foods should be so marked for the convenience of the dieticians in preparing meals. The labels on last year's jars were a source of keen satisfaction to the men in camp. Frequently they were able to identify food put up by their own mothers, sisters, and neighbors. This personal touch again emphasized that the home folks are back of and interested in their boys in camp.

Clothing and Soap for Relief

Relief clothing has been received in sufficient quantities to warrant two fulltime workers, Miss Elma Esau of Whitewater, Kansas, and Miss Anna M. Snyder of Canby, Oregon, to assist Mrs. M. C. Lehman in preparing the clothing for shipment. Many part-time workers from churches in the vicinity of the clothing depot give their time freely in mending and packing the clothes received. Large quantities of clothing are being stored against the day when relief opportunities will open further in the Near East, China, and the European Continent.

Three cutting rooms have been set up in the United States and one in Canada. It is the purpose of these to offer facilities for supplying sewing circles with cut garments for both adults and children. Sewing circles may write to the nearest cutting room to learn the cost and variety of garments that can be supplied; the cutting rooms purchase the cloth at quantity prices, cut it, and sell it to the sewing circles at cost. Sewing circles should send the finished garments directly to the Akron Clothing Depot. The location and person in charge of each cutting room in the United States are listed below; the Canadian room is omitted since the Canadian clothing work i being organized separately with a clothing depot a Kitchener, Ontario.

Kalona, Iowa—Mrs. John J. Hershberger, Kalona, Iowa.

Bluffton, Ohio—Mrs. J. S. Schultz, Bluffton, Ohi

Specific relief needs include both soap and clothing; a good laundry soap recipe is given in the Gift in Kind folder. Clothing needs include:

Bedding
Coats
Dresses
Handkerchiefs
Layettes Overalls
Pajamas
Raincoats
Sewing Materials
Shirts Shoes
Skirts
Slips
Stockings Suits
Sweaters Trousers
Underwear
Yard Goods

Articles not needed are: hats, ties, silk stocking silk underwear, impractical dresses, handbags, an odds and ends. Clothing should be mended an cleaned before being sent to the Clothing Depo Send nothing that you and your family would n be happy to receive and wear if you were in th recipients' circumstances.

Clothing should not be taken to the collectio centers for C.P.S. food contributions, but should sent directly to the Akron Depot.

That this whole service of providing clothing f relief and food for our C.P.S. camps may be " Christ's name and to His glory" should be in o thoughts and prayers.

"Every man according as he purposeth in h heart, so let him give; not grudgingly or of nece sity; for God loveth a cheerful giver. And God able to make all grace abound toward you; that y always having all sufficiency in all things, ma abound to every good work." (II Cor. 9:7,8).

FOREIGN MISSIONS

P. H. RICHERT, Secretary

Safely from India to the U. S.

A telegram came to the General Conference Headquarters, Newton, Kansas, on May 23. It announced the safe arrival of Eva Pauls and Martha Burkhalter, missionaries to India and Elinor Thiessen, the daughter of Missionary John Thiessens. The telegram was sent from Boston, Massachusetts, and stated that the three had just arrived. The telegram was sent at 5:22 a.m.

Miss Eva Pauls is a member of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas. She has been stationed at Champa. There she has served as a nurse in the general hospital and also in the hospital for lepers.

Miss Martha Burkhalter, is a member of the First Mennonite Church, Berne, Indiana. She has been serving as the Principal of the Bible School at the Janjgir mission station.

Elinor Thiessen is the oldest daughter of missionary John Thiessens. The Thiessens are stationed at Basna. Elinor completed high school at Landour. She plans to continue her training here in the United States. Her two brothers are in this country. They are both in C.P.S.

GOOD NEWS

The following cablegram has arrived from missionary F. J. Isaac.

"Fit, and all well. Praise God."

We interpret this that they have arrived in India safely, but were not permitted to say so plainly. Nor were they permitted to mention the place from where the cable was sent. All the same we praise God with them.

CORRECTIONS

In the report of the session of the Foreign Mission Board the name of one board member was omitted by oversight, namely that of Brother D. J. Unruh, for which we apologize. While the report says that all members were present, they are not all mentioned by name.

In the resolution for the Montana budget the native minister's salary should have been kept separate thus:

Native Minister's salary	$180.00
Budget	80.00
Total	$260.00

(The total is correct, but the budget appears too large as reported.)

PEACE SECTION NOTES

Draft Regulations for Men in Agriculture

"In line with the recommendations of the Senate Agricultural Committee, Selective Service has dropped the 16-unit guide system in determining whether a farmer is essential and thereby eligible for a II-C deferment. The regulations now define 'essential' as registrants who are necessary to an agricultural occupation, who are regularly engaged in such occupation, whose occupation is essential to the war effort, and for whom no suitable replacement can be found.

"IV-F farmers, or those qualified for limited service only, may also be reclassified II-C, in which case they carry the designation II-C (F) or II-C (L)."

DAILY DEVOTIONAL MESSAGES

By Wilbur B. Nussbaum, Berne, Indiana

The Cross of Calvary—“But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world.” Gal. 6:14.

JUNE 1—The Need of Calvary—“Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.” Rom. 5:12. God created man after his own image and likeness. He was perfect and had perfect fellowship with God, but man fell by sin and sin passed upon all men. This resulted in spiritual death and separation from God. The only way man can be brought back into fellowship with God is by Calvary. “. . . And without shedding of blood is no remission.” Heb. 9:22.

JUNE 2—The Plan of God—“Forasmuch as ye know that ye are not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, . . .But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot.” I Pet. 1:18-19. Immediately after the fall of man, God provided a way back into fellowship and communion with Him, by means of blood sacrifice. “Unto Adam also and to his wife did the Lord God make coats of skins, and clothed them.” Gen. 3:21. From the tree in the garden to the tree that appeared upon Calvary, there was redemption through the blood sacrifice of a lamb that was without spot or blemish, looking forward to the coming of the Son of God. “For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.” John 3:17.

JUNE 3—The Man of Calvary-“. . . Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.” John 1:29. Christ hath appeared as PROPHET, declaring the will of God, as the GOOD SHEPHERD, sacrificing for His own, and for our ATONEMENT, dying for us in substitution. Jesus said, “And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.” John 12:32. “For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus.” I Tim. 2:5. “For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast.” Eph. 2:8-9.

JUNE 4—Grace—“Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus.” Rom. 3:24. Grace is everything for nothing to those who do not deserve anything. In grace we are justified and God looks at us who are in Christ Jesus as though we had never sinned one single sin. “Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.” Rom. 5;1.

JUNE 5—Saved—“That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved.” Rom. 10:9. Salvation is in three tenses. (1) The believer has been saved from the guilt and penalty of sin. (2) The believer is being saved from the habit and dominion of sin. (3) The believer will be saved from the very presence of sin. “So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.” Heb. 9:28.

JUNE 6—Faith—“So then faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God.” Rom. 10:17. Saving faith is not a natural possession of mankind, but is imputed by God upon the hearing of His word. It is up to every individual to exercise it unto salvation and to believe the record that God has given of His Son. “And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son.” I John 5:11. “That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love.” Eph. 3:17.

JUNE 7—Not of Yourselves—“Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost.” Titus 3:5. Good works have no part in meriting salvation. “We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them.” Eph. 2:10. Salvation is a work of God for man and not a work of man for God. “Salvation belongeth unto the Lord.” Psa. 3:8. “For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.” Luke 19:10.

JUNE 8—Gift—“For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.” Rom. 6:23. A gift is something you have received for which you did not work nor do you have to do something to retain it. It is yours unconditionally, otherwise it is not a gift. “Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.” II Cor. 9:15. “But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name.” John 1:12.

JUNE 9—Not of Works—“And if by grace, then is it no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace: otherwise work is no more work.” Rom. 11:6. If salvation would be 99 per cent grace and 1 per cent works, it would cease to be grace. Good works are not a means to obtain nor retain salvation. They are the result of salvation. “Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt.” Rom. 4:4. “Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began.” II Tim. 1:9.

JUNE 10—Boast—“Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay: but by the law of faith.” Rom. 3:27. Man is of a boastful nature and if his works would have the smallest part in meriting salvation, he would boast now and throughout all eternity of his accomplishments. “But now ye rejoice in your boastings: all such rejoicing is evil.” James 4:16. “That no flesh should glory in his presence . . . He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.” I Cor. 1:29, 31.

It Pays to Hear God's Call

By John P. Suderman

In the spring of 1919 while I was attending the illsboro Bible Academy, Hillsboro, Kansas, where ev. J. H. Epp was teaching, God spoke to me and lled me to become a missionary. The following fall entered Bethel Academy at Newton to prepare yself for teaching and possible missionary work ter in life.

From my early childhood days I enjoyed playing he old parlor organ in my parental home. The rents gave me opportunity to study music. Ar-ngements were made for a music teacher to come the home every week, so that I could take lessons. Bethel this training was continued. But it seemed me that there was a conflict between my desire be a musician and my desire to be a missionary. s often happens to young people who are going to hool, discouragements came into my life. I gave the thought of becoming a missionary and decided continue to study music. No sooner had I given the idea of becoming a missionary, then my love r music began to wane. I continued my schooling, ill planning to teach school after graduating.

One day I read in the church paper of the death a young missionary in India, by the name of oah Burkhalter. At the same time one of my iends was ordained for home mission work. God poke to me again, and since my desire to be a usician had left me I felt there was nothing to nflict. No sooner had I promised to follow the ord into the mission field, when He awakened my esire again to continue the study of music. And came to me that the two must go hand in hand.

I then consecrated all musical training unto God nd His service.

When Mrs. Suderman and I received the call to nter the mission work among the Hopi Indians in orthern Arizona, an old sister in the church re-arked that we would now bury all that music and one would receive the benefit of it. We went Oraibi to where God called us. Everything there as new to us. When on the first Sunday we met he Christians, Fred Johnson had charge of the eeting. In introducing us, he said, "We have been aying for a missionary who can play the organ, nd here he is."

There are many opportunities in a mission field the line of music. Missionaries and Hopis alike ome and want to learn to play the piano so they n play for the services. At Oraibi we now have young girl who was willing to learn and she plays hoir and cantata numbers. A missionary's useful-ess is greatly increased by his knowledge of music.

New Series to Begin

Watch for the new series entitled "From Gerald Stucky's Scrap Book." In this series we will present excerpts of the letters that Brother Stucky sent home to his wife while he was on the 25,000 mile trip through Latin America. Through these excerpts the reader can travel along through South America. Many interesting observations and experiences await you. A good map of Latin America would add to an understanding of the series. We hope to present this new series soon.

I AM YOUR HYMNAL

I AM your hymnal.

I spend my days in the rack in front of you or on the seat beside you and I am always at your command.

When you reach for me I am always there, ready to open at your will.

By the mystery of the printer's art I have snared the wisdom and the idealism of the ages and hold them in store ready to let them leap at your will from my pages to nestle in your responsive heart.

The beautiful vision of the poets, the heart-throbs of the mystics, the dreams of the prophets, and the constructive purpose of the social pioneer—all these are mine—to be made yours.

Men of your own faith, and those of other faiths, broaden your life as they speak to you through me.

By the strange art of printed signs and symbols great music has been captured as it overflowed the souls of the musicians of all time and is released from me to tremble in the air about you and enter your life.

P. R. Hayward

FOLLOW THE GLEAM

Young people everywhere have to make many decisions which have a far-reaching influence in their lives. Very often these decisions do not come easily and cause a great deal of perplexity. "It is so hard to know what to do."

Decisions can be made on many different kinds of basis, some of them helpful and others mis-leading. However, there is one basis on which all decisions should be made. That is, "What does God say?" Even that is not always easy to ascertain. Yet God gives unto everyone a gleam of light which is the highest and purest guidance for the individual. Many lesser motives and desires may want to detract from that gleam of light, but it pays to "follow the gleam."

Read on this page the story written by an experienced missionary, who tells of his experience in heeding the call of God. We must "follow the gleam" if we would live at our best is his testimony. —rw.

Your Work With God in Korba

By Adah B. Wenger

Now that you have had a refresher glimpse of the Southern-most station of the General Conf. Menn. Mission field in India, we follow with a brief review of the one farthest north, the Korba station. If you are interested in the history of beginnings in Korba, your best source of information will be found in Korba items and pictures in the book Twenty-five Years With God in India, especially in the chronology pp. 208-240.

I have done a bit of reviewing of the book myself, and here are a few of the words which stand out, in the picture of Korba: "beautiful," "hills," "rivers," and these are some of the unchanging facts. If those who went to survey the field more than twenty-five years ago were to go there now, they would find much of what characterizes Korba still the same. It is still a beautiful place, one of the most beautiful of the entire mission.

In the life of the village certain features have been as unchanging as the hills and the streams. There is the Rani in her palace; (see p. 173) some of the same old shops and merchants in the village; the silk weavers still weave; the potters still model the clay; but a new generation is taking over the varied tasks from the hands of the venerated fathers, and as the life of the village moves on there are at least in some respects marks of a certain spirit of progress. Two of the high points of community interest during recent years, have been the celebration when the Emperor King George the VIth conferred upon the Rani, the actual title of Queen of Korba State in 1941; and the other was the welcoming of the long-looked-for grandson of the Queen, whose coming had been almost despaired of after the long wait, until his four sisters had arrived one by one, year by year.

As the life of the village has moved on, for the most part in its quiet routine of living, much in the same way Korba Mission station has moved on—nothing striking or outstanding in the way of its development, but a quiet influence in the community, as through the years Rev. and Mrs. Suckau, who began the work there have been followed in turn by Rev. and Mrs. E. B. Steiner, Mrs. Mary Burkhard, Rev. and Mrs. Duerkson, Miss Augusta Schmidt, Rev. and Mrs. Paul Wenger, and Rev. and Mrs. Aron Jantzen, each serving the community and district in their own God-given capacity. Our Lord Jesus Christ has been the Center, and His Light has radiated out through ministrations of the Word and prayer, ministries of healing through simple medical aid and prayer, and the widening of horizons to many children by means of education. And through all the years there has been a slow but steady undercurrent of progression making it ever more clear what the church of the Living Christ is, in contrast to the darkness of paganism.

The church of Korba has had its share of struggles and difficulties from within and from without. It has felt the lack of stimulus, inspiration, and help which has been brought to the churches of the other stations by trained Christian leaders and workers in various fields of activity, who have come from many parts of India to fill places of responsibility in institutional types of work. Korba has no institutions except a small dispensary and a primary school. The church has felt also the stinging impact of Christianity's bitterest foe in India, namely the Arya Samaj—a modern reform movement of Hinduism, whose object is not only to oppose anyone's becoming a Christian, but to try to get Christians to revert back to Hinduism. Several years ago they succeeded in persuading three Christian families to recant.

On the other hand, one of the very heartening forward steps has been the installation of an Indian pastor, Rev. J. R. Singh, who together with his devoted wife has given very splendid, faithful service to the church during the past three years. He has

Group gathered for the dedication of the church building at Korba so supervised the work of the primary school, having ad many years of school experience. Korba also has definite interest in the home mission work of the dian Church, one of the fields of which is located Kendai, about thirty miles north of Korba station. ne of Korba's own sons, Mr. I. K. Nandi is the wly elected pastor of the church there.

The chief field of activity of the Korba Mission ation has remained throughout the years, that of strict evangelistic effort. There are many centers roughout the area where touring parties, missionaries d Indian Christian evangelists and Bible women ave pitched their tents, in the thick shade of mango oves, near an Indian village or group of villages. nly those who have had the experience know the essing and joy of these camp programs: the quiet treats for Bible study and spiritual fellowship; the ily trek over rice field banks, perhaps through ngles to speak, sing, and mingle in happy friendliss with the men, women, and children of many rrounding villages; the joy of the hearty welcome the villagers, the inflow and outflow of human terest and kindliness, and most of all the deeplytisfying, inner assurance that we are on a mission hich touches the very springs of life, trying to minisr to the supreme need of all mankind—the need of Eternal Life.

Our efforts, we confess, are not always, (or more truly, not even often) crowned with great manifestations of success, but who can measure the growth of the Kingdom of God among men. On the other hand we do often have the most heartening experiences even in little incidents along the way, which often come as real surprises and with a freshness like that of morning breezes remind us that we are busy with things that live on and on in the human heart. One such delightful surprise came some years ago. A beautiful village girl (Hindu) of about fourteen was listening to Christian women singing. She remarked that she knows some Christian songs, and mentioned the name of one which she remembered. She was invited to join in the singing of it, but remained silent and seemed puzzled as the first few verses were being sung. Then it occurred to the singers that they were using a new tune, recently learned. Changing over to the old tune, the girl's face lighted with a smile and she was delighted because now she was assured that she really did know the song. She had learned it seven years earlier from a Christian touring camp. Does the seed live and grow? God bless and prosper the efforts of Korba mission station

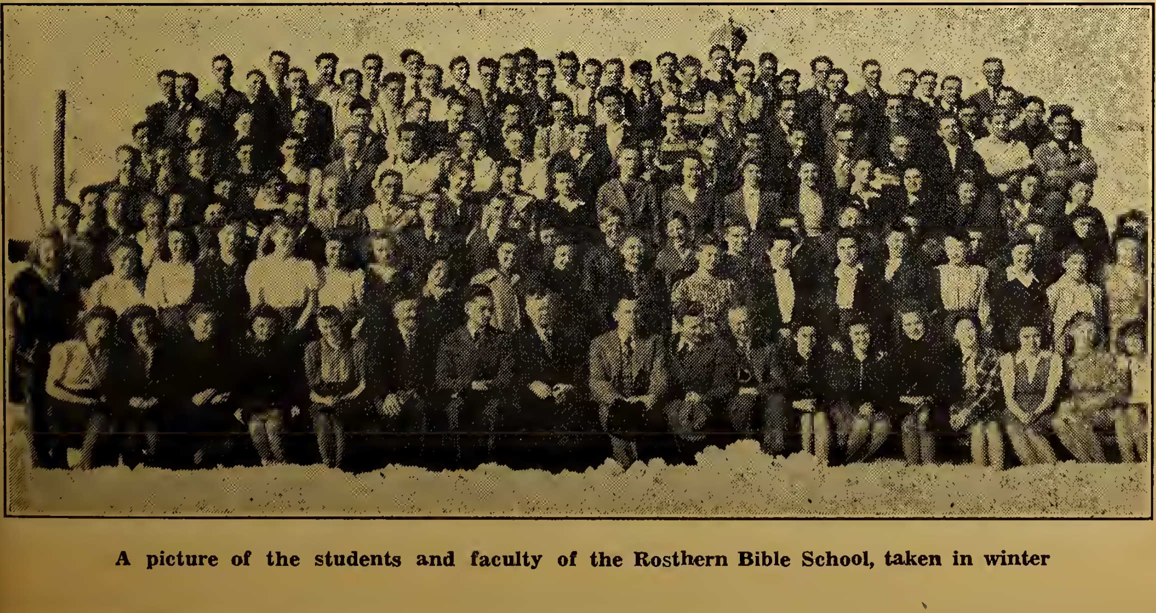
Peeking in at the Close of the Rosthern Bible School

The General Conference Mennonites of Canada have Bible School at Rosthern, Saskatchewan. It closed th a two-day conference this year. From the report seems that such a conference is a very practical and rthwhile way of closing the school year.

On the morning of the first day the students revealed eir similarity to students in Mennonite schools elsehere. As the school annual was distributed there was hectic rush to get the signatures of fellow students d faculty members. An observer suggested, "Shared ppiness is doubled happiness." Also in their hearts as that anticipation of beginning the homeward trip. J. G. Rempel, the principal of the school, then made e opening. The group sang a number out of the new erman Mennonite hymnary that the Canadian conference has produced. Brother Rempel pointed out in his talk, based on Dan. 6:11, the importance of the open window toward Jerusalem—that is, the value of continued, intimate fellowship with God. Then Elder David Toews gave a paper on "What Does the World Need Today?" He particularly emphasized the Mennonite stand of non-resistance and the young men who were upholding it. He pointed out the need for peace in the world today and referred to the sacrifices of our forefathers. He concluded with the admonition to be steadfast and unmovable in the Lord. A lively discussion followed. In the afternoon Elder Gerhard Epp pointed out in his paper on "What Does Our Church Need?" that home missions are as important as foreign missions. The four basic points of his paper were: 1. A



A picture of the students and faculty of the Rosthern Bible School, taken in winter thorough knowledge of God's Word. 2. A thorough knowledge of the history of our church. 3. Christian nurture in the home. 4. Caring for isolated church members and young men in the service. In his paper on "What Does Our Youth Need?" Elder Johann Regier suggested: Deeper character, for superficiality is harmful; more love to Jesus and to one's neighbor, and more homesickness for the "home over there." Rev. Jacob Gerbrandt gave the concluding message for the afternoon. He emphasized the significance of that learned in school and then pled that the students might apply their learning in the circumstances of life.

The closing ceremony of the school was held in the church in the evening. Next morning the conference continued, and Rev. H. T. Klaassen spoke on "What Does the Church Expect of the Summer Bible School?" This was followed by a paper on "What Does the Summer Bible School Worker Expect from the Church?" by Marie Klaassen. Rev. G. Elias reported on the progress of the evangelization work in northern Saskatchewan. In the afternoon there were some more reports on the Summer Bible school work, which is one of the major projects of the Canadian young people.

It was revealed how in some communities there were young people who would like to go to the Rosthern Bible School but who are financially unable to do so. It was suggested that all C.E. societies might in the near future hold an offering for such needy students. Several other reports revealed how the young people in our Canadian churchs are holding meetings of their own and how they are helping along in the work of the church. The Bible school work for this summer was also discussed. Young people go out into various communities to teach these Bible schools, which are very much appreciated by many.

Another school year for Rosthern Bible School is history. Already young people and older ones too are thinking of the next one.

YOUTH JOTTINGS

—Miriam Muller, a member of the First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California, is secretary to John Nevin Sayre of the Fellowship of Reconciliation. This organization has its headquarters in New York City. Miriam writes, "We have been having a number of fellows from the Mennonite C.P.S. unit at Marlboro, New Jersey, come in on their days off to help in the literature department as we have been unable to find a person who could devote full time to it."

—William Juhnke, who was instrumental in starting the Western District Tidings and who has worked very hard as its editor for several years, has now resigned as editor of the Tidings. Mrs. A. T. Mueller, North Newton, Kansas, is editing the forthcoming issue.

—Hazel Senner, Mildred Waltner, and Stella Waltner of the Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota, plan to work in the mental hospital at Ypsilanti, Michigan, this summer. Their work will be under the auspices of the Mennonite Central Committee. Brother Willard Claassen is pastor of the Salem Church.

—Pulitzer Prize Winner a C.O. "Fred Carlton Mabee, Jr., of the New Lisbon, New Jersey State Training School unit, whose new book The American Leonardo: The Life of Samuel F. B. Morse was awarded a $500 cash prize and the Pulitzer distinction 'most distinguished American biography of the year.' The brief biography in the Times pointed out that Mabee was born in China, had been in Japan, Canada and the U.S. before he was three and had been around the world before he was nine. He is a graduate of Bates College and received his Ph.D. from Columbia University." —The Reporter

—Ronald von Riesen, pastor of the Walton Mennonite Church, Walton, Kansas, is doing some inspiring things in his rural pastorate. Brother von Riesen graduated from Bethel College in 1942 and then took two extra years of ministerial studies there. Long before he had graduated from college he had been instrumental in the organization of the Walton church. The church had no meetinghouse. Now it has a beautiful, simple frame structure in which to meet. The pastor has worked right along in the construction and financing of it. Under his leadership the church has prospered. The church is happy to have such a pastor. Recently the von Riesens moved from their Bethel College campus home to a farm home two miles from Walton. They now get their mail on Rural Route 1, (Walton, Kansas.) Fifty hens were given them recently. Brother von Riesen purchased 300 young chicks, but the congregation furnishes the feed for them and the hens. Two cows give their milk contentedly twice a day. They are also a gift. It seems that some pigs will also be forthcoming. Brother von Riesen reports that it is invigorating to do chores and that they are very happy on their farmstead. Here is a case in reverse. Many Mennonite ministers who serve rural churches live in town and go to the meetinghouse in the country, but the von Riesens live in the country and go to their meetinghouse in the little village of Walton.

—Ruthabel Rickman, a member of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, Newton, Kansas, will give a concert in Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas, on June 9, 8:30 P.M. Miss Rickman is featured as a coloratura soprano, violinist, and pianist. "Miss Rickman graduated from Bethel College in 1941. She is a member of the National Honor Society and was one of Bethel's seniors elected to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities. She has won many honors for her achievements in music, including recognition in the National Hall of Fame of a Music Teachers National Association in New York City. She was a member and soloist of the Bethel College a cappella choir and participated in concert tours in many states." Among her teachers have been: Walter H. Hohmann, piano; Miss Elsa Haury, voice; and Mrs. Verna Kaufman Goering, pipe organ. "Her gracious manner and her genuine friendliness, together with her fine talents, have endeared her to all who know her."

—Voluntary draft of Nurses: All the nations' registered nurses have been tallied and classified in an availability ladder much similar to that of Selective Service.

The classifications range from Class I, those "available for military service" to Class V, those not available for either military or emergency civilian work because of physical disability, age, or other reasons." Each class has several sub-divisions such as married, unmarried, no children under 14, etc. The ladder also provides for nurses "available for relocation" and those "essential until a replacement can be secured."

In answer to NSBRO questions, the War Manpower Commission, under whose Procurement and Assignment Service the classification was set up denied that there was any compulsion connected with the procedure and said that no legal machinery existed whereby the Commission could enforce its decisions.

Classification Notices

The notice of classification sent out to each nurse, however, does not stress the voluntary aspects. It reads: "If classified as essential, stay in your present position until you can be replaced."

"If classified as available you should get in touch with the Secretary of your Red Cross Recruitment Committee at once, and make application for appointment to the Army or Navy Nurse Corps."

At least two C.O. nurses have been in doubt as to their status in the procedure and have written to NSBRO to discover what provisions have been made for conscientious objectors.

In reply, the War Manpower Commission stated:

"There will be no attempt to force anyone into the services who has conscientious scruples against it. The only compulsion is a nurse's desire to serve." —The Reporter.

—Young people of the Mennonite churches at Deer Creek and Medford, Oklahoma, will have a youth rally on June 2, 6 to 10 P. M. Lubin Jantzen of the Oklahoma Bible Academy will be the guest speaker. The meeting will be held half-way between the two churches, in A. H. Buhler's pasture. Besides the program there will be a wiener roast and games.

—Correction: Ernst Harder will not spend the summer in South Dakota. He will work for a construction company in Ohio. He worked for this company a past summer. Before leaving Ernst reported that the company had written and told him that he could write a check on the company and fill in any amount that he felt he needed. An incident such as this reminds one of the faith that people once had quite freely in Mennonites. Let us have a revival.

—Selective Service eases requirements for ministerial classification: An order by Selective Service some time ago made it very difficult for young Protestant ministerial candidates to continue their training. Upon protest by Protestants the policy has now been liberalized to coincide with that accorded the Catholic Church. We gather from the Local Board Memorandum No. 187 that a student eighteen years old can get his IV-D, ministerial, classification if he is enrolled in a theological or divinity school which is recognized as such by Selective Service and if he is taking a full-time and accelerated ministerial course. (Bethel College is recognized as such a theological school by Selective Service.) The ministerial student must submit certain information to get his classification, but difficult technicalities have been stripped from this.

—C.P.S. camp at Denison, Iowa, to become relief training school: Plans have been made to conduct a relief training school at the Denison camp. Roy Umble will be the educational director, while the school as a whole will be under the supervision of Brother Melvin Gingerich, professor of history at Bethel College. Brother Gingerich will continue his teaching work, but will visit the school every two weeks or so. Those who will train in the school hope to do relief work after the war if no way opens sooner.

YOUR WORK WITH GOD IN KORBA

throughout the wide areas of its far reaching district.

Rev. and Mrs. Aron Jantzen have had full charge of Korba during the past two and one-half years. They have introduced a definite program of child evangelism, which has been the means of sowing the gospel seed into the hearts of many little ones, which we trust will bring them and many others with them into the Father's Kingdom. The field is large. The workers are few. Pray.

CORRESPONDENCE

SWISS MENNONITE CHURCH
Alsen, North Dakota

We can report many blessings. Our attendance has increased. Last Sunday the Sunday School register showed 100, and quite a few more came in for the preaching service. We are indeed richly fed with the Word. On Mother's Day Brother Flickenger brought a timely message, based on Proverbs 33:10-13. The C.E. gave a Mother's Day program in the evening. Sister Flickinger gave a theme on motherhood. On May 13 funeral services were held for Johnnie Spenst, who was found dead from a heart attack. He was a member of the Bethel Church, of which P. Dahlenberg is pastor. We still haven't had a good rain. The grain is lying in dry ground; so is the seed that we planted in our gardens the past week. (written May 18.)

Arthur Wenger to Become Army Chaplain

Rev. Arthur Wenger, pastor of the First Mennonite Church of Shafter, California, left May 18, for Cambridge, Massachusetts to assume duties of an army chaplain.

Enroute he will stop in Idaho to visit his parents and friends for a few days.

We accepted his resignation with the deepest regret, but know that many will be blessed in his new work. May God's guidance be with him.

A large group of young people met Wednesday evening

(May 17) at the home of Vernon Neufeld for a last get-together with Rev. Wenger, advisor of our Y.P.C.E. The evening was spent in playing outdoor games, and after the refreshments a short devotion was held.

We are looking forward to having Hulda Gaede back in our midst for the summer months. She has been attending Bethel College this past school year. —Mrs. Albert Froese, Corr.

GRACE MENNONITE CHURCH
Lansdale, Pennsylvania

We have just closed a series of four evangelistic meetings with our former pastor, Rev. Daniel J. Unruh, as evangelist. He based this series on the first chapter of Colossians. One of the facts he brought out was that over ten percent of the members of all churches were in the armed forces of our country today. Why cannot we send out and support ten per cent of our members as ministers of the gospel and missionaries after the war? This is a challenge to the Mennonite Church as a whole, and we cannot close our eyes to its importance. We may think this too high a goal, but why count the cost of saving souls? It costs many times more to maintain one in the armed forces to destroy life than one in the forces of Christ to save life. Churches rise and fall in the way they support home and foreign missionaries and evangelists. Today we should be training those who after the war will carry the gospel to the ends of the earth, and this may be sooner than we expect. Lift up your eyes and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest. The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; Pray ye therefore the Lord of the Harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest. What is our answer?

Another of the highlights of this series of meetings was the mortgage note burning service. On the last night, Wednesday May 10, in a beautiful service we burned the notes which had been given to cover our indebtedness. This suggests a reminiscence of our history. The mission was formed February 2, 1928, formally organized February 23, 1928. We met in different homes from that time until July 25, 1929, when the Evangelical Church allowed us to use their Church on Mt. Vernon St. On November 7, 1929, we were notified by the trustees of the Evangelical Church that they had an offer for the church and if we wanted to buy it we should decide at once. So on November 11, we purchased the building and began to make the necessary repairs. With the assurance of some financial aid from the Home Mission Committees of General Conference and Eastern District Conference we extended a call to Rev. D. J. Unruh who took charge on January 1, 1930.

The cost of our church plant was about $10,000. Several years later we purchased a parsonage for $5,000. Adjoining our Church was a junk yard which harbored rodents and was unsightly. About eight years ago we purchased this property for $1,500 and changed it to a parking lot. This lot will allow for expansion in the future and on it is a building used to house our Boy Scout Troop. After fourteen years as a congregation we are debt free.

Two of our members are missionaries of the Scripture Memory Mountain Mission of Kentucky. Another is on a forced furlough from China. Two families are in the gospel ministry, and one of our members is a student at Westminster Theological Seminary.

We know have 249 active members, 45 inactive members, who through distance or other reasons cannot attend regularly. We expect to receive three more into the fellowship of our church on Pentecost through the rite of baptism. Forty-one of our members are either in the armed forces of our country, or in Civilian Public Service Camps and we have two members enlisted as Cadet Nurses. Besides these nine members of our Sunday School are in the armed forces.

Several weeks ago, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Buller spoke to us on relief work in France and next Sunday Rev. Gerald Stucky will speak of the work in South America. —Corr.

JOTTINGS

—A Total of 3,650 C.O.'s had been sentenced to twenty-one of our twenty-four federal penal institutions by April 1944. "... about sixty per cent of all C.O.'s in prison are members of the Jehovah's Witnesses sect, a majority of whom would accept no other classification than 4-D, ministerial exemption."

—Sam J. Goering spoke to the Bethel College Women's Association on May 22. He related some of the experiences that he had on his trip of over 30,000 miles that took him far into the interior of free China.

—"College Sunday" was observed on May 7 by the First Mennonite Church, Hutchinson, Kansas. President Ed. G. Kaufman of Bethel College spoke, and an offering was held for the school.

—The American Friends Service Committee is glad to announce that it now has permission from the American Government to purchase food in Portugal and Switzerland for children in France. The licenses permit the transfer of $25,000 to Portugal and $100,000 to Switzerland for these purchases. American Quaker representatives in both these neutral countries have been asked to expedite these shipments as quickly as possible. Distribution of these food supplies will be made under the supervision of the International Red Cross by Secours Quaker, the relief agency administered by French Friends.

—Rev. Olin A. Krehbiel wrote on May 17, "Following up the conference concern last Wednesday our ministers were called upon to spend an afternoon in prayer for Bluffton College, and those who could gathered at the Lansdale Church to wait upon the Lord in prayer. Our desire is that God might get the glory and that His will may be done. We hope that love and truth may prevail."

—The Kansas Mennonite Sunday School Convention until this year included only the Sunday Schools of Kansas. According to a statement by the President of the Convention, Brother Clyde Dirks, the convention now includes all the General Conference churches of the Western District which takes in churches in Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, and Nebraska.

—May 21 was a big day for the First Mennonite Church of Hutchinson when sixteen new members were received into the fellowship of the church. Some by baptism and some by letter. This brings the membership up to 145. The pastor is also teaching a class in catechism. These and others will be received in the near future. Rev. C. H. Dirks was elected President of the Ministerial Association of Hutchinson, Kansas, for the coming year. Hutchinson has some over forty churches. This shows a fine spirit of consideration for the churches to elect a C.O. in times like these.

—"A pastor who addressed 30,000 cadets of the air corps and other men in service in fifteen different fields testifies that the commanding officers all said virtually the same thing. 'Your address is of the greatest help to our men. We know how to teach the techniques of flying and fighting, but you ministers are the ones to give them the vision and faith which create courage to carry through to the end!' "

—Brother Roland Goering to take over McPherson field: A number of Mennonite families in and around McPherson have met for services for some time. The Home Mission Committee of the Western District supplied the ministers for these services. Now this committee has asked Brother Roland Goering to take over the field. He will take up the work by June 1. The group is renting the McPherson College chapel for the summer months, and services will be held there. The Home Mission Committee feels that he McPherson field shows much promise. Brother Goering, who graduated from seminary this spring, is a member of the Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas.

—The Grace Mennonite Church, Enid, Oklahoma, has extended a call to Brother Ben Rahn to be its new pastor. The call came through the Home Mission Committee of the Western District. This church has been without a pastor since Brother Henry Harder resigned to take over the work at Geary. Rev. August Schmidt has been supplying it for sometime. Brother Rahn will probably take up the work in early summer. Rev. and Mrs. Rahn and son Ivan will live in the church parsonage. Before taking up this work Brother Rahn will be ordained to the ministry. He is now a member of the Immanuel Mennonite Church, Los Angeles, California. However, the Rahns come from the Mountain Lake community and are visiting relatives and friends there at present. For the last two years Brother Rahn has been taking a ministerial course at Bethel College.

—Brother A. Warkentin is considerably improved. So states Brother Melvin Gingerich who recently visited him n Chicago. Brother Warkentin is able to take walks although he still limps slightly. He reads much and is busy producing some maps to illustrate Mennonite history. Dr. and Mrs. Warketin and daughter, Edith, are living together. The Dr. John Warkentins, who lived n Chicago, for some time, are now living in Washington, D.C., where Dr. Warkentin is rendering medical service for the government.

—Brother Sam Goering speaks at conference for training leaders of relief training schools. Brother Sam Goering left Newton with Brother Melvin Gingerich on May 25 for Winona Lake, Indiana, where a two day conference was held in regard to relief work. Brother Goering who just recently returned from a trip of over 30,000 miles into Free China, shared his experiences of that trip. Brother Gingerich took part in the conference as one of the leaders of the forthcoming schools for C.P.S. nen.

—Rev. Arthur Wenger and Miss Doris Kellenbarger were married on Monday evening, May 29. The Rev. Arthur Wenger has been pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Shafter, California, for the past several years, and Miss Kellenbarger has taught in the Newton, Kansas, city school system for the past few years. Both are graduates of Bethel College. Brother Wenger is planning to serve in the chaplaincy of the armed forces. A statement by Rev. Wenger will appear in the forthcoming issue of The Mennonite.

—Brother Willard Claassen, pastor of the Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota, plans to spend the time from June 19 to July 21 in Chicago. There he plans to take some seminary courses that are especially designed for pastors of rural churches.

—The Mennonite Choral Society of Berne, Indiana, will give its annual rendition of Haydn's oratorio "The Creation" on Sunday evening, June 4.

—First Mennonite Church, Butterfield, Minnesota: A recent guest speaker was the Rev. Peter Reimer, missionary candidate to South America. The Rev. and Mrs. Reimer and son visited here briefly with relatives, while enroute from Kansas to Canada. The Mission Committee, which is elected annually, met recently to make plans for the remaining Sunday morning monthly mission offerings of the year. Although places were designated at this time for the various offerings, the plans are flexible and if different and more urgent needs should arise, the places may be changed by the committee. The Ladies Mission Circle of our church makes quarterly donations of clothing for relief purposes through the M.C.C. —C. S. Harder, Corr.

—Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas: Marie and Ella Wedel are helping teach thirty youngsters in the daily Bible school. Miss Marie Wedel taught Bible school on the Hopi mission field in Arizona last summer.

—Rev. John P. Suderman recently gave a talk on the Hopis of Arizona to the Berne, Indiana, chamber of commerce. He related "many interesting facts about their customs, including ceremonies, weddings, divorces, deaths, burials, their agricultural pursuits, education, superstitions, homes, food, etc."

—Bethel Hospital to add third floor, Newton, Kansas, May 5: Because of the crowded conditions which have existed at our hospital during the past year and especially through the winter months, the annual meeting of our society, held February 8, decided to solicit funds for the completion of the third floor of our new hospital addition, for the purchase of new x-ray equipment, and for the liquidation of our indebtedness.

The War Production Board has granted the necessary authorization for the completion of our third floor and has also granted the preference ratings to purchase the necessary equipment.

It has become part of hospital history and state regulation that whenever expansion of hospital facilities and renewing of equipment is involved, the necessary funds for such purpose are not to come from patient income but must come from other sources. In charitable institutions, the revenue received from patients is to be reserved for current expenses only. It is evident, therefore, that in any larger undertaking, we are dependent upon the good will and support of our friends in the church and community.

It is estimated that the complete cost of the third floor addition will be $15,000, and figures obtained from manufacturers of x-ray equipment indicate that the cost of new x-ray equipment for the hospital will approximate $8,500.

—Marvin Dyck, a member of the C.P.S. unit serving at Duke University Hospital, Durham, North Carolina, is being transferred to the C.P.S. unit in Puerto Rico. See Mennonites of February 8 and May 9 for information about Marvin and the article that he wrote. He is a member of the Emmaus Mennonite Church, Whitewater, Kansas.

—Brother Orlo Kaufman has been asked by the Home Mission Committee of the Western District to serve both the Meadow Mennonite Church at Mingo, Kansas, and the New Friedensberg Mennonite Church at Vona, Colorado, on June 4. Brother Kaufman is a member of the Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas. His wife is also a member of that church.

—First Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Mother's Day was fittingly observed with a short program by the Sunday School at which time a basket of flowers was presented to the oldest and the youngest mother in its membership. Four children were consecrated, following which our pastor gave a heart-searching message on "The Child in the Home." Monday our church opened its vacation Bible school with an enrollment of sixty-six and four teachers. —Mrs. D. P. Ewert, Corr.

—Grace Mennonite Church, Pandora, Ohio: An informal fellowship service was recently held for all the new members received into the church during the past year. Talks were given by some of the new members, and the Sunday School orchestra assisted in the hymn sing. We were also favored recently with a sacred concert by the Bluffton College Girl's Choir under the direction of Prof. Russell A. Lantz.

—Brother Lester Hostetler, pastor of the Bethel College Church, left May 29 to visit seven C.P.S. camps and units in Utah, Idaho, Montana, and Nebraska. His messages will be mainly on Bible subjects, but at several places he will also talk on music and on community living. In his absence Rev. Emerson Schwenk, Mid-West Secretary of the F.O.R. (same position as formerly held by Don Smucker) will bring the message to the Bethel College Church on June 4. In accordance with past custom the children will give their annual program on the following Sunday and there will be no sermon.

EASTERN DISTRICT CONFERENCE NOTES

Souderton—Mr. Ellis Graber from Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota, a member of the graduating class at Hartford Theological Seminary, accepted the call of the church to become its pastor and expects to take up his work in early fall. Sunday, May 28, was set apart to receive the SPECIAL MEMORIAL DAY OFFERING to clear the church indebtedness of $5,300.00.

Fairfield—The Mennonite men's chorus, composed of men from the Fairfield and Mummasburg churches, sang at the annual convention of the Second Sunday School district, May 21.

Second, Phila.—Members of the Germantown and First Church joined our members in a union mission service May 23 at which time Rev. Gerald Stucky, recently returned from South America with Rev. William Voth, and an applicant to the mission field in South America, delivered the message.

Zionsville—Rev. Lester Kriebel, pastor of the Palm Schwenkfelder Church, delivered the message at the Ascension Day service. Miss Esther Iobst of Emmaus, was the guest speaker at the Christian Endeavor meeting, May 21.

Lansdale—The church had a note burning ceremony on May 10. Within thirty days prior to this service, the church paid off $1,250.00 on the lot and church. The parsonage was paid last year. The pastor, Rev. Olin A. Krehbiel, read the Scripture Lesson, then several offered prayer, and the former pastor, the Rev. D. J. Unruh, burned the notes, after which the congregation sang, "Now thank we all our God."

Flatland—On Pentecost Sunday, eight young people that have been receiving catechtical instruction by the pastor, the Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander, will be received into full membership of the church. Miss Eileen R. Mann, who attended Grace Bible Institute this past year is planning to teach summer Bible school in the Ozark Mountains of Missouri and Arkansas for about ten weeks.

West Swamp—Fourteen young people received catechetical instruction by the pastor, the Rev. A. J. Neuenschwander, and were received into full church membership May 28. The combined choirs from Zion Hill, Keller's Church, and West Swamp, under the direction of Claude Harwick, rendered an inspiring program of sacred music in the church on Sunday afternoon, May 14. Miss Wilhelmina Kuyf, missionary to China, spoke on "Women I knew in China" at the Mother's Day supper, sponsored by the Never Idle class and held May 13. The sacred "Service of Worship in Song" conducted by Prof. G. A. "Dad" Lehman, Director of Music and Voice in Colgate-Rochester Divinity School, Rochester, N. Y., since 1930, was presented in the church Sunday evening, May 28. Dad Lehman was formerly head of the music department at Bluffton College.

Quakertown—The Missionary Society sponsored an all-Church Mother and Daughter meeting. About seventy were present, Rev. Gerald Stucky, who recently returned from an inspection trip to South America, showed pictures and told about his trip at the meeting sponsored by the Brotherhood of the Swamp Charge, May 30.

East Swamp—Dan Gilbert, LL.D., author, journalist and lecturer spoke in the East Swamp church May 21. He also delivered a series of lectures in the Quakertown High School Auditorium and the Mennonite Brethren in Christ Church during the week of May 14 to 21 inclusive. These meetings were sponsored by the North Penn Moody Fellowship, Rev. H. D. Burkholder, Chairman, and the Interdenominational Youth Fellowship, Leonard White, President. Rev. Burkholder left for a meeting at Grace Bible Institute after the morning service, May 21.

Allentown—The Christ for Allentown Campaign came to a close in the Allentown High School auditorium Sunday evening, May 21. Rev. Howard G. Nyce, pastor of the First Mennonite Church was a member of the steering campaign. We are glad to present the following report; pre-campaign attendance in two meetings averaged 2,200; the Y.M.C.A. noon meeting attendance amounted to 650; children's meetings attendance was 3,800, the high school attendance was 16,350. There were 509 decisions at the children's meetings; 113 conversions and 63 reconsecrations. 685 people were dealt with personally. No one can tell what good has been accomplished besides, but it is certain that the believers were built up in the faith.

—Howard G. Nyce, Conf. Corr.

Recruiting Young Ministers

By Rev. P. K. Regier, Reedley, California

As we cast a glance backwards over the years of ur Conference activity, we cannot otherwise than ecognize a great debt of gratitude to those faithful inisters who served our churches so well in those rly years. Very few of them ever had an opportun- y of special preparation for their work either in ible schools or in seminaries, and most of them rved without material remuneration. In view of ese facts the services they rendered were remark- ble and all honor and respect to them for their de- otion to their high calling and for their unselfishness sacrificial service.

New Demands

But a new day has come, and with it a deep need r a well-trained ministry in our Conference. Times ave changed, and with these changed conditions emands are placed upon the ministers of our day hich cannot be met without adequate and timely eparation. As we survey the general field of our onference we find that many pulpits today are va- nt, and there is a most urgent need for new recruits ho are willing and ready to step into these positions service and responsibility.

The Need of the Hour

Turn where you will, and the crying need of the our seems to be for "manpower" and ever more nanpower." Schools go without teachers, crops re- ain unharvested in the fields, factories employ in- mpetent and inexperienced laborers, and the busi- ssman is weary and over-worked for the want of fficient help. The world seems to know but one iority, and that priority makes inroads into every ea of human endeavor.

The Priority of God's Kingdom

It is high time that we recognize that there is an- her priority which is higher than that demanded the kingdoms of this world. Unless we are willing revert to heathenism, unless we are willing to rrender our higher Christian culture, unless we are lling to give up civilization itself, we need to sound e trumpet for the priorities of the Kingdom of d. The Christian ministry is calling for recruits en in our Mennonite Conference, and these recruits ist be found or else the spiritual needs of our people ll suffer.

A Challenge

The writer recently had the privilege of attending ounty Christian Endeavor convention. In response to the call TWENTY-FOUR young people stepped out and declared themselves willing to enter into full-time Christian service. Here is a challenge to the young men of our Conference to step out for Christ and say with an Isaiah of old, "Here am I; send me!" Because of old age our comrades in the ministry are dropping the torch one by one. The ranks must be filled with new recruits, young men who have the vision to see the need and the splendid opportunity for one of the finest pieces of service that can be rendered to mankind. The pulpits of our churches must be filled. Young man, are you willing to match yourself with the crying need of the hour?

Placement Committee Ready to Help

The members of the placement Committee of the General Conference stand ready to give encouragement and help to young men who are willing to prepare themselves for the Christian ministry. Not only is this committee anxious to help in placing ministers into vacant positions, and in helping churches to find ministers, but it is also eager to find young, promising men who might be interested in full-time Christian service, and advise them as to needs for preparation, schools, and other problems which might confront them. If you are interested the members of the placement Committee will be only too glad to hear from you. Will you not give this your earnest prayful consideration?

THE WORK OF THE PLACEMENT COMMITTEE

A month ago some of the members of the Placement Committee had an informal meeting in Chicago to discuss the task of our committee and lay plans for its future work. It was decided, among other things, that a series of four articles should appear in our church papers between now and the next session of General Conference to acquaint the church more fully with the task that is before our Committee and what the Conference and the Committee can do to solve these problems. The first of the series of four articles appears herewith. It is one of the timely subjects before all Christian bodies. How shall we get ministers for our churches in the generation just before us.

This first one of the series of articles was prepared by Rev. P. K. Regier, Reedley, California, one of the members of the Placement Committee. It is a clear and convincing presentation of a situation that is definitely confronting our General Conference churches. Let us give it sober thought and prayer. —Paul E. Whitmer

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

P. K. Regier, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Reedley, California, is a member of the Placement Committee of our Conference.

The Malcolm Wengers are our new missionaries, who are stationed at Busby where they are engaging in language study and helping with the work.

I. J. Dick, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, is a member of the Church Unity Committee of our Conference.

J. Winfield Fretz, on leave of absence from his teaching duties at Bethel College, is carrying on investigative studies for the M.C.C., relative to helping Mennonite young people—especially those drafted—get a start in life.

Wilbur Nussbaum, a member of the First Mennonite Church, Berne, Indiana, teaches one of the Bible classes of the mid-week prayer meeting.

Gerald Stucky together with Brother W. C. Voth conducted a 25,000 mile tour of Latin America for the purpose of finding a mission field. If the conference approves the proposed project in Colombia, then he and his wife and Mary Becker will go there to open the work.

William Tiahrt is a very active member of the First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska, and is much interested in conference activities.

Russell L. Mast, pastor of the Deep Run (Pa.) Mennonite Church, is President of the Eastern District Conference.

J. C. Kaufman, pastor of the Emmaus Mennonite Church, Whitewater, Kansas, is Chairman of the Committee on Doctrine and Conduct of our conference.

John Thiessen, well-known missionary to India, is now stationed at Basna, where he has charge of the boys' boarding school.

Earl Salzman is pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Upland, California.

Albert Claassen has been serving the Second Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska.

Paul Shelly, seminary and university student, hopes to get his Ph. D. degree in the near future.

How Shall We Interpret Methodism's War Resolution?

The above title is that of an editorial in the Christian Conservator. The editorial says some significant things so plainly that we quote part of it here:

"The resolution seems to commit the church squarely to the war.

"In other words, the church becomes a party to the war and a participant in it. That certainly violates the Christian teaching. In this great international dispute, the Methodist Church has sided directly with the Allied Nations and becomes a party to the war. The Methodist Church has said to its members in Germany and in Japan, that they are on the wrong side of the international war, and the church either must demand, or rather is demanding, of its members in Axis nations to prove themselves traitors to their own country or else the church is at war with its own people in some of its national units. It seems a precarious attitude.

"As we understand what was done, it was focused through the general conference, not by the ministers but by the lay representatives and that the ministers were not able to get the laymen to see the conflict of their action in relation to the teachings of Christianity. We judge that that is just what did happen. We hold it a precarious matter to place doctrines and principles into the hands of those who have not carefully studied them and who do not know their finer implications.

"This action of the Methodist General Conference is in violation of the former position of the church, and it must therefore follow that if the church is now in the right, it was in error a few years ago . . . We hold that Methodism's position is not an envious one.

"We think it much better that the church, in its capacity as the teacher of the principles of the kingdom of God and as the spiritual guide of people and nations, should act sincerely and truly in its capacity and its own proper sphere. The church has no war duty or obligation to any government—it is international and supernational. Let it teach the things of God. The church is not a citizen of any state—it undertakes to represent and promote the kingdom of God on earth."

Abolition Without War

Was the Civil War necessary to end slavery? Some thorough students of history say "no." They point out that slavery was already on the way out in the South. Leading southerners opposed it. But when the North with considerable self-righteousness began to berate the South, the South underwent a change of heart towards more of a defense of slavery. So the war was fought, and slavery was technically ended, but in actuality and spirit it still exists to a large extent. The South was forced, but it did not have a change of heart. And it is a change of heart that goes to the bottom of things. Things might be different in the South today if there never had been a war to give birth to resentment and hatred.

It is interesting to note that Latin American countries also had slavery and that they did away with it without war. War is not the way to change people. God's love works better.—rw.

OUR DAILY BREAD

Undoubtedly many of us sin in regard to the food that we eat and the famine conditions that exist in the world. However, there is one gross sin in eating that we should not be guilty of. That is the sin of leaving food on the plate to be thrown away into the garbage pail. Certainly it never is befitting for one who petitions God for his daily bread to throw part of it away.

Our government has asked that people desist from this practice for the sake of the war. Should not Christians always be careful about food in appreciation to Him who makes it possible and in compassion to those who have so little of it?

When large portions of meat and potatoes or other food are left on the plate, as is so commonly done in public eating places, then something is definitely wrong. "Give us this day our daily bread so that we may throw part of it away." No, Jesus did not teach his followers to pray like that.—rw.

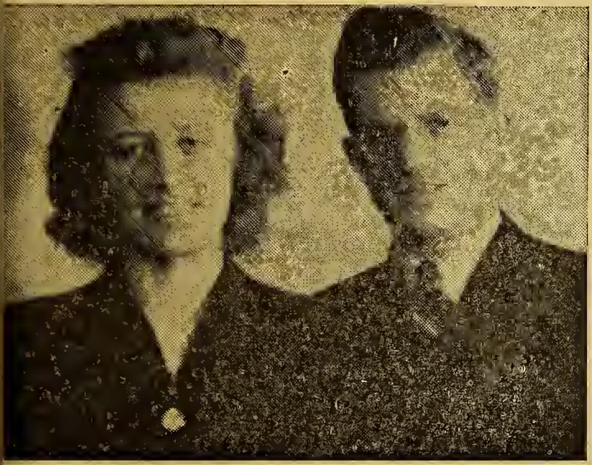
First Impressions

By Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Wenger

Between grassy hills in the valley of the Rosebud es the little town of Busby, Montana. Its one ore stands by the side of the ungravelled highway. eyond, the modern dormitories and classrooms of e Government Schools for Indians make a strange ntrast with the tiny one room log or tar paper bins in which the Cheyennes live. The rest of the wn includes a Catholic church, the Government rm Station, and the neat buildings of the Mennote Mission.

Indian Homes

Indian homes are scattered for miles up and down e valley of the Rosebud river, but many of the dians prefer to live together in the "camp" at sby. As the visitor approaches a home he is ten greeted by a reception committee of several gs. Stepping through the low doorway he will e a stove in the center of the room, two or three ds in the corners, a table, and perhaps a cupboard, esser, and a chair or two. The children, often quite y, will be dressed much like white children. Most the older women, will be seen in blankets and rhaps moccasins.



Mission Activities

The life on the mission station as we have seen it in the short time we have been with Rev. and Mrs. Habegger here at Busby is a busy one indeed. The missionaries buy up every opportunity to present the gospel and teach God's Word in church services, Sunday school, children's meetings, prayer meetings, religious instruction classes at the government school, and sewing classes for Cheyenne women. Their work does not end there; special personal instruction must be given those who want to become Christians. The sick, the discouraged, and the weak, must be visited and helped whenever possible. During the day many Indians come to the missionaries with their needs; it may be an injured finger, a letter to be written, or trouble in the family. For much of this work they find the Cheyenne language indispensable and now have the additional task of taking the new missionaries into the intricacies of this difficult language. The other workers on the field, Dr. and Mrs. Petter and Frank Littlewolf at Lame Deer, Mrs. Valdo Petter at Ashland, and Milton Whiteman at Birney, are just as busy with similar programs of work although adapted to their particular situations and problems.

Spiritual Darkness

There is much here to remind us that many of these people still dwell in that spiritual darkness which Christ the Light of the World came to dispel. We hear of immorality and sorrow and broken homes and see children growing up without proper care and control. At times when night comes to Busby the distant, regular, unceasing, throbbing of the peyote drum tells us that the worshippers who use this cactus narcotic have gathered for a meeting. Or it may be the rythmical beat of the dance drums as the Indians dance far into the night in the smoky community hall. Whisky, or "whiteman's water," is a stumbling block to many.

The Gospel Can Change them

This sin and sorrow can only be relieved as these people become "new creatures" through the regenerating power of the Gospel of Christ. As we, who are on the field, make it our purpose to lead these people to new life in Christ; make it your purpose to support such work in prayer, for the task is too great for human resources to meet.

Religion--A Form or a Force

By I. J. Dick

Paul writes to Timothy that in the last days perilous times shall come. He gives a long list of vices that will characterize men. II Tim. 3:1-4. But in spite of all these vices they will keep a "form of religion, but will have nothing to do with it as a force." vs. 5 (Moffat)

Paul was looking forward, describing people and conditions in the future, and sad to say, even, also in church circles. Jewish history, Church history, and conditions as they exist in some places today, vindicate the above statement. In the name of religion people have been persecuted. Religious people crucified the Lord. Religious people killed Anabaptists and Mennonites, etc. Religious people still give way to the sins mentioned in verses 2 to 4. Religious movements, churches, and individuals have always been in danger of losing their power, having only an empty form left.

Much Form but Little Power

The Apostles were men of power. There was very little form with them. The Apostolic Church was likewise one of power and very little form. The Church of the Middle Ages, to the contrary, was a church with much form and very little power, though it possessed political and military power. There were expressive Church edifices, monasteries, bishoprics, highly paid clergymen and priesthoods. Spiritual power, in general was lacking. The most notable service this church rendered was the preservation of the Word of God.

Much Dead Material

The Church of the Reformation started with a man or a few men that made a thorough experience and were consecrated to God. Any religious movement can only get started with a man or a few men that have spiritual power. This will attract others that are anxious to make a similar experience and acquire spiritual power. There usually are good and high ideals in a new movement, and there is growth and power. That is briefly the way protestant denominations and even individual churches have originated. But isn't it true that sooner or later, sometimes as soon as the organizers were gone, the power was gone too? Then there was a form of Godliness left. Am I trying to say that every old denomination is spiritually dead? No, but there surely is much dead material everywhere.

There Still Is Hope

It is nevertheless true that any movement, church or individual, which still has God and Truth has the power of self renewal. Something continues that can be formed into life by the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is still active, and the Word of God is still alive. These two can still convince sinners of their lost condition and of the living Savior.

Needed: Form Full of Spirit

Some one may ask, do we need forms or form? To this I would answer, yes, it is important that we have good forms. It requires wires and fixtures to bring electric light into our homes, churches, and other places. But unless these wires are charged with current they are dead and useless. To use another illustration, we install pipes, faucets etc. to conduct water into our kitchens or wherever we want to use water. But unless there is water in the pipes and some pressure the system will also be useless.

Now, as to forms that can be of great spiritual blessings, we think of our church buildings, with all the necessary material equipment. All this is dead in itself, but if the Word of God is proclaimed under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, it will result in men and women that are a power for God. We are sometimes told that regular church goers are no better than people that seldom, if ever, go to church. Going to church can become a mere habit. If that's the case self examination is in order. There is hardly anything in the Church, or a part of a service or a whole service which could not become a dead form, at least to some that sit in the audience. Our prayers may become monotonous forms. Sermons may become lectures. Our singing, even if it is good, may be something for the ear only; the beauty only for the eye.

How to Acquire Force

When faith goes into action there will be power over self, pride, pleasure, unthankfulness and all the sins that are listed in verses 2 to 4. The question may still be with some, how do we acquire force? The following four points may be of help:

1. Through fellowship with those who have spiritual power and with Him who is the source of all power—God.

2. Through real divine dissatisfaction with our own weaknesses and a desire for strength. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."

3. By removing obstacles between you and God or between you and others, such as hate, envy, or other sins.

4. By standing on the promises of God. He says, seek and ye shall find. In prayer hand Him your worries and problems and don't take them back. Trust him for the present and for the future.

"Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might."

WITHOUT

A missionary in China has said, "A great without is written on heathenism. Men and women are without a Bible, without a Sunday, without prayer, without songs of praise. They have rulers without justice, without righteousness. They have homes without peace, marriage without sanctity. Their young men and and women are without ideals, the little children without purity, the mothers without wisdom or self-control. There is poverty without relief, sickness without skill or care, sorrow without sympathy, sin without a remedy, death without hope. All this is wrapped up in the words, without Christ."—Christian Digest

Co-Editor of "Mennonite Hymnary" Goes to Canada

Professor Hohmann to Teach Singing during the Two Months

Prof. Walter H. Hohmann

Upon the invitation of Canadian hurch leaders Professor Walter H. Iohmann, co-editor of the Mennonite Iymnary with Rev. Lester Hostetler, ias gone to Canada for a two-months tay. He and his son Rupert, who is n excellent violinist, left Newton on Iay 31.

Brother Hohmann stated that he did iot know the exact nature of the work hat he is to do, but very likely the arger part of his work will be the intructing of church choirs. The Canadan Mennonites like to sing. They are rying to develop good singing groups. o some of the leaders came to the onclusion that Professor Hohmann night be of great help to them.

The choirs which Professor Hohmann has trained t Bethel College, have won recognition from music overs and authorities throughout the country. People ike to hear them sing. Various churches have enoyed his services in the training of their choirs. The past few years he has not only directed the Bethel College A Cappella Choir, but also the Bethel College Church choir and the choir of the First Mennonite Church, Newton. Ignoring the violent gymnastics that some leaders utilize, Professor Hohmann takes his choirs through intensive, continued practice. His skill in directing and his knowledge of church music suited to our churches makes him a man who should be of great use to our Canadian churches this summer.

This Mennonite musician believes in unpretentious, simple living. He reads a great many thought-provoking books and has strong Christian convictions. A conscientious objector during the First World War, he is much interested in the C.O.'s of this war and has visited various C.P.S. camps. His youth was spent on a farm near Deer Creek, Oklahoma. The Hohmanns have three children, two girls and one boy.

'Mennonite Hymnary" Praised by Authority on Music

A few days ago Professor Walter H. Hohmann reeived a letter from H. Augustine Smith, who is Chairian of the Religious Music and Art Department in he College of Music, Boston University. Herewith ve give the greater part of this letter by H. Augusine Smith:

"Today I have been on a long excusion through the ook, and believe me, it has proved one of the most iemorable days in my fairly long life. I note these utstanding criteria:

1. Your editing is accurate and meticulous.

2. Your balance of material is an editor's triumph.

3. Your chorale section surpasses anything I have een, including Dr. Davidson's Harvard Hymnal and)r. Pfatteicher's Oxford American Hymnal, and both ditions of the Episcopal.

4. Your sources of hymn tunes and chorales is more aried, more immediately usable, more restrained in ltra and Bach harmonizations than I imagined posble. You have kept your feet on the ground but ou have not hesitated to search the earth over for aunch MUSIC, MUSIC, MUSIC.

5. Your first sources correct even some in Songs f Praise, enlarged.

6. Your editor of the Ritual has performed a noble ervice, brief units, varied, with litanies that grip piritual life and lift it.

7. The book is deleted to the limit, therefore it nerges moderate in size, complete in content and exture."

Dr. Smith also writes that he plans to use the chorale section of the book for collateral reading and playing in his classes next fall and winter. Dr. Smith is not the only one who appreciates our new hymnary.
